After the above notice appeared, and the gentleman who seemed so anxious to meet me in discussion had backed down, I gave the following notice in the "Dispatch," and two other daily papers; but thus far no response:

"IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.—There is not a false religion but has for its foundation the immortality of the soul; and so far as the professed Christian church have incorporated it into their system as an article of faith, it has led them into many hurtful errors, prominent among which is that of endless misery—a doctrine which not only dishonors God, but outrages all our instincts of justice which the Creator has implanted in the human mind.

I have long since been convinced that public discussions, when conducted in a courteous and christian manner, are productive of good, as it enlightens the ignorant and brings out a class that seldom attend public worship. Truth has nothing to fear from investigation; it will stand the test of any crucible, shining brighter when brought in contact with error.

The clerical gentleman who manifested so much zeal at the close of our meeting on last Lord's day evening, called this morning and informed me, as there was no definite arrangement entered into on the evening aforesaid, he had dismissed the subject from his mind, and declined to enter into a discussion of the question. I shall be happy to meet any minister of acknowledged reputation, and discuss this question with him, with the assurance that on my part the same shall be conducted in a courteous and christian manner.

Pittsburg, Feb. 10th. J. WENDELL."

TOUR WEST.

Left home Nov. 23d. Preached two evenings at Knowlsville, N. Y. Left Knowlsville for Buchanan, Mich., and stopped there two days, at the General Conference. Was much pleased with the meeting and the spirit that was manifested. There was none of that harsh, censorious spirit which I have too often witnessed among our people. I am glad we are learning to love each other, though we may not see every point alike. At B., they have a fine chapel, and a good church, and an office that does honor to the cause it represents.

Left Buchanan for Chicago, and stopped there over Sunday. Preached once. There is a good band in Chicago, looking for Jesus. They have a good place for worship. The cause is prospering wonderfully west. Next came to St. Joseph, Mo., and arrived safely at my brother's. The North Methodists were about to commence a protracted meeting; wanted me to help them. I did so, and had the best of attention. There is a glory in the gospel of the kingdom that the honest like, in a Methodist, Baptist, or any other chapel. They have North and South Methodists churches here; and most of the other churches are divided in the same way. A good place to preach the truth. We continued our meetings a few evenings; then the holidays came on, and they must have their Christmas tree; so I preached to the colored church, and gave them tracts, which they gladly received. How eager they are to learn. This people have long been trodden down, but their sweat, blood, tears, and prayers have reached the Most High, and he has delivered them. Some have said this people could not take care of themselves.

There is a man in St. Joseph that was sold just before the war for $350, who now gets $5 a day for mason work. They have built them a church, costing $6,000, this last summer, and paid every cent as fast as they built. Their minister was a slave before the war; stole his education from white people. He says he has received many floggings for being found with a book in his hand. Never went to school a day, but has got a fair education, and is a good preacher. Has raised up a large church. They would like to be by themselves, and I think God designed they should be. I do not believe in amalgamation.

Left St. Joseph for Cameron. Found Bro. Moses Chandler's son. He has been in the State nearly two years. Feels lonely, as he has not had any one to sympathize with him in his faith, though there was a sister living not more than a mile from him. But Bro. C. has not let his light shine in a public capacity; he is now determined to let it shine and enter the field anew, and preach the gospel of the kingdom. He called upon the Disciple minister, to see if he would let us have their house, which he did cheerfully, and gave way on his own appointment Sunday evening. I preached on the promise made to Abraham, showing he had not yet received the land. When I sat down, the minister arose and endorsed every word I had said, and invited me home with him and made me welcome. Tuesday night I preached to them again, on the judgment. Had the best of attention. Would have held a series of meetings; but my throat was so sore I had to stop.

There is a good field in Northwestern Missouri for preaching the truth. There is not the prejudice west there is east. The field is new; all the sects are weak. Missouri is a fine State, adapted to all kinds of fruit, especially grapes. The soil is rich and productive. Timber is plenty. Climate mild. Those seeking homes in the west will do well to go to Missouri. If any of our preaching brethren should go through on the Hannibal and St. Joseph Road, if they will stop at Cameron, call on Elder Encil, or Daniel Slocratt. At St. Joseph call on Alonzo Miles, or George Buel.

I hope the Lord will put it into the hearts of some of the western ministers to go to St. Joseph with a tent. It is a city of about 30,000 inhabitants. If a tent could go there next summer I think there would be a church raised up. The elements are just right for the Lord to work. May the Lord direct in this matter, and help us to do his will, is my prayer. My health is much better; the journey has done me good.

INFORMATION NEEDED.

BRO. GRANT:—I am requested to write and ask, through the Crisis, if some one can inform Bro. Seth Stone, of Camden, Maine, what is probably best for such a case as this: In Bro. Stone's family resides a little girl, seven years old. She had typhoid fever about two years ago; was treated by Allopathic physicians; took much medicine, and came near dying. About three months after the fever, the right knee began to swell; though it had been lame most of the time after the fever left. Physicians pronounce this white swelling. Sister Stone thinks it may not be. If any informed person can give any suggestions and instructions that may afford advantage, favor would be shown to a kind Bro. and Sr., and to a dependent child now in their care. JOEL S. RICHARDS.

— The most important truth cannot be too early learned, nor the journey that leads heavenward too soon begun. The enemy is awake while we slumber, and if we neglect to cultivate the good seed, his tares will cover all the surface.

— Faith is the blessed tree which produces the noble and divine fruits of wisdom, virtue, and true felicity. But it is of so fine and delicate a nature, that it will not grow and thrive in the barren soil of man's heart, without his incessant care and industry.

— When hearts are filled with holy affections, and home is happy, then do the young dwell in a charmed circle, which only the naturally depraved would seek to quit, and across which boundary temptations to error shine out but feebly.

— Nobody thinks in plain language, and hence comes half the error and misconduct in in the world. If we could but think in words how many a shadowy plausibility would fade to nothing—how many veiled iniquities take a repulsive shape.

— The joy of the christian floats not on the surface, but dwells deep in the hidden recesses of the heart. If christians do not rejoice, it is because they do not live up to their privileges.

— Every thing may be mimicked by hypocricy but humility and love united. The humblest stars twinkle most in the darkest night. The more rare humility and love united, the more radiant when they meet.

— The love of God in the christian heart, in its own nature, like light goes forth to enlighten, enliven, warm, and gladden the hearts of others. To seek to confine it within, is to lose it entirely.

— I could write down, says a pious man, twenty cases when I wished God had done otherwise than he did; but which I now see, had I had my own will, would have led to extensive mischief.

— The more we fear crosses, the more reason we have to think that we need them. We ought to judge of the violence of our diseases by the remedies which our spiritual Physician prescribes for us.

— It is much easier to think right without doing right, than to do right without thinking right. Just thoughts may, and often do fail of producing just deeds; but just deeds are sure to beget just thoughts.

— What the impulse of genius is to the great, the instinct of vocation is to the mediocre; in every man there is a magnet—in that thing which the man can do best there is a loadstone.

— Poverty is not always a matter of dollars and cents. A pocket full of money and an empty head are often the worst possessions a man can have. He is sure to illustrate the saying that all fools are not dead.

— It seems to me that the righteous awards made us by providence, even here, are sufficient to convince the veriest skeptic that there is a just hand holds the balance.

— Christ died because God was merciful; not to render him so, but to make a channel through which a stream of salvation might flow to guilty sinners.

— If people have a prejudice, it is best to flank, and not storm it. You will never lose any thing by tact, by gentleness, by kindness, patience and love.

— Weigh every step that you are about to take whenever passions become involved. How often do things assume a different aspect when they are fairly considered.

— He who expects to accomplish much, and puts forth no effort adequate to perform the task, must expect to be disappointed.

— Never insult the modest by ribaldry, the grave by levity, nor the pious by contempt of sacred things.

— Embracing the world is like embracing the snow which quickly melts.

— Never give your tongue full liberty; let it be always your servant, never your master.

— Without faith Scripture is as useless to us as the sun to the blind.

— Receive Christ into your heart, and he will receive you into his kingdom.

— No man can judge heaven right than he [illegible]

For the World's Crisis.

"WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?"

Jesus, our King by birth,
Didst thou not for us die?
Wast not thou once entombed in earth?
How camest thou on high?
Wast thou that sweet and charming babe,
That brilliant jewel found,
In Bethlehem's dusty manger laid,
That humble place and town?

Who is this child of light,
By heavenly hosts announced?
What means this glory shining bright,
Is Jesus Christ just found?
Hark! hear the festal praises ring,
Such strains were never heard,
God's heavenly choir comes down to sing,
Bright angels bringing word.

Good tidings all may see,
Salvation now is nigh,
The budding rose of Sharon's tree,
The day-spring from on high;
To God be glory, praise and might,
Let earth unite and sing;
Go, shepherds, see the wondrous sight,
And hail our coming King.

Take off that swaddling cloth,
And robe that babe in white;
There lies a treasure to be sought,
Brighter than a ray of light.
Did wise men seek for thee
With heads and hearts profound,
Bring treasures precious, rare and free,
All for the child they found?

Behold that star stands still,
Our eyes begin to weep;
O, is it now our Father's will
We should our Savior see?
Come in, there is that mother blest,
Behold the child we sought,
All hail! the precious babe caressed,
The world will now be taught.

Thou shalt not slay that child,
Thou wicked, selfish king;
He'll live in spite of all thy wiles,
And yet salvation bring.
Hear Simeon's inspired theme,
To whom the Spirit spake,
Thou shalt not die till Christ you've seen,—
O, shall I yet the Savior take?

That just man now is blest,
In faith has waited long;
O what a royal little guest,
All hail! our light and song.
Good Simeon saw and wished no more,
Could now depart in peace;
Salvation kept so long in store,
Comes now with olive leaf.

Will he grow up and thrive,
A pleasant, tender plant?
In spite of kings and wicked spies,
O God, do thou this grant.
He was a man of sorrows keen,
And stricken down with grief;
No beauty could in him be seen,
All around was unbelief.

Was Jesus scourged and bound,
And led to Pilate's bar,
With Roman soldiers mocking round,
To blot God's morning star?
This Jesus came to reign,
His saints began to sing,
'Twas there the rightful heir was slain,
Our Prophet, Priest, and King.

Those Jews, what cursed, selfish men,
Would not that he should reign;
The kingdom shall be given then
To men of righteous fame.
Was this that just and holy one,
Will he be mobbed and tried?
Can none be found who is more vile—
Must he be crucified?

Almighty God! behold his doom,
Look down and see him die;
There is no escort to the tomb,
But few to weep or sigh;
Could not the rock-bound tomb,
Sealed fast by human might,
Lock up our Lord in earth's cold womb,
And hold the key of life?

What means this trembling ground?
The earth begins to quake,
God's angels have to earth come down,
With power the key to take,
Stand back, ye powers of hell,
The stone is rolled away;
The conqueror leaves the gloomy cell,
And gilds the shadowy way.

Come, Mary, to the tomb,
The Sabbath morn begins to gleam,
The man is born from nature's womb,
You'll need no sweet perfume.
Make haste, and to the saints declare
The wonders God hath done,
In Galilee he'll meet you there,
You'll see God's living Son.

His sufferings now are o'er,
His school on earth begins,
Give way, ye everlasting doors,
The King of glory comes.
Our great High Priest, immortal King,
Has gone within the vail,
O how the heavenly arches ring,
His foes may well turn pale.

O death, what can'st thou tell?
O grave, thou need'st not boast,
He's got the keys of death and hell,
He's conqueror now of both.
Ye angels, clad in garments white,
Hast thou a word to say?
Our hearts are sad, we are bereft,
We hoped he'd with us stay.

As he ascended far away,
Thus mounting up the skies,
Baptized in silver cloud and spray,
He'll come again, but ne'er to die.
Remember what he said—
I cannot with you stay,
The comforter will never come
Unless I go away.

At Salem tarry, do not fail,
You'll hear the rushing sound,
The gospel ship will then set sail,
And circuit earth around.
This ship is now at dock,
Recruiting volunteers,
O, shall she perish with dry rot?
Push off, and have no fears.

Who'll volunteer and man this ship?
Christ will your captain be;
Take neither gold, nor purse, nor scrip,
Go work, and you'll be free.
O shout, ye fearful saints,
There's glorious news for you,
Give to the winds your sad complaints,
Be faithful, just, and true.

The righteous now may hope in death,
And glory in the cross;
Since Christ has risen as he saith,
No saint can suffer loss.
O sing, with loud hosannas do,
He'll soon in glory come,
He'll make us all immortal too,
And say to us well done.

O sinner, hear his voice,
Christ calls in love for you;
The time is short, make known your choice,
The number saved are few.
Backslider, now return and come,
Haste into the fold;
He loves his sheep, though 'tis but one,
Far more than shining gold.

The harvest now is rank and ripe,
The wheat are shedding tears;
The tares, oh! what an awful sight,
And yet they have no fears.
Great God! is now the reaping near?
Thus closing are his days,
O will they still with scoffs and jeers
Rush on in wicked ways?

O holy Father, just and true,
Behold our cities fair,
Are not there ten, or just a few,
Who may thy glory share?
Will not the Judge of earth do right,
And ne'er this cup pass by,
While Canaan's land is just in sight,
And let the wicked die?

Jesus, our king by birth,
We lost thee for awhile,
But faith goes bounding up from earth,
He'll come in regal style;
Lift up your heads, ye little flock,
The struggle's almost o'er,
The signs appear on time's old clock,
Jesus is at the door.

Hear Enoch hush our sad complaints,
In prophetic light so clear,—
He'll come with thousands of his saints,
To judge those mockers here.
Balaam—hear his plaintive cry—
I'll see him, but not now,
I shall behold him, but not nigh,
I'll wait and keep my vow.

Peter denied him thrice,
Rebuked by just a cock;
What think ye now of Jesus Christ?
He knows the time, he set the clock.
But Paul was bold while mockers gazed
The gospel hope did cherish;
But lo! if Christ was never raised,
Then all the saints are perished.

What! give it up, and now stand still?
It's written I'm an heir,
The Lord will soon declare his will,
Hold on, we'll soon be there.
O Lord, thou hast a weeping bride,
She's watched and no mistake,
She waits to walk by thy blest side,
In through those pearly gates.

The nuptial hour, O, is it near?
The bride is robed in white,
Come quickly, Jesus, come this year,
Come robed in glory bright.
Our Eden home, so green and fair,
Its lovely shady bowers,
Its rosy dells, its balmy air,
Its mellow lawns, its golden towers;

O, city bright, all full of light,
The Lord our King is there,
The saints in white, with great delight
Will then his glory share.
Those mansions fair he did prepare
For all his guests to meet;
The saints will share those treasures rare,
And walk those golden streets.

Jerusalem, O sacred name of loud acclaim,
Thine echoes sweet they seem,
Her ancient fame is still the same,
Her pearly portals, how they gleam.
O can you count from Pisgah's mount
All Salem's golden spires?
Beyond the tide on Jordan's side,
The city and the kingdom's ours.

The morning breaks, and old earth quakes,
Our nightly tear-drops tremble,
My mortal lyre begins to tire,
Thy scattered saints thou wilt assemble.
O God of wonder, with voice of thunder,
Shake, shake the earth and heaven,
Old earth is hoary, faithless, gory,
O sound the trump and end the seven.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—PAUL.

DYSPEPSIA.

The benefits that dyspeptics derive from eating only two meals a day are: First, they secure a more perfect digestion of the food taken, and hence get a better quality of the blood. Second, they are not so liable to overeat—many patients find it much easier to abstain entirely from food for a time than to stop when they know they have eaten all they ought. This is especially true with those that have morbid appetites. Third, it gives the stomach a better opportunity to rest. With most dyspeptics digestion goes on slowly, and often one meal is not fully digested before the next is forced upon it. The stomach is a muscular organ, and the digestion of food is greatly aided by muscular action; but if the muscles are kept constantly at work, as they will be so long as there is food in the stomach to be digested, they soon become so exhausted as to be of but little if any assistance. Every muscle of the body requires time for rest as well as work, and it gains force and strength during the periods of rest. For many patients two meals a day will secure this much more perfectly than three.

There are some for whom for the same reasons one meal a day is still better than two. I am fully of the opinion that the majority of the people in this country eat much more food than they really need. They eat more to gratify a perverted appetite than to satisfy the actual wants of the system. The appetites of many are perverted from childhood up. Children are fed on pastries, sweetmeats, candies, spices, and rich food, till they have no relish for a plain, nutritious diet; the result is, that by the time they arrive at adult age (if they live so long,) they are dwarfed in size, their teeth are decayed, their beauty faded, their hair gray, their health gone, and they barely live, without enjoying life or knowing much of its real pleasures. All old people in this and every country have been uncommonly small eaters. Thomas Parr of Shropshire, who lived to the age of one hundred and fifty-two years and nine months was a poor farmer, and obliged to maintain himself by his daily labor, living on plain farmer's fare all his life. In his one hundred and fifty-second year, the king of England, desirous of seeing so great a rarity, induced him to go to London. While there he was feasted from the royal table and his mode of living so totally changed that he died nine months after.

Henry Jenkins of Yorkshire, England, lived to the great age of one hundred and sixty-nine years. He was a poor fisherman, living simply all his life, and at the age of one hundred could swim across the Thames.

Louis Cornaro, an Italian, was broken down in health at forty, and was informed by his physicians that he could not live more than two or three months; yet, by adopting a simple diet of less than two pounds of solid and liquid food per day, prolonged his life and enjoyed good health to over one hundred and twenty years.

The early christians were exceedingly simple in all their habits of eating and drinking, often going one or two days without food.

You may lay it down as a rule, to which the exceptions are few, that those persons who eat fast and in large quantities, live fast and die soon; they are universally short lived, and generally die suddenly of acute diseases.

Hot-house plants are all short lived. Those plants, trees, and animals that take their nutriment slowly, and grow slowly, live the longest, and vice versa. I have had several patients whom I have advised, for a short time to take but one meal a day, and the result has almost without exception been good. This one good meal was more perfectly digested, made better blood, and the blood made was better oxygenated by the lungs, and better assimilated by the tissue than it would have been if more food had been eaten. This plan was pursued for a short time only, till the system was brought into a better condition.

Acidity of the stomach, heartburn, flatulence, and many other unpleasant symptoms will soon disappear on this plan. Several goblets of soft water may be drank during the day, but none should be used during or just after the meal. The amount and kind of food used must depend upon the phase of dyspepsia the patient is troubled with, but many are able to eat and digest varieties of food when they eat once a day, that they could not by eating three times.

During the last ten years, for more than half of the time I have eaten only once a day, and I can work as hard, do as much, and feel as well as when I eat oftener. There are but but few, however, for whom I would advise this plan.—Herald of Health.

DIGNITY AND PLEASURE.

Cooking is a dignified act. Indeed it involves more or less of science, which every woman ought to understand on its own account. The practical cook is a physiologist, and ought to understand the laws of health—ought to know enough to avoid the villainous compounds which destroy the tone and coats of the stomach and fearfully shorten the aggregate of human life. The cook is a moral philosopher, or ought to be, having strict regard to the laws of economy, and of honesty and philanthropy, otherwise there is no security against the injuries which proceed from the stimulation of a morbid appetite on the one hand, and all abuse of a healthy appetite on the other.

How, then, we ask, can an employment be undignified which requires so much intelligence—so much sound discretion? What can be more becoming than the usefulness of such exertions? A thorough, skillful, practical housekeeper is a benefactor. She confers happiness upon her servants, imparts sound wisdom to her daughters, and gives salutary lessons to a profligate age. This is a style of dignity which can not fail to receive the commendation of the purest and noblest minds.

We insist, moreover, that there is a world of pleasure for the young lady in the kitchen. What interest in knowing how to do some of the most difficult and really indispensable things that are ever done! What intense satisfaction in being able to do what so many know nothing about, and in being allowed to think, if you may not say, as a fine dish comes on to the table and receives the compliments of father, mother, or guest, "I made it!"

A higher estimate of the kitchen and of every kind of useful labor must be reached in community, or the civilization of our age will be the demoralization of all classes; and we call upon our fair readers to join heartily in the reform, to place themselves practically, as they are in responsibility, at the head of their household affairs. Let them be determined that they will know more than their servants, who toil merely under the force of an imperative necessity, and take a livelier interest than any other person in what constitutes, more constantly and really than any other department of mental and physical industry, the essential comfort of home.—Health Reformer.

DAMP IN HOUSES.

From various causes there is often accumulation of dampness in houses, and especially in sleeping apartments, which prove very deleterious to health. I recollect one season, in a certain locality, that the month of July was very wet, and dampness so accumulated in closets that many found clothing mildewed, and even every article hanging in large and pretty-well ventilated rooms were thus affected. The result was, that this community, a few weeks later, was visited by a terrible dysentery, which carried many, especially children, to the grave.

When clothing or carpets, or any fabrics, are allowed to remain damp for any considerable time, the emanations from them poison the air, and this poison is taken into the system, and accumulates there till it results in some epidemic or epidemic disease, and every year carries its thousands to the grave.

Now, for this liability to disease there is a remedy; and that is, to cause every article in which moisture is liable to accumulate, to be thoroughly dried. Let clothing be often exposed to the heat of the sun, and if this is not practicable on account of long continued rains, let it be hung by the fire until thoroughly dried. This should be done often. A damp carpet, especially in a sleeping room, is very unhealthy. Straw under the carpets of bedrooms is a cause of much disease. Damp cellars, or damp earth under the floor of back rooms, or any accumulations of dampness in or about any part of a dwelling, are contrary to the laws of hygiene, and are destructive to health.—Health Reformer.

SLEEP.

We have heard one of the greatest theological minds of the century advise that time should not be wasted; that students should carry some book in the pocket which they could take out and read, when waiting at an appointment or for sitting down to a dinner, while others were collecting; that even if but half a dozen lines were read, it was that much time saved. He believed in his theory, put it in practice, died early and demented! The brain must have rest; sleep is the best rest.

Let parents who do not want their children to die of water on the brain, allow them to have the fullest amount of undisturbed sleep they possibly can take, especially while at school.

The more sick people can sleep, the sooner they will get well Sleeping in the daytime, if before noon, enables them to sleep better the following night. Students, women, and nervous persons need all the sleep they can get, and so do the melancholy and those who are in trouble. Early rising is not condemned, it is heartily commended. But if not preceded by an early retiring, it is a crime against the body.—Dr. Hall.

CARE OF THE EYES.

Looking into the fire is very injurious to the eyes, particularly a coal fire. The stimulus of light and heat united soon destroys the eyes. Looking at molten iron will soon destroy the sight. Reading in twilight is injurious to the eyes, as they are obliged to make great exertion. Reading or sewing with a side light injures the eyes, as both eyes should be exposed to an equal degree of light. The reason is, the sympathy between the eyes is so great, that if the pupil of one is dilated by being kept partially in the shade, the one that is most exposed cannot contract itself sufficiently for protection, and will ultimately be injured. Those who wish to preserve their sight should preserve their general health by correct habits, and give their eyes just work enough, with a due degree of light.

FOR DIARRHEA.

Parch a half pint of rice until it is perfectly brown. Boil it down as is usually done, and eat it slowly, and it will check, if not entirely stop the most violent diarrhea in a few hours. Ordinarily a little brandy, say half a wine glass full, with loaf sugar dissolved in it, will have the same effect. However, it is better in all cases to avoid alcohol as a medicine if other antidotes can be had. In the more obstinate cases, where brandy is used, its efficacy is increased by stirring it with a red hot iron.

NURSING BETTER THAN MEDICINE.—Those who have read of the prescriptions with which, two hundred years ago, physicians dosed their unfortunate patients, or who remember the country doctor of the "old school" and his saddle-bags, a traveling apothecary shop, will see some change in the fact that now the best and most scientific physicians admit that careful nursing is better than medicine. One of the oldest, ablest, and healthiest physicians in Boston abstains wholly from medicine.

RELATION OF BEARDS AND EYES.—There is an intimate connection between the nerves and muscles of the face and eyes, and allowing the beard to grow strengthens the eyes. It is said that surgeons in the French army have proved by experiments in Africa, that soldiers wearing their beards are much less liable to disease of the eye, and it is generally conceded that if the custom is to wear the beard, the eye retains its lustre and brilliancy much longer.

LIFE PILLS.—Parr, who died at the advanced age of one hundred and fifty-two, gave this advice to his friends: "Keep your head cool by temperance, your feet warm by exercise, rise early, and go early to bed, and if you are inclined to grow fat, keep your eyes open and your mouth shut. Are not these excellent life-pills?

COLD SORES.—"What will cure 'fever blisters,' commonly called cold sores?" Keep the skin clean and healthy, and restrict the diet, and "cold sores" will soon disappear.

COOKING POTATOES.—"What is the best and healthiest mode of cooking potatoes?" Baking is the best, and steaming the next.

— The three great essentials to health are: keep the feet always dry and warm; have a regular action of the bowels every day; and cool off slowly after all forms of exercise.

EARTHLY JOYS.

The measured cup of earthly joy,
That has been meted out to me,
Was mingled with much keen alloy,
Soonest to fly were those most dear.

I learned the lesson early taught,
That joy was evanescent here;
At home, abroad, where'er I sought,
Alas! the flowers and leaves turned sear.

If e'er I reached one earthly bliss,
'T was like a light'ning flash, so brief—
I turned away—how can I miss
Joys fading quickly as the leaf?

I would not ask earth's joys to stay,
My future good I cannot see;
My father gives and takes away
What is the very best for me.

And he has taught me where to look
For joys that never, never die;
And daily teachings from his book,
Point to the changeless world so nigh.

On the firm rock of faith and hope,
Oh! Father, may I ever stand;
And when eternal gates shall ope,
Give me a place at thy right hand.

CHRIST'S TRANSFIGURATION.

Matt. 17: 1-9.

This circumstance is often cited in proof of the immortality of the soul. The argument is about as follows:

In the transfiguration, Moses and Elias appeared talking with Christ. Moses had been dead fifteen hundred years, and, as he could not have been there bodily, he must have been there in spirit. Therefore the spirit is immortal, and exists in a state of unconsciousness between death and the resurrection.

I propose to examine this subject somewhat critically. Will the argument drawn from this passage in favor of the immortality of the soul stand the test of criticism? Is it in harmony with facts brought to light in other Scripture declarations? We shall see.

Jesus uttered the following language:—"There be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom." Matt. 16: 28. This promise refers to a scene which must have occurred, in some sense, during the lives of the disciples. Some of them were to behold Christ coming in his kingdom before death. This could take place in but two ways—in reality, or in vision. Did it occur then in reality, or in vision?

It could not have transpired in reality, for Christ's coming in his kingdom brings the judgment. "Who [Christ] shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom."—2 Tim. 4: 1. When Christ appears the judgment commences. Hence Christ did not appear in his kingdom in reality during the lives of his disciples, for the judgment did not then take place. Consequently he must have appeared in vision. This position is abundantly sustained by the Scriptures.

After recording Christ's declaration that some should not taste death till they had seen the Son of man coming in his kingdom, the record continues: "And after six days, Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him. Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias. While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them; and, behold, a voice out of the cloud which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him. And when the disciples heard it, they fell on their faces and were sore afraid. And Jesus came and touched them, and said, Arise, and be not afraid. And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only. And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them saying, Tell the VISION to no man, until the Son of man be risen from the dead."—Matt. 17: 1-9.

This testimony forever settles the fact that the disciples beheld a vision while with Christ upon the mount. What appeared in this vision? Let Peter answer: "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his Majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him IN THE HOLY MOUNT."—2 Pet. 1: 16-18.

Peter here affirms that he had not followed cunningly devised fables, in making known the power and coming of Christ, for they were eye-witnesses of his Majesty, when they were with him on the holy mount. Hence the vision represented Christ coming in his kingdom.

We are told, however, by a certain class of theologians, that the primary definition of vision is to see; and that as Moses appeared with Elias, he was actually there in a disembodied state. The Greek word horama, here translated "vision," is found in the New Testament twelve times. It is once translated "sight," and eleven times "vision." Greenfield defines it thus: "A thing seen, sight, appearance; a supernatural appearance, vision."

In order that the reader may understand fully the New Testament usage of horama, I give every instance in which it occurs, quoting from the Englishman's Greek Concordance. Matt. 17: 9, Tell the vision to no man. Acts 7: 31, He wondered at the sight; 9: 10, To him said the Lord in a vision; 12, And hath seen in a vision a man; 10: 3, He saw in a vision evidently; 17, What this vision which he had; 19, While Peter thought on the vision; 11: 5, And in a trance I saw a vision; 12: 9, But thought he saw a vision; 16: 9, A vision appeared to Paul in the night; 10, And after he had seen the vision; 18: 9, To Paul in the night by a vision. Any one can see that according to New Testament usage, the Greek word horama signifies "vision," and that it is properly translated in Matt. 17: 9.

Webster's fourth definition of vision is as follows: "In Scripture, a revelation from God." Hence, whatever was seen in the transfiguration upon the mount, was seen in a revelation from God.

We are now prepared to examine what the other Evangelists have recorded in reference to the same scene.

"And as they came down from the mountain, he charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of man were risen from the dead."—Mark 9: 9. Here it is affirmed that something was seen. What was it? "And, behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias, who appeared in glory." Luke 9: 30, 31. Mark the force of the language. It was not one man and a ghost, or a spirit; but two men that appeared. Mark affirms that these things were seen, and Matthew teaches that they were seen in a vision.

Moses and Elias, according to Luke's testimony," appeared "in glory"; and it is certain that the righteous will not receive glorified bodies this side the resurrection. Hence the vision refers to a time when Moses will appear in his glorified body.

Will not Moses appear in his glorified state when the Son of man comes in his kingdom? Most assuredly. Hence, inasmuch as the vision represents Christ's coming in his kingdom, according to Peter's testimony, I conclude that it represents Moses in his glorified state beyond the resurrection.

The object of the vision seems to have been twofold.

I. To show the disciples that Christ must suffer and die. See Luke 9: 31.

II. To show them the glories of the second advent. See 2 Peter 1: 16-18.

At the second advent, Jesus will appear in his kingdom, as he was seen in vision on the mount. Moses and Elias will appear in the kingdom also, as they appeared in the vision.

As seen upon the mount, Moses appeared as the representative of the righteous dead in the resurrection; and Elias appeared as the representative of the righteous living who will be changed at the coming of the Lord.

The passage does not teach the immortality of the soul in the modern acceptation of the term.

DIVISION.

A SNARE OF SATAN.

Our common enemy, the devil, leaves no stone unturned to effect the final destruction of mankind and the church, and one of his most dangerous artifices is division among the professed children of God, and especially among members of the same church or order. Some little difference of opinion may exist (and perhaps honestly too), and both parties adhere tenaciously to their own view of the matter, and begin to withold christian sympathy from each other and to look at the faults and failings of their brethren and sisters, instead of looking into their own hearts to see if all is right there; thus suffering the rank and poisonous weeds of distrust and jealousy to grow unchecked, producing discord and disunion to the almost entire extermination of christian love.

A band of God's children divided, distracted! What a sad picture. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. "If ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another," says an inspired apostle.

What difference does it make in organizing ourselves in churches for the worship of the living God, whether we say (in our covenant) "We the undersigned" or "We believers in the second coming of Christ"? A mere form of words at best. Let it not become a bone of contention to the distraction of the flock; and let us ever remember that contention and division ruin our influence for good over our unconverted friends, and instead of saying "Behold how these christians love one another," it is "Behold how they hate each other."

"My brethren, these things ought not so to be." We profess to believe that Jesus is soon coming to set up his everlasting kingdom on earth, and now let us be consistent. Let us act as if we believed that he is indeed coming, and that we meant so to live that we should be prepared to live in that glorious kingdom. But let us remember that all things that offend will be gathered out of that kingdom and be cast into a furnace of fire. Matt. 13: 41, 42.

Let us see to it then, that we individually take heed to the advice of Paul, and with our meat destroy not our brother, for whom Christ died.—1 Cor. 8: 13. We should labor for the good of the flock and not to please ourselves.

Let us bridle our tongues, for, says James, "The tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; so is the tongue among the members, that it defileth the whole body and setteth on fire the course of nature, and it is set on fire of hell." Jam. 3: 5. Let us get on James' bridle, that we offend not in word or deed, but live and labor in love until Jesus comes.

For the World's Crisis.

"RINGSTREAKED, SPECKLED, AND GRISLED."

Such constituted Jacob's hire, and Jacob was a supplanter. He supplanted Esau in the birthright, and in the blessing. He supplanted Laban in his daughters, in his herds, and in his gods; and was a prototype of the Savior, who will ultimately supplant Satan in all his works, and spoil the strong man's house, and the master with it.

In No. 5 of the preceding series, we have shown that "the beast and the false prophet" of Rev. 19: 20, were one and the same as "the goats" of Matt. 25: 33; but it still remains to be shown that there is beside these antichristian powers, having lamb-like horns, a class of individuals who will also have a place on the left, and go with them into the "lake of fire." These are ungodly professors of religion, holding the truth in unrighteousness, against whom God has revealed his wrath; individuals who were once enlightened, tasted of the heavenly gift, made partakers of the Holy Spirit, tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the coming age, and have fallen away, bearing thorns and briers, rejected, near to cursing, whose end is to be burned; for "every branch in me (Christ) that beareth not fruit, he taketh away. If a man abide not in me (Christ) he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and they are burned." "Thou wilt say then, The branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in. Well, because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith; be not high-minded but fear. For if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee." Rom. 1: 18; Heb. 6: 4, 5; John 15: 2; Rom. 11: 19-21. "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." "For we [the church, members of Christ's body] must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether good or bad." "Judgment must begin at [from] the house [church—1 Tim. 3: 15] of God; and if it first begin at [from] us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous person scarcely is safe, where will the impious and the sinner appear?" (Emp. Diag.) Matt. 3: 12; 2 Cor. 5: 10; 1 Pet. 4: 17, 18.

The idea that because a person has once experienced religion, been converted, been a subject of God's grace; therefore he must of necessity always continue in grace, is a most dangerous precept. While it is undeniably true that God's covenant is an everlasting covenant, and can never be set aside; it is also true that his covenant is one for LIFE, or for DEATH; hence, it is not enough that an individual believer repents, is converted, and is baptized; but he must also endure unto the end. As he receives Christ, so he must walk in him. The christian covenants on his part to walk in obedience to the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus; and God the Father covenants on his part, if we so walk, by his assisting grace, to give us eternal life through his Son, by whom, as Mediator, we have been enabled to enter into this covenant of grace: and then, after having come into covenant relation to God, if we sin, by being overcome by temptation, in such case we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; who will plead the blood of the covenant in our behalf, because we have become parties to it. But if we deny him, he will also deny us; if we are not faithful on our part, he will be on his; he can not deny himself; and if we count that covenant-blood, wherewith we were sanctified, an unclean thing, then by our abjuring Christ, we also bear about in our body the marks of our Lord's death, and must of necessity also suffer death as absolutely as did the victim by whose death the covenant was confirmed. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." That class on "the left" show by their talk that they were nominal christians: had been taken in the gospel net; had known their Master's will and did it not; they had claimed to minister unto Christ; they had been in close proximity to the wheat; not only grown in the same field together, but were now found in the same floor with it, just as the tares always grow, just as the chaff is always found; and now they must "go away," must be "cast away," burned in "bundles," "burned up" "in unquenchable fire." These are they of Dan. 12: 2, the "some" that "awake to shame and everlasting contempt," rising with those who shine as the brightness of the firmament, and those who shine as the stars for ever and ever. These are they who have a name to live and are dead; these are they who "are spots" in our feasts of love, when they feast with us, "feeding themselves without fear; clouds without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever"; dead flies, that send forth an unsavory odor, with whom the last end is worse than the beginning. Coming up with the church, because they had His name on them, who received the word of life, and have not kept it.

Olena, O. G. W. Stinson.

For the World's Crisis.

SUNDAY! SUNDAY!! SUNDAY!!!

Bro. Grant:—I rejoice that you, and a few others of the Crisis, and Bro. Himes, and some others of the Voice, are inclined to call the first-day of the week by its proper name—Sabbath. How surprising it is that intelligent men, when speaking of the "rest-day," which we all agree in as being the proper portion of time for men to rest from labor, and devote the day to the service and worship of God, should continue to call it by the old heathen name—Sunday.

If men believe in a day of "rest" from worldly labor, why use a term that has no meaning in it to express the thing we do? The word Sunday has nothing in its primary meaning but heathenism. But we all know that the only meaning of the word Sabbath is "rest." (See Webster.) Now those who believe it is right to "rest" from worldly labor on the first-day, why not call the day by a name which has the proper signification to it, and not call it by the old heathen name Sunday? But if men wish to encourage Sunday theatres, Sunday beer-gardens, German holidays, lager beer saloons, infidels, and Sabbath breakers of every description, then let them continue to call the Lord's Sabbath, or rest-day, by the old heathen name Sunday. But wise men, who believe that we should "rest" from worldly labor one day in seven, even if they cannot endorse the idea that it is "sacred time," yet let them call the day by a name which has some meaning in it; a name which will express the true idea intended by such rest, which is Sabbath, and not by the heathen name Sunday.

Let us remember that the word Sabbath means rest, and nothing more. Then why not call the rest-day by its proper name Sabbath, and not by the im-proper name Sunday? Why is it that men who are such close students of the Bible on many other points, are so indifferent to the all important subject of the Lord's Sabbath in these days of evil? I am in continual anguish of spirit at the thought of such heedlessness and indifference upon the great and important question of the Lord's Sabbath. How happy we should be if from the heart we could all adopt the sacred truth brought out in the following lines:

"Day ever bless'd,
Thy light, thy rest,
I hail with glad emotion;
Ordained for man,
When time began,
For solace and devotion.

'Day more endeared
Since Christ appeared,
The life and resurrection—
That morning's rays
Shed o'er these days
His glory's bright reflection.

"Day ever bless'd!
Type of the rest
That for the saints remaineth;
Happy is he
Who joys in thee,
And ne'er thy joys profaneth."

Lynn, Mass. T. M. Preble.

"OUR REJOICING."

It is impossible to express the joy and consolation we experience from the many testimonies we are continually receiving of the happiness multitudes find by their deliverance from the bondage in which they have been held all their life long by the soul-chilling doctrine of inherent immortality and its necessary connections. We know, by the experience of many years, the horror and distress of a belief in those doctrines, and the utter impossibility of a solid and abiding peace, to a reflective mind, who lives in the belief that his God, foreseeing the consequences to untold millions of sentient beings, of his own creation, if made inherently immortal, should, nevertheless, so constitute them that eternal torture would be their portion; whose sorrows and agonies, unmitigated and hopeless, were to run on in an endless course; and that no agonies, no pleadings or prayers were ever to avail in their behalf. Such a representation of God, in his creative and governmental work, makes it an utter impossibility for a mind not made callous by a creed, or given over to a secret disbelief of the doctrine, to see God as he is, and to love him as all ought to love him, who has so loved us as to give his only begotten Son to shame, suffering and death, "that we might live through him."

To be delivered from the bondage of the doctrine of inherent immortality, and to know that a future life is only for those who are in Christ, or who receive that life as a free gift of God, and that all who do receive it are eternally holy and happy, is truly "glad tidings of great joy," designed for "all people," but which has been stolen from us by the traditions of men.

We look back to that period, thirty years since, when the providence of God brought our mind to the consideration of the subject of inherent immortality and its awful consequences, to which all the human race were liable. It was twenty-five years after we first found peace in believing in Jesus, and fifteen years after we began our work of preaching. During all those years, even in our happiest hours, the thought of the horrors of those who had died out of Christ, or the exposedness of living friends to such tortures in the world to come, was a gnawing worm that gave us no rest, except by banishing it from the mind; and this could only be done at short intervals. At length, in 1837, the thought, for the first time in our life, was suggested to our mind that possibly immortality depended on character, and to be bestowed as a gift of God on the righteous alone.

That thought was cherished, and led us to an examination of the Bible without regard to human creeds or human opinions. Three years of research, carefully noting all the expressions in the Bible on human destiny, brought us at length, in 1840, to the firm and undoubting position that immortality was not inherent in man; and that the final destiny of sinners was, to cease from all life and being. That conviction brought peace to our mind such as we had never felt before, and we "rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory." From that day to this hour we have never had a doubt on that question, nor seen an argument that had a feather's weight on our mind against the truth that immortality is a gift of God as the reward of obedience to his will; and that it is totally withheld from all incorrigible sinners; and that utter extinction of being is their punishment for sin.—Herald of Life.

For the World's Crisis.

OUR SLEEPING ONES.

"There is no flock, however well attended,
But one dead lamb is there;
There is no household band, howe'er defended,
But has one vacant chair."

"Sorrow for the dead is the only sorrow from which we refuse to be divorced."

We are not so tender on any other mournful subject as that relating to our own dear sleeping ones; those who have

"Laid them down in their last sleep";

those who once walked by our side, whose every look and feature is photographed on our minds; whose well-remembered tones are still echoing in our hearts, and whose smile of welcome beamed upon us when we met them, or glowed like the sunlight over each feature when we were in their presence; whose sweet, tender words of affection bound our hearts to theirs more closely; those who, after all these sweet associations and dear, tender relationships, have left us, have sealed up their lips in silence, have closed their eyes upon us, and silently composed themselves to a dreamless repose;

"'Have left an aching void' naught else 'can ever fill.'"

"We have closed the blinds around them,
And locked them up alone;
That nothing might disturb them
Till their best friend shall come"; and now have no association with them, except to recall the past; and how vividly it comes back to us! Time's wheels seem to turn back, and we again visit the places with them where once we mingled together; we see them and associate with them once more, and find ourselves still

"Listening for the words
They never more can speak."

Things said and done by them which we would have thought forgotten; events of "long ago," over which time had thrown the misty veil of forgetfulness, are recalled, and come trooping back, and bring with them some pleasant association—pleasant at the time it transpired, but now, alas! to be mingled with the bitter, and mingling cause a sad satisfaction. Sometimes, we would almost gladly shut out all this past, it is so painful with its present relationships to our bereavement; and yet we would not forget for worlds the loved and the lost, although we can only now recall the treasured past, and carefully opening its vista portals, gaze tearfully, silently upon the scenes and associations which are never to be repeated while time lasts.

There was the child, the dear one, whose "little grave" is a precious spot, in which the heart is buried with the treasure. There is now only the privilege of making a pilgrimage there, and watering with tears the flowers planted, or of gazing on some precious memento; some "sunny tress" you cut from that little cold "marble brow; some picture of the little one which you have kept and treasured, or of looking into the future and anticipating the time when the parents

"Shall fold it soon
In immortal arms."

Dear, sweet child! Jesus did say, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven"; and that shall soothe and comfort the heart in its grief.

It may be that the companion of this earthly pilgrimage has traveled as far as the weary feet could go, and then laid down to rest,—gone from the side of the lone one left behind, to and now the strong love-chords are riven, and the heart is "lone and sad," because that once companion, now bereaved, must "walk alone." They have "taken sweet counsel together," have consulted with and assisted each other; but the dear one who leaned on the strong arm has gone, and the companion left alone, and the only earthly privilege left is to visit the resting-place and view the spot where the loved one is lying. But the cold, chilly thought comes home, "My dear one has now no words of affection for me, speaking not, and knowing not my sadness and loneliness. How my crushed heart trembles with the pain it feels, and aches with the smart. How fondly I cherish and regard that sleeper now; all is now by my dead, unknown, but I would not forget; I can not forget the ties that were so strong and tender to bind us together."

"Pillow that loved form

It may be a brother or a sister sleeps among the dead, whose life-stream flowed on until manhood and womanhood was just being realized, when the destroyer came and with one cold touch withered, blighted and froze the life out of that young heart, and "choking sighs," and crushed hopes, and lonely hours, and desolation, are the one portion left for the bereaved.

It may be parents sleep, father and mother, or but one of them has fallen,—enough, even then, to crown life with sorrow. Childhood's sunny hours are remembered, when parental care ever protected and provided for every want; when a father's strong arm and manly heart kept want from the door; and his joy in the society, and his pleasure in the prattle of his children, his efforts to entertain, please and instruct, were constant and untiring. A mother's love, too, for her dear ones, when sick and in trouble, is remembered; her solicitude, and her warm caress when she drew her darling child to her heart, and murmured words of deep affection, too full of soul-yearning for the full free tones to express it; when her life was "bound up" in its life, and its own in hers;—all this is remembered, although now it may be remembered fondly now; and the heart yearns but for the prospects of the future, for the return of those days, and cries with the poet—

"Like a dream of long ago";

"Backward turn, backward, oh! time, in your flight,
Make me a child again, just for to-night."

But childhood is gone, and now they are gone who nourished and cherished their children then, and have, mayhap, been spared since,—spared to counsel and assist, until age and disease have made them death's easy victims, and they sleep, and we weep, and active memory brings back those old scenes of long ago, and pangs of sorrow shoot like sharp arrows through the heart. They are gone. Their well-known voices are hushed, and father, is dead, and MOTHER IS DEAD, and there is no ancestor back of us to connect us with the generations of the past, and we feel a loneliness indescribable.

Well do we remember, when many miles from home laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, the sorrowful day when the dispatch came, and we read, "Father is dead; come home immediately." We hastened home to find the friends had but just returned from the grave. Then in a few years after another dispatch said, "Mother is dying"; and a long ride in a private conveyance, during Saturday night and the following Sunday, brought us to mother's bed-side. She had, in the midst of health, been stricken down with paralysis, and we despaired of her life; but she slowly recovered, to be an invalid. She was restored to us for a while longer, and for nine years we had the privilege of ministering to her wants, until disease again invaded her system, and now she sleeps. We have borne her away to the grave, and mourn her loss, while a thousand events of life in which she is associated come thronging back to us, and we see her, and hear her speak, and then the terrible fact comes to us, she is no more. Her grave is covered up, and the snow mantle is spread over it.

Blessed be the name of our God that there is a door of hope by the resurrection of Jesus from the dead; of hope that our loved ones who sleep in Jesus will soon, very soon awake to life and immortality, and be given back to us—themselves, literally and tangibly. O let us dry our tears, for those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him from the dead.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTER TO BRO. G. M.

The subject of the final destiny of the wicked, which we discussed a little when we last met, may seem to you of little consequence, whether it be corporeal, or mental, that is, remorse of conscience. But to me it is of vast importance, the veracity of God being involved in it.

You and I profess to take God's word as a light to our path, giving us clearly to understand what we may expect if we obey, or disobey him. But how can it be such to us, unless we receive it in its plain import, when no figures are used?

Your belief that there is no literal fire, but only mental suffering in the punishment of the wicked, utterly fails, as it seems to me, to find support from the word of God. Neither you, or any one else believing it, has as yet shown me the first text.

The word conscience occurs twenty-eight times in the Bible—all in the New Testament—but in no instance does it relate to a future state. Then why has this modern idea been advanced, and the old idea of fire ignored in the face of a multitude of Scriptures sustaining the latter?

Neither of us is obliged to accept the other's explanation of an unexplained parable, but are we not both under the highest obligation to receive that of an inspired writer? Can we treat the author of a parable with higher contempt than to disregard his own explanation of it? What else do we to our dear Savior, when we reject his explanation of the wheat and tares in Matt. 13?

If we are not to take explanations in their strict literal import, pray tell me what we may know for certainty. "As tares are burned in the fire, so shall the wicked be with a furnace of fire in the conscience"(?) Does it read so? Dare you make it read so? I know you dare not, yet your position virtually does it.

All the commentators in the land cannot explain away Christ's explanations of the figures of speech and parables of the Bible. His will stand.

Let us apply your theory to a few texts. Psalms. 37: 20. "The wicked shall perish—the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs . . . into smoke shall they consume away." With your theory the sinner must be compared to something susceptible of conscious feeling. Is the fat of lambs thus susceptible? Again, when the fat of lambs is consumed into smoke, there is not much left. Will remorse of conscience produce a consumption that will leave no more?

Mal. 4: 1. "The day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and the day cometh that shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Can language portray more utter destruction? This burning "as an oven" must be with you remorse of conscience. But what will it prey upon, soul, or body? Will it burn either till nothing is left, not even root or branch?

Mal. 4: 3. "The wicked shall be ashes under the soles of your feet." Not as ashes, but be ashes. Can you hang your theory on that? I do not see the sign of a hook for it.

Matt. 3: 12. "He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." With you this fire is remorse of conscience. What will it prey upon? The sinner, his soul, or his sins? If either of the first two, what will be left of them after being burned up? If the latter, will not the time come when the sinner will have atoned for his own sins and be free from them, so as not to need a Savior?

Rev. 21: 8. The wicked "shall have their part in the lake of fire which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." How you are to apply this to your theory I am puzzled to guess, as the sinner is to have his part in the lake, instead of the lake being in him. And how can you make the second death remorse of conscience? When did the first remorse of conscience begin? for that must begin and end before the second can begin.

But do you say in either or all these cases remorse preys on the sinner's happiness? Pray tell me when the sinner has in store such an amount of happiness as would supply remorse forever. For remorse must be a consuming agent if the comparisons are worth anything.

Jude. 7. "Even as Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities round about them are set forth for an example suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." 2 Pet. 2: 6. And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes . . . making them an example to those that after should live ungodly." Just what those cities suffered, those who have since lived ungodly will suffer. Dare you say the Sodomites suffered only remorse of conscience and are suffering it still? You virtually do say so, if you say that it is all that awaits the present sinner. To say they were not utterly destroyed by fire, it seems to me, borders (to say the least) on infidelity, as your uncle (now at rest) once said to me because I did not believe in eternal misery.

Matt. 25: 41. "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting [remorse of conscience?] fire prepared for the devil and his angels." The sinner has the same punishment as the devil and his angels. When, think you, will remorse seize upon them?

Such absurd pharaphrasing of God's word as substituting remorse of conscience for literal fire, is so trying to my patience as to make me feel indignant at it. If it be not a righteous indignation, God forgive it.

Again, why have any been obliged to abandon the literal word, where there are apparently no figures, and substitute such enigmas? Have you in your theology an immortal soul which fire cannot, but remorse can affect? Is that it? Or have you an everlasting misery which cannot be perpetuated in literal fire, which must of necessity consume the body, but cannot trouble the immortal soul?

If it is not this immortal-soul theory that has driven men to this miserable subterfuge, I don't know what it is. Let me tell you and your friends, if you do not know it, that the Bible gives no warrant for believing that man is immortal, but God only, and that men can only obtain immortality through patient continuance in well-doing. So that sinners can have nothing of the kind, nor the righteous till they put it on.

For God's sake and your own soul's sake, abandon such a God-dishonoring position. What I have written is not to combat you but a false theology, and though I have been earnest, I have been so in all kindness, sure that I am right in the matter and you are wrong. And I shall be sorry to have you come to the knowledge of it only at the judgment, as I am sure you will then, if not before.

Should you remain unconvinced when the truth lies between us, and we never discuss the subject again, then I appeal to the judgment, where I have no fears for the result.

Yours truly, Daniel D. Chaffee.

For the World's Crisis.

UNBELIEF.

"The sin which doth so easily beset us."—Heb. 12: 1.

Much has been said about the "besetting sin," and many are in doubt as to what it is. My object in writing this article is to give what light I have on the subject, hoping to benefit others, and show the simplicity of the Bible if we will only let it prove itself. Believing also that truth is better than error.

The apostle Paul commences this epistle thus: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners, spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son"; and then he shows their course so that we may profit by it. In the third chapter he tells of their sin, and why they did not enter into rest, and closes the chapter by saying, "So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief." And the fourth chapter comences with an exhortation,—"Let us, therefore, fear lest a promise being left us of entering into that rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For unto us was the gospel preached as well as unto them; but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it."

They entered not in "because of unbelief." This was their sin. The apostle then shows how the law is a "shadow of good things to come" (10: 1); and then speaking of Christ coming he says (39th verse), "Now the just shall live by faith." In the eleventh chapter he gives an account of those who had been justified by faith, commencing with Abel, telling of Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and many of the patriarchs and prophets, and when he gets through he says, "Wherefore, seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset." The translators put in "us," but it is not in the original, and you will notice that it is printed in Italics.

It is not "the sins"; but "the sin." One sin. It besets not us only but the whole human family. Not one separate, besetting sin for each one; but one besetting sin for all. And Christ would often say, "Oh, ye of little faith." Paul says, "Without faith it is impossible to please him" (God). Heb. 11: 6. Again, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin."—Rom. 14: 23. "Above all take the shield of faith."—Eph. 6: 16.

Dear reader, let us believe God. It is our duty. If you would have your faith increased read the Bible in which is the faith of those of old and God's dealings with them. Pray often, especially in secret. Exercise what faith you have, for "faith without works is dead." May you not fail to enter into that rest on account of the besetting sin of unbelief.

Your brother, waiting for the fulfillment of the promise, John Ridley.

MORE ROOM.

As we need more room in the Crisis for important articles, we hope those who report conferences will be short as possible; for it is seldom that they contain any thing of real interest to the most of our readers. We have many complaints about them. It is a matter of little consequence what the text was, so long as what was said about it is unknown. There are so many conferences held, if they are all reported, they will take much of the paper. Our readers are getting real tired of them. Instead of the resolutions, give the deeds. By this we mean we are always glad to receive short reports of any revival interest—of any positive good accomplished. The reading of them produces a good effect upon the church. But do not send reports of bad things; we can get plenty of them without publishing them in our paper. The effect is bad—chilling, and tends towards backsliding, when we hear of troubles among the professed friends of Jesus. Love conceals instead of publishing.

We propose to publish our column of post-office addresses but once a month, instead of every week, and by this means give about three columns more of reading matter in a month. We trust these changes will please our readers.

OBITUARIES.

We must ask those who write obituaries to be short; or else they must allow us to cut them down to moderate length. We should be glad, could we spare the room, to put in all that is written; but we cannot do it without causing a general dissatisfaction among our readers. It should be remembered that none are interested in obituaries of persons with whom they are not acquainted; unless they be prominent individuals known to the world by their public acts. We often receive ten or a dozen stanzas about some little child, written by some friend of the family, thus showing their sympathy for the afflicted. This is all right; but instead of sending such to the Crisis, send them to the mourning ones. Most papers only publish the mere obituary notice, without any facts connected with the life, sickness and death of the individual. As a general rule, we think short obituary notices are in the best taste and most expressive. If it can be truly said "she sleeps in Jesus," that tells the whole story; or, "She was a christian for years, died in peace, and sleeps with the just;" then we know all is well.

Those who write and read obituary notices, will find a model one in this paper, of the death of Bro. Shaw. The whole story is told in a few words, in a plain and simple manner. After you have read it once, you feel inclined to read it again.

NEW BEDFORD.

Our meetings at the City Hall, New Bedford, continued to increase in interest to their close. It was said the city had not been so stirred upon theological matters before for years. The hall was sometimes very much crowded, and two or three hundred had to stand up, although extra seats were obtained for the aisles. The congregation was estimated at full twelve hundred. The very best of attention was given, and many members of different denominations were satisfied that we preached the truth as it is in the Bible. Many were astonished at what they heard. They had no idea before that the evidence of Christ's speedy coming was so plain, and easy to understand. They said we cannot get away from the conclusion that what we have heard is truth.

We have seldom seen such deep anxiety to to hear as was there manifested. Our prayer and conference meetings were excellent, being attended by some five or six hundred persons. The singing was charming. It was truly a feast of fat things from the Lord.

The Reporter of the New Bedford Standard was present each evening, and gave very correct daily reports of our meetings. The following is his report of the meeting Thursday evening, March 11th:—

"The City Hall was crowded last evening, and Elder M. Grant preached from 1 Tim. 4, 1, 2:—'Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils.' The subject was—the cause of spiritual manifestations. There are physical manifestations that cannot be accounted for by jugglery, and evidences of intelligence in connection with them that no human philosophy can explain. So far he agreed with Spiritualists; but the manifestations do not come from departed spirits. There is no account or promise in the Bible of such communications, but positive statements to the contrary. They are the work of devils or demons,—wicked, fallen angels.

Man was created a little lower than the angels, and this proves that the angels were created before as well as higher. Spiritualists hold that angels are spirits of dead men; but there could not have been spirits of dead men before the creation of man. Angels have the form of men, and have been repeatedly mistaken for men; but the spirits of dead men are without form and could not appear as men.

Angels, good and bad, have power to make themselves invisible. The dwelling-place of the demons is mentioned in 2 Pet. 2: 4, 'cast down to hell;' but the word here translated hell is nowhere else found in the Greek Testament, and signifies the lower regions of the air. The chief of devils is hence styled the Prince of the power of the air. The demons act upon the trance mediums in substantially the same way as one man affects another by mesmerism.

At the close, Elder Grant said he was ready to answer any questions.

Mrs. Archer rose and said the spirits were good spirits, doing the miraculous works that were done by the apostles, while the church had lost the apostolic power.

Elder Grant replied that they are not good but seducing spirits, doing good acts to gain the confidence of men. We are commanded not to communicate with them. Their followers have been led to deny the Bible, and to teach that Jesus was only a very impressible medium.

Benjamin Dexter said Spiritualists do not deny the Bible, which supports their belief, and declares that Christ preached to spirits.

Elder Grant replied that the spirits of 1 Pet. 3: 19, are plainly the men who lived just before the flood.

Mrs. Archer asked, how about the false prophets of 1843? Elder Grant said the question was not to the point, but he would answer that there were no prophets in 1843, only men who mistook in interpreting prophecy.

In answer to Mr. Dexter, he stated that he belived Swedenborg to have been acted upon by the same demons as the mediums of the present day.

Mrs. Archer inquired whether Elder Grant could cast out these devils? He said he had. He once engaged to discuss the question of Spiritualism with a Mrs. Tuttle, in Putnam, Conn. When he found she was to speak in the trance state he commanded the devil to come out of her, and she was immediately free from all supernatural influences. Her husband protested, saying that she was unable to sustain the discussion of herself, and the Elder replied that he had engaged to argue with Mrs. Tuttle and not with demons.

Rev. L. B. Bates rose in the audience and vouched for Elder Grant's statement, saying that he was present at the time.

Mrs. Archer then asked why the Elder did not continue casting out the devils instead of condemning those under their influence. Elder Grant replied that he did not condemn, but meant to expose their errors plainly.

Mrs. Archer related an incident of a dying child, who said he could see his little brother in the room, who died two years before, and called upon his mother to speak to Johnny, and at last said Johnny had come for him and he was going away with him. The mother had been compelled by this to believe in Spiritualism; she could not think her heavenly Father would give her a stone under the semblance of bread.

Elder Grant replied there was no Johnny there. In disordered states of the mind, people are frequently deceived by optical hallucinations. If the mother had gone where Johnny appeared to stand, she could have put her hand right through him. Those who consult demons must not expect to receive bread from the Lord.

The following is the Standard's report of the meeting Friday evening, March 12th:—

The City Hall meeting last evening was packed to its fullest extent, it being understood that Elder Grant was to speak on the moral tendencies of Spiritualism. He took for his text that of the previous evening, with some additional clauses—1 Tim. 4: 1-3: 'Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry.'

In commencing his discourse, Elder Grant remarked that Spiritualism has spread faster than any other known belief. It commenced twenty-one years ago, and it has 13,000,000 disciples. He believed that it will yet embrace all except christians, and will be the grand rallying cry of Antichrist for the final struggle.

He then proceeded to quote from those who are or have been leading Spiritualists, in relation to the tendencies of the system. Dr. Hatch, husband of the celebrated trance-speaker, said that with the teachings of the spirits there is an influx of an infernal error which corrupts the moral sensibility, and that not within five hundred years has any other system developed so much crime and indecency. Dr. T. L. Nichols says Spiritualism meets, neutralizes and destroys christianity. Dr. T. B. Randolph, who has been entranced two thousand five hundred times, has withdrawn from Spiritualism, and returned to it, says it is the most tremendous enemy of God, morals and religion that ever found a foothold on the earth,—the most seductive and hence dangerous sensualism that ever cursed a nation, age, or people. Five of his friends had killed themselves under its influence, and he attempted the same thing himself. Every crime in the calendar had been committed by direction of the spirits, especially crimes against chastity and decency. The Dr. had a book of sixty closely written pages of the names of those who had been led by the spirits from christianity to free love, lust, and crime. T. L. Harris, formerly a Swedenborgian, says marriage imposes no obligations, in the view of Spiritualists, and that numbers of devoted husbands and numbers of exemplary wives have abandoned their homes for lives of criminal intercourse with those whom the spirits told them they ought to join on the ground of affinity. Elder Grant also quoted similar statements from Joel Tiffany, editor of Tiffany's Monthly, and J. F. Whitney, editor of the New York Pathfinder.

At the Rutland Reform Convention, in June 1858, it was argued that if a man loves another woman better than his wife, he is really married to that other woman; and a resolution was offered, that the only true, and natural marriage is an exclusive conjugal love between one man and one woman. A woman who addressed the convention held that marriage is the sole cause of woman's degredation and misery.

The Spiritual Telegraph published the defence of the mother of an illegitimate child of John Spear, the medium through whom the matter of the book, entitled The Educator, edited by A. E. Newton, was communicated. She says—It is reserved for the present day, under the inspiration of spirits, for a woman to rise and assert her freedom. No man, church, or state, shall withhold from me the right to rebeget myself when, by whom, and under what circumstances I deem best.

These, said Elder Grant, are doctrines of devils, and in harmony with the character of demons.

He next briefly considered the Spiritualists' principal articles of faith, as taken from the Banner of Light and other authorities. They believe the Bible is not authoritative. (The professed reverence of some spirits for the Bible is a seduction.) They believe there is no sin, no devil, no resurrection, no second coming of Christ; that man is his own judge, his own savior, and is God, and that there is no other God. But their great cardinal doctrine is that there is no death, that man is an immortal being. The speaker enlarged a little on this point, saying that doubtless many christians believe man is immortal. But the Bible teaches the contrary. It is the first doctrine the devil ever taught on the earth, when he said, "Ye shall not surely die." If it is true, what is the need of a resurrection or a final judgment? Elder Grant announced his willingness to hold a public discussion on this question.

After the discourse he invited any person to ask questions. Mrs. Archer rose with her eyes closed, but did not speak. A hymn was sung and the benediction was pronounced. Mrs. Archer remained standing, and the people began to gather about her. Soon there was a great crowd in that part of the hall, and at length she spoke, in a low tone, slowly and with much deliberation, as follows: "The speaker who has so violently aspersed Spiritualists, said last evening that the demons are subject to the children of God. I challenge him to cast out of this medium the spirit of Benjamin Taylor, formerly pastor of a church in Fairhaven. If he refuses, intelligent minds and disembodied intelligences will accept the refusal as proof of the falsity of his claim." There was so much confusion that probably not more than fifty persons heard the challenge. She remained standing with her eyes shut, and the crowd about her continued to thicken, until as an inducement to clear the hall the gas was put out, except a few burners near the door, when her eyes quickly opened and she had a short fit of weeping.

A GOOD BOOK.

Bro. D. F. Newton, a live christian, has just issued a new book of 456 pp., entitled "Apples of Gold in Pictures of Silver." Price per copy $1.50; in gilt $2.00. Postage 20cts. Address D. F. Newton, 303 West 20th St., New York. For sale also at the Crisis office.

Bro. Newton is the well-known author of "Home Thrusts," "Shining Light," "Sword that cuts," etc., etc. The Apples of Gold" are of more value in a family than all the novels ever written. The book is illustrated with one hundred engravings, and is neatly executed. It has a great variety of topics, and is filled with the sweet and heavenly spirit for which the author is justly noted; and yet it deals most faithfully with the sins of the age. It has a word for all classes,—"little folks and great folks." It is a condensed collection of good things. It is worthy of the title it bears. But few such books are written in these last days of peril. Bro. Newton is one who dares cry aloud against the sins of the age, whether they are in high or low places; in the church or state. Would that we had more such men. We need a thousand Luthers and Wesleys at this moment to arouse a sleeping church from her awful situation. We need men who dare tell the whole truth, and not be like weather vanes to tell which way the popular breeze is blowing; men that love sinners more than reputation, silver and gold. Let them come forth. There is plenty of work for such.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

Many are doing a good work in getting subscribers for the Crisis. A brother writes: "This is the third subscriber I have got for the Crisis, who are members of the Methodist church, counting myself as one. I am in hopes of getting more, for the people begin to want light on the Bible, and not be bound by creeds of men, as is too much the case at the present day. I love the Crisis, and am free to recommend it to others."

Come, brethren, take hold of this work in earnest. Try to get the truth before all your neighbors and friends. They need it as much as we do. Let us spare no pains to reach them before it is too late.

THE GOOD SPIRIT.

It is pleasant to work for those who manifest such a kind spirit as is expressed in the following:—"I have written a few thoughts, and send them for your consideration. If you deem them worthy of a corner in your valuable paper, you are at liberty to insert them, or a part of them, after you have pruned and trimmed them, and corrected all mistakes; if not, you can commit them to the flames, and I shall be quite as well suited."

COMMON POLITENESS.

Some time since we noticed a little book, by Mr. D. C. Colesworthy, of Boston, entitled "Hints on Common Politeness." It is the best work we have seen on the subject. The "Hints" are based on common sense, and the principles of christianity, and should be read by every body. For sale at this office. Price 63 cents.

The following is from the introductory chapter:—

"We have fallen on singular times. Who has any true regard for the rights of his neighbor? Where can a really polite man be found? If we do not actually spit in the faces of our friends, we are, every day of our lives, guilty of numberless thoughtless and equally as uncivil acts, that greatly displease and annoy them.

When will the American people learn that true politeness does not consist in honeyed words, graceful bows, and starched rules of etiquette? When will they cease to use low, vulgar, and profane language? When will they learn not to crowd their neighbors, and trample upon their sacred rights? When will they respect the aged, assist the infirm, and manifest a tender regard for the feelings of the poor and down-trodden? And when will they stop puffing the fumes of tobacco in your very faces, and cease squirting its disgusting juices promiscuously upon your stairs, carpets, and dresses? God made the atmosphere pure and healthy; and what right has man to poison the air we breathe, annoy a fellow-traveler, and destroy the pleasure he would enjoy from a car ride in the city or country?

Your own pleasure, convenience, and interest should not be taken into consideration, when they conflict with the duties you owe to your neighbors and to society at large. It is a man's glorious privilege, as well as his highest christian duty, to sacrifice his own selfish interests, if thereby he can promote the weal of others, and scatter widely and profusely the blessings of life.

A few hints in this little volume, we trust, will have the effect to make people more jealous of the rights of others; to lead them to study to cultivate more carefully and religiously that disposition, and to practice those virtues, which will contribute to the welfare and happiness of mankind, and scatter more bountifully the sunshine and warmth that spring from elevated affections, christian deportment, and sincere politeness."

We intend to commence extracts in the next number from Mr. Colesworthy's work on politeness.

It occurs to us now, that some of our readers, when they come to Boston, may wish to purchase new or second hand books on various subjects; we would recommend them to call on Mr. Colesworthy, 66 Cornhill, where they will be well treated, and make purchases to as good advantage, we think, as at any place we know of in Boston.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL.

The church worshiping at this place has enjoyed the faithful labors of Bro. A. A. Phelps for the past two Sundays, and for several evenings in the intervening week. We have seldom, if ever, listened to more earnest, stirring, solemn, scriptural appeals, both to the church and the unconverted, than those that fell from the lips of our brother during his short stay among us; and although there have been more places of worship than usual in this and the surrounding cities, where our brethren and sisters have met, yet the meetings at the Chapel have been more crowded than for months before. The blessing of our heavenly Father has rested upon us most graciously. The church has been revived, backsliders reclaimed, and sinners aroused to a sense of danger, and to request the prayers of God's people. Praise the Lord.

We regret that Bro. Phelps is compelled, by previous engagements, to leave us so soon. The Lord directing, we hope he will return and be with us again at no very distant day. We commend our brother to the church and brethren every where, as an earnest, faithful preacher of the word,—one laboring day and night with tears, that men and women may be prepared to "give account to him that is ready to "judge the quick and the dead," "at his appearing and his kingdom." G. T. A.

THEATRE COMIQUE.—Bro. Hook says he had as large a congregation last night as he has had any of the time. Two started for the kingdom. One infidel said he was all polluted with sin, and wanted to find the way that "comes out right" in the end. He is to be there next Sabbath.

INSTITUTION FOR THE BLIND.

Massachusetts has an excellent Institution for the education of the blind. It is located in South Boston, in an elevated position, overlooking Boston harbor, and a large portion of Boston, and the surrounding country. This Institution was commenced on a small scale forty years since, and was the first of the kind in America. The present location has been occupied since 1839. The building is known by the name of "Mt. Washington Hotel," and though large, it is now too small to accommodate the pupils, which number about one hundred and fifty. By the kindness of the manager, Dr. S. G. Howe, we enjoyed, in company with the editors of various papers, and several ministers, the privilege of a "Private Concert," given by the blind at their Institution, Wednesday, P. M., at 2½ o'clock, March 3d. It was a rare entertainment. The scene was truly affecting. We never before heard a concert that pleased us so well. They had a good supply of brass instruments, drums, fifes, flutes, clarionets, a piano and an organ. The playing and singing was very fine. It was truly astonishing to see the skill acquired by those blind children. We also heard excellent recitations in arithmetic, geography, reading and geometry. They read by means of raised letters. Some of the little girls whom we heard read, are seldom excelled by those who have the use of their eyes.

We were delighted with the behavior and good expression in the countenances of the pupils. None of them looked ugly or mischievous, as is usually the case in other schools. There appeared to be much of the home-like element in the Institution, and we learn that it is intended to enlarge the accommodations in order that this important feature may become much more prominent.

TERMS OF ADMISSION.

Young blind persons, of good moral character, can be admitted to the school by paying 300 per annum. This sum covers all expenses, except for clothing; namely, board, washing, medicines, the use of books, musical instruments, etc. The pupils must furnish their own clothing, and pay their own fares to and from the Institution. The friends of the pupils can visit them whenever the choose.

Indigent blind persons, of suitable age and character, belonging to Massachusetts, can be admitted gratuitously, by application to the Governor for a warrant.

The following is a good form, though any other will do:—

"TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR:

"Sir,—My son (or daughter, or nephew, or niece, as the case may be), named A. B., and aged ——, cannot be instructed in the common schools for want of sight. I am unable to pay for the tuition at the Perkins Institution and Massachusetts Asylum for the Blind, and I request that your Excellency will grant a warrant for free admission. Very respectfully, —— ——."

The application may be made by any relation or friend, if the parents are dead or absent. It should be accompanied by a certificate from one or more of the selectmen of the town, or aldermen of the city, in this form:—

"I hereby certify that, in my opinion, Mr. —— —— is not a wealthy person, and that he cannot afford to pay $300 per annum for his child's instruction. (Signed) —— ——."

There should also be a certificate, signed by some regular physician, in this form:—

"I certify that, in my opinion, —— —— has not sufficient vision to be taught in common schools; and that he is free from epilepsy, and from any contagious disease. (Signed) —— ——."

These papers should be done up together, and directed to "The Secretary of the Commonwealth, State House, Boston, Mass."

An obligation will be required from some responsible persons, that the pupil shall be removed without expense to the Institution, whenever it may be desirable to discharge him.

The usual period of tuition is from five to seven years.

Indigent blind persons residing in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut and Rhode Island, by applying as above to the "Commissioners for the Blind, care of the Secretary of State," in the respective States, can obtain warrants of free admission.

For further particulars, address Dr. S. G. Howe, Director of the Institution for the Blind, Boston, Mass.

We give these facts to our readers that they may know where to find a good school for the blind.

MEMPHIS.

BRO. L. F. COLE, Memphis, March 12th, writes:—"Praise the Lord! His work is going bravely on. Sinners are coming to the Lord; saints are strengthened, and every thing is moving along in the channel of truth with us. Last Sunday Bro. L. baptised seven, and the church was much strengthened; yesterday, another went forward, and there are fourteen or fifteen ready to go into the water next Sunday. It would have done your heart good to have seen the school marching by twos down to the Wolf River,—a branch of the Mississippi,—and to have heard the songs at the water's edge, and to have seen the deep seriousness during the baptism. The scene last Sunday beggars any description of mine; suffice it to say, that it was a solemn and interesting time indeed.

Last Monday we merged the school into a prayer-meeting, or rather the scholars did; many of them not even stopping to eat their dinners, but immediately on close of the forenoon session, commenced a meeting in the primary room (Sr. Valle's). We soon got them into the larger room, and seventy-five of the children came forward for prayers. How do you think I can describe it? Bless the Lord! There, I cannot do more than that, and to him be all the glory.

We are somewhat weary in the work, but not of it, for we love it, I assure you. The Lord is blessing right along, and when the Lord is blessing, it is easy to walk. How prone we are to try and make a path of duty, rather than walk in the one already laid out for us." L. F. COLE.

MISSION WORK.

BRO. GRANT:—The question is very often asked me, "Why is it not better to pay our money for the support of missionaries to labor among the heathen and ignorant people in our northern cities, rather than send them among the ignorant freedmen and others of the South?" To such inquiries I would like to give the following answer:

First. People of all classes living at the North pretty generally became gospel-hardened years ago; while at the South thousands and millions are living there who never heard the gospel of the kingdom at all.

Second. Those who may be considered heathen at the North have become so, or at least have remained so, from choice; while at the South, thousands and thousands have been made heathen, and compelled to remain so of necessity, in years that are past, on account of the severe and inflexible laws rigidly enforced to protect the institution of Slavery.

Third. Most of those at the North, who are living in ignorance of gospel light and truth, have always enjoyed the free liberty of attending schools, and of reading the Bible for themselves; while at the South, millions have grown up into manhood who were never allowed the privilege of so much as learning the alphabet; and even to be seen with a book in their hands, or of having one in their possession, would almost invariably subject them to the lash, or some other worse punishment.

Fourth. Here at the North, as a general rule, ministers of the gospel have always enjoyed the liberty of conscience, and a free and unrestricted liberty of preaching accordingly; while at the South, there are millions living in total darkness of Bible truths, who have lived and grown up at a time when it was certain imprisonment, and often death, for a preacher of the gospel of Christ, or any one else, to preach or talk to the millions held in bondage the pure and unadulterated truths of God's holy word.

As showing the fruits of what some have called Christian slavery, let me give you only one instance of ignorance among thousands of freedmen. One who has been a very worthy and devoted member of our Pilgrim church, in St. Louis, for two and a half years, and who had also lived a devoted christian life in the Methodist church South for a number of years; never knew that Jesus Christ died and rose to life again, until she came to St. Louis, two and a half years ago. She had heard from some faithful, ignorant preacher that there was a Savior, and believed in him. She prayed for pardon and found it. She loved that dear Savior. Jesus pitied and loved her too. Glory to God! Hallelujah! But then she knew but very little about Jesus after all, except what God had shown her by his Spirit.

Dear brethren and sisters, is it not too bad? Only think of the wealth God has trusted with those professing to be his stewards; and also that in five or six States in New England the number of our preachers has increased so that the churches, to avoid confusion, have to advertise for preachers not to come among them, without first writing to a committee, and waiting for an answer, so as to prevent two or three coming at the same time to preach; when there are millions at the South and West who are living in total darkness concerning the Bible truths of Jesus' coming again in person to judge the world. Shall we withhold from them the light of his coming to reign for ever as our God and King on the earth? of a resurrection to life again of both the just and the unjust? of immortality, which is to be given to the saints only through Christ our Redeemer? of the final end of the wicked? of the glorious and eternal inheritance of the saints; together with many other Bible truths, upon which the great mass of professing christians are silent, and many are willing and even disposed to treat with contempt? O, my soul does cry out unto the Lord, both for laborers to go into the field just ready for the final harvest, and willing hearts who can not go themselves, but have ample of the Lord's means to sustain those who do go. "Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Matt. 25: 40. H. K. FLAGG.

LETTER FROM SR. E. S. MELLEN.

BRO. GRANT:—Enclosed with this, please find a letter sent us from a Good Samaritan in New Hampshire, into whose hands has fallen our sick Principal, Sister A. E. Smith. It seems to us she is acting out her faith very fully, and setting an example well worthy of imitation. It tells its own sad story, which is fully corroborated by others who are there, and keep us informed of the unfortunate state of affairs; and we therefore send it to you for publication, at the request of a number of mission friends.

We deeply sympathize in our sister's affliction, and naturally enough we at once ask each other, "What shall become of our Mission? If she has failed to go out and make collections for us, who shall send us supplies to feed our hungry ones? or how shall our 'hundred dollar bill' per month for rent be paid?" Echo answers, Who? A moment's reflection only is needed, and we decide at once that this is the Lord's mission work, and though he slay our dear Sister Smith, and her present laborers with her, he is yet able to raise up others, who shall rally nobly around the "Star of Hope."

Like all other good enterprises, it has its subtle enemies, but it has also its dear, honest, earnest friends, whose name is "legion." These are only waiting to know of our trouble, and their sympathies, their prayers, their tears, their devotion, and their dollars, are ours. We do not like to distress them by asking them to share our sorrows, but all these missionaries have their circle of dear friends, who say to them, "O that I might help you in your glorious work."

They have helped us, and Father will not forget; they still say, "Write us, and tell us your need, and though we cannot join you in person, we will in our prayers and our purse. Here are our counsels and encouragements, and whatsoever we have that will aid you we are ready to divide." It is to this large class of willing, loving disciples, that we send our appeal for present help. We direct it to the faithful Johns and Marys still in the christian church. If we could reach all by private letter we would prefer to do so; but the question still is pressed, "Why do we not hear more from you through the Crisis?"

Here we are, then, friends, with a plain, unvarnished story. Our Principal, laid aside from her labors by sickness, is not yet able to reach home. Your humble servant who pens this is also confined to the sick room, and dependent on Mission pillows for props while this duty is imperfectly performed. Yet with all this we are glad as birds, and joyous in the Lord. We are noi much cast down, and by no means destroyed. We glory in our magnanimous work, and see it harmoniously going on. We can lie here and feast our eyes on the bright faces of our proteges, who come in to tell some item of their recent experience; and our dear missionaries, who are now on double duty; the dear Marthas, they come in from miserable abodes, telling how they looked with strained eyes into a dark corner of a damp basement, and are informed by a shrill squeak from a new pair of little lungs what their next duty is.

Here they come, then, to women's work, turning things over to find a tiny blanket, some little socks, etc., etc. Another has the interest of the poor sick mother at heart, and she quickly boils some oatmeal gruel, fills a bucket with coal, and guesses she will warm even that damp place.

God bless my colleagues; they are standing never so steady at the wheel, and it goes on gloriously. Thank the Lord, great good is being done, and we are trusting and hopeful. In a few more days I hope to join them again, and ere long we shall hope to see Sister Smith at her appointed work. In the meanwhile, may there many hearts respond to the proposition of our Sister Rodgers, and send in their names. Yours in the work,

E. S. MELLEN.

Star of Hope Mission, March, 1869.

"HOPKINTON, N. H., March 5th, 1869.

SISTER MELLEN:—I presume you will be surprised at receiving a letter from me, a perfect stranger; but I feel, though we may be strangers in one sense, that we are united by the spirit of Christ's blessed union. My object in writing to you this evening is to inform you of the state of Sister Smith's health. She arrived at my house last week on Tuesday in a very exhausted condition, and severely threatened with lung fever. She has been confined to her room ever since. At this time is quite feeble, but we think gaining slowly. It was her intention to have gone to Warner on the following day (Wednesday), to meet an appointment, and would have done so, had it not been for the advice of my husband, a physician, whose opinion it was that unless she stopped just where she was, and attended to herself, he was fearful in a few weeks she might be where her labors on earth would be finished. Under these circumstances she concluded to give up her appointment at Warner, and return to Concord as soon as possibly able.

On Wednesday she was completely prostrated on a bed of languishing and pain, from which she is but just recovering. She has suffered extremely with this disease, which has prevailed in this vicinity as an epidemic, and which has in many cases defied medical treatment.

She is not yet able to be dressed, but it is our daily prayer that God will renew her strength, and once more restore her to her field of labor, the welfare of which weighs heavily upon her mind at this time. It is evident that her mission is very near and dear to her heart, when in her weak and suffering state she lies, and the silent tears steal down her feverish cheeks when her mind wanders out to those whom she has left to come East to preach the truths of God's holy word to a hungry, thirsty people, in order that she might be able to carry on the mighty work she has undertaken.

We feel confident that some other way must be provided to meet the expenses of the Mission besides Sister Smith's preaching. We feel that Sister Anna is one of God's own children, and is laboring in a noble cause, and that now God has seen fit to deprive her of sufficient strength to preach the glad tidings, we feel that all friends of missions and the Star of Hope Mission in particular, ought to come to her help, and strive to meet the expenses which she cannot at this time. We feel that God would bless them in so doing. I wonder how many readers of the Crisis would pay one dollar a month to sustain this garret and cellar work. I will be one of two hundred and fifty to do this now. I wonder how many there are who would send in their names to do the same by the first of April.

Yours in Christ,

MRS. DR. T. W. RODGERS.

For the World's Crisis.

ROCHESTER.

Yesterday was another of those sweet, heavenly days that count among the best in Rochester. Our prayer on conference was characterized by that sweet fellowship of the young converts; while the "first love" was manifest throughout. Scarcely one half had an opportunity of speaking, yet the time was all occupied, and no one was tedious. At noon, when the four winds of heaven were striving, and everything movable seemed flying before them, we went down to the Genesee and buried seven in the watery grave, in the likeness of Christ's death, whom we hope will share with those who shall come up in the first resurrection. None seemed chilled so much as those who were kept back by the storm.

One teacher in the Sunday School in Dr. Shaw's church bore a great cross, but received a great blessing. Our third-story hall is a disadvantage to us, yet we have good congregations notwithstanding. In the evening six or eight more started for the promised land, which may God grant they may reach in safety. One man called on me this morning, and said, "I felt when you were preaching yesterday afternoon that I was reined right up to a decision; that it was my last time; I must win or lose then." He is after the king's highway. He has left the swine and husks, and all unworthy is stretching away for Father's house.

"ROCHESTER REVIVAL."

In the good-bye meeting of Mr. Hammond, under whose labors hundreds have professed conversion, he is reported to say,—"It was a question with me when I came here whether I should preach the near coming of Christ or not. I consulted with my ministering brethren, and they thought it not best to alarm the people"; and he had taken their advice.

Dr. Shaw corroborated the statement of Mr. Hammond, saying he held the same views, but thought the people would not bear it. I hope Mr. Hammond will consult with God, and on his return here give his thousands of hearers the truth as it is in Christ, whether men hear or forbear, and stand justified before him. H. PRATT.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.
MELVIN VILLAGE, N. H.

This meeting was held according to notice in the Crisis; and although it was quite sickly in the place at the time of its session, yet good audiences were present and listened with marked attention to the word preached. The presence of the great Head of the church was indeed felt. The saints were refreshed. Sinners came to Christ, and good was accomplished in the name of the holy child Jesus.

The following preachers were present during the meeting: S. Roby, F. Mudgett, L. C. McKinstry, L. Allen, S. Bragg, J. G. Smith, T. W. Piper, and A. W. Sibley.

At the close of the service Sunday evening eight arose for prayers. There was great conviction resting on the people during the entire meeting, but more especially at its close. The cause of truth we trust received a new impetus in this place. May God continue to bless the people at Melvin Village.

A. W. SIBLEY, Sec. of Conf.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. H. Albee.

BRO. GRANT:—I feel anxious to do something to advance the cause of my dear Master, for I believe we are near the end of this dispensation. As I am prohibited from meeting with any of the dear brethren and sisters on account of my infirmities; I thought I would write a few lines of warning to the careless, and a few admonitions to professors. Warning has been given you that a storm is approaching; a storm that you can by no possible means survive in your present state; a storm that will sweep away the refuge of lies, a storm from whose fierce pelting there is no shelter, but the ark of safety, the Lord Jesus Christ. Once more we admonish you to take refuge there, before the fast gathering tempest shall overtake and sweep you away with the besom of destruction. There is no time to lose. Already the deep heaving and tumultuous gathering of the nations indicate our close proximity to the great vengeance day. Speedily must you make the final choice between this world and that which is to come. If you are so unwise as to choose the present, make the most of life. Its pleasures, honors, and emoluments; its grandeur, pomp and pride, will exist but a little while longer. A few short months, perhaps weeks or days, and they will be wrested from your grasp, and then the judgment; and following that a night that knows no end. But if you make a wiser, happier choice, if you take Jesus Christ as your portion, come boldly out on his side, let your influence, your time, your talents, your property, your all, be devoted entirely to his service, then all will be well. Have no fellowship with the idea so prevalent at this day, that you can carry the world in one hand and the faith of the gospel in the other. Jesus has declared that "no man can serve two masters." Show by precept and example, that you are indeed strangers and pilgrims; that you are severed from the world; devoted heart and hand to the glory of God, and the good of your fellow men.

Do you manifest to them by your life, dress, conversation, and daily deportment, that you are following closely in the footsteps of your dear blessed Master? Do they find in you the self-denying, self-sacrificing spirit that dwelt in him? Do they see in you a christian, not in name only, but in deed and in truth? Do they see in you one who counts the reproach of Christ greater treasure than the riches, honors and pleasures of this world? If so, then labor on, with the full assurance that your labor is not in vain in the Lord. But painful experience admonishes us that there are some professing to love the Lord, and to love his appearing, whose influence, we fear, is not calculated to accomplish much good. Will such permit us, in love, and yet in faithfulness, to address a few inquiries to them, remembering that the wounds of a friend are faithful, while the kisses of an enemy are deceitful?

Can you, as you approach the poor castaways of the world, invite them to come to Jesus, who is meek and lowly in heart; while it is manifest by your ways and appearance, that you, his professed followers, are proud, haughty, and devotedly attached to the things of this world? Can you admonish them to leave all for Christ and eternal life, while you hug to your embrace all that this world holds dear, and virtually say by your practice that you can carry the world in one hand, and the faith of the gospel in the other? Can you admonish them to lay aside the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life; to forsake the vain trappings and tinsel of this wicked world, while you, yourself, are adorned with its richest toys, its most expensive garments? Can you admonish them to avoid the "plaiting" of hair, and "wearing of gold," and putting on of costly apparel, while pride blossoms in your head dress, glitters on your fingers, and hangs pendent from your ears; and every step you take brings prominent to their view the very things you warn them to forsake? Can you counsel them to become pilgrims and strangers on earth, that they may secure citizenship in heaven, and tell them that where their treasure is there will their hearts be also; while it is evident that you set a great value on your elegantly furnished houses, rich lands, costly merchandise, and expensive equipages? Have these things so blinded your eyes that you do not see their danger, as once you saw it?

Alas! if this be your case, you have need of warning, as much as those who never tasted the good word of God, and the power of the world to come. "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Your gold and silver are cankered, and your garments moth eaten, and in the coming day will be a witnesses against you, that you have disobeyed the Savior's injunction, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal."

The judgment of the great day hasteth greatly. O, how will you meet the blessed Savior, who has done so much for you? How can you expect to hear him say to you, "Well done, good and faithful servant, . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord;" when you have failed to do the work he left you to perform? Fly, fly, at once from the snare of the tempter. Repent, and then lay hold with a deeper, firmer grasp on the way of eternal life. Make no delay, lest the coming storm sweep you away with the works of iniquity. I entreat you, consider your danger. Flee to Calvary's cross. Find in Jesus a refuge now, and a hiding place from the final outburst of terrific vengeance, which shall devour the foes of God. In that day, dear reader, may you and I be partners in eternal joys, and rejoice forever in the peaceful glory of the pilgrim's home.

BENJ. F. H. ALBEE.

East Machias, Feb. 25th, 1869.

BRO. A. J. DOW, Machias Port, Me., writes:—"We are having good meetings here in Machias Port. Bro. I. K. Lombard came here about four weeks ago. He is truly a man of God. We were in rather a low state when Bro. L. came. About two years and a half ago some of us were off the track entirely, and, in fact, we were far from being prepared to meet the Savior, had he come upon us then. It was not a desire for filthy lucre that induced Bro. Lombard to come amongst us; if so the other would not have been realized. He has never shunned to declare the whole counsel of God. Bro. J. M. Tozier has been here too. He is also one of God's faithful watchmen, who is willing to wait until Jesus comes for his reward. Bro. Corliss, of Milltown, is here now and will probably be here one fourth of the time. He is one of Father's children. We have great reason to be thankful to God for his goodness. I think the cause of God is gaining in this eastern part of Maine. Take courage, dear brethren and sisters, the curse will soon be removed."

BRO. GEO. A. STREETER writes:—"I have had a good time at Moosup, Mass. It is a new field, and our views of the Bible were new; but with wisdom in advocating them, some have embraced the truth. How many such places there are. The people are poor, yet such must have the gospel. My heart says this morning, Praise our God, for his goodness to me. My health is not very good, but the Lord is good. I sigh for the time to come when sighing and sorrow shall be done away."

CONFERENCE REPORT.

BRO. GRANT:—The conference held at Dover, Bean's Mills, commenced on the 25th of February. Notwithstanding the heavy storm, and extreme badness of the going, we held meetings every day and evening. Although the attendance was not great, on account of the badness of the going, yet it was characterized with the spirit of the gospel of Jesus, which gave liberty in the meetings, and freedom of speech and prayer. Our love-feasts were lively and interesting. Some came from Brewer, Bangor and Frankfort, with cheerful hearts and weeping eyes, praying God to revive his work. We were more interested in the salvation of souls and getting ready to meet Jesus, than to build up and be like others. Our order was of the gospel. We were happy to believe that Jesus was our Secretary and President. We were not under the necessity of choosing any officers to keep record of our meeting.

Some backsliders were reclaimed, and sinners manifested great interest and kindness to entertain the saints. Not one resolve was passed, only we all resolved to do the will of God. Another meeting of the same nature is to be held at Garland, at Holt's Mills, on the first day of April, to continue over Lord's day. O may the Lord revive faith in his coming, and give us a fitting out for to meet the perils of the day.

ISRAEL DAMMAN.

Pius IX and the Ecumenical Council.

The reports of the death of Pius IX. which, though unfounded, obtained currency throughout Europe during the past week, must have drawn the serious attention of European statesman to the consequences likely to follow an event which cannot now be far distant. The present pontiff never enjoyed robust health; he has arrived at an age and has now sat in the chair of St. Peter for more than twenty years. In the natural course of events a vacancy in the Pontificate must be looked for within a year or two at the outside. And there can be little doubt that, in the present condition of the Catholic world, and the existing state of the relations between the Kingdom of Italy and the Holy See, serious complications are likely to ensue at the death of the Pope. In the first place, the jealousies between the great Catholic Powers, though not perhaps as violent as they formerly were, are still such as to render the selection of a successor by the Sacred College a matter from which a good deal of unpleasantness may arise.

It is a matter of notoriety that Napoleon is anxous to see his cousin elevated to the Pontifical chair. The Italian origin of the Bonaparte family would render it practicable for the conclave to elevate the Cardinal to the Papacy without violating the prescriptive law under which it has long been exclusively filled by Italians. Italy, as a Kingdom, is not recognized by the Church, Austria has broken the bonds of the Concordat, the Provisional Government of Spain has now no recognized means of communication with the Holy See, and the Emperor of the French, as "the eldest son of the church," is the only European ruler to whom the Roman hierarchy can look for sympathy or support. Under these circumstances it is but natural that a good deal of anxiety should be felt throughout Europe as to the probable duration of the Pope's life, and the prospects of the various aspirants to the Holy Chair.

The great danger, however, against which the Roman church has to guard, is that of a Garibaldian attack on Rome during the interregnum which would occur, if the ordinary procedure were followed, between the death of the present Pope and the appointment of a successor.

There are thousands upon thousands of Italians of all classes, who would shrink from offering violence to the successor of St. Peter, or violating the territory held by him under the right of the so-called temporal power, but who could not be restrained from rushing upon Rome at his death. And to guard against this danger to the terrestrial supremacy of the church, it is now proposed that the Ecumenical Council, to be assembled in December next, shall take into consideration the expediency of convoking the Cardinals in conclave, and proceeding to the choice of a Pontiff during the life-time of the present occupant of the Holy See. By this means it is thought that a great danger to the temporal power will be averted, and unpleasant complications avoided.

It would be useless now to speculate on the issue of the deliberations of the Council. There certainly seems to be a tacit understanding between Italy and France at present, that as long as the Pope lives no further attempt against the temporal power shall be made by the former Power or sanctioned by the latter. But with the death of Pius IX. a crisis must come, and we do not believe that all the collective wisdom of the Ecumenical Council will suffice to postpone it beyond that date.—New York Times.

Obituaries.

TIBBALS. Died, in Canadice, Ontario Co., N. Y., Sept. 29th, 1868, David Tibbals, aged fifty-three years.

Father Tibbals was born in Milford, Conn., but in early years removed to Cayuga Co., N. Y., where he was converted to God and joined the Christian church. He afterwards removed to Canadice, where he resided for fifty years previous to his death. He was always a decided opposer of the church follies of the present age; yet he possessed the true spirit of christian progress; viz., "growing in grace and the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." For this reason he was led in his latter years to adopt the true christian hope of life only in Christ, and thus died in hope of a resurrection among the just. I found it always pleasant and profitable to visit with him, and many are the hours we have spent conversing on the signs of the times, and the Bible hope. As a pilgrim he saw much sorrow; but his son Noah, with whom he spent his closing years, made his pathway as smooth as possible, as he passed onward to the tomb. He lived to a good old age, and then fell asleep in Jesus. His burial service was attended by Bro. Ira Allen, and his funeral discourse preached by Eld. D. Cogswell, at the Christian Church, in Springwater, Oct. 11th. "It was an excellent discourse, satisfactory to all the friends." Text, Job 14: 14. Communicated by request.

F. BURR.

HIMES. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Exeter, R. I., Feb. 9th, 1869, Bro. A. S. Himes, aged fifty-three years.

He was brother to Eld. J. V. Himes. Bro. H. was a great sufferer, but he bore his sufferings patiently. Being conscious of his situation, he sent for me to see him die. I approached his bedside while in the agonies of death. I asked him if his hope sustained him? He answered, Yes, and praised God aloud. He then asked me to pray aloud, that he might hear, after which he requested me to attend the funeral, and write to the Crisis about his death. He then bade us all farewell, with praises to God, and fell asleep. It was a great comfort to his friends to see him die happy in the Lord. He expected to sleep but a little while, and then arise to behold the glories of that world where the eyesight will never more grow dim, and the inhabitants will no more be sick. I tried to speak words of comfort from John 11: 11.

E. R. WOOD.

MCKEEN. Fell asleep in Jesus at "Our Home," Dansville, N. Y., Feb. 1st, 1869, Bro. John McKeen, aged thirty-three years.

He was a minister of the Baptist denomination; had recently graduated, and just as he was ready for his work, he was taken with that fatal disease—consumption. He was a devoted christian, ready at all times "to give a reason of the hope within him with meekness and fear," and was anxious to live to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. As the dying hour approached, he desired his attendant to inform his absent brother that he died "all right." He leaves an affectionate sister and three brothers, who sorrow not as those who have no hope.

JOHN G. T. CRUSE.

BRACKETT. Died in the Lord, Feb. 14th, 1869, (in Boston, Mass. Hospital), Joshua Brackett, aged forty years and six months.

Bro. B. was a member of the Freewill Baptist church at Lawrence, Mass. He lived a christian life for twenty years, died a christian, and sleeps in Jesus. "Blessed sleep." Funeral services at his brother's (John H. Brackett), in Charlestown.

JOHN G. HOOK.

SHAW. Died in Fairhaven, Feb. 24th, 1869, after a short illness of lung fever, William Shaw, aged seventy-three years, three months, and three days.

He was a kind and affectionate husband and father. He leaves a sick and afflicted wife, and an only daughter to mourn his loss. He rests in hope of the first resurrection.

NASH. Died in Great Falls, N. H., March 7th, 1869, Bro. Joseph E. Nash, son of Bro. Joseph and Judith Nash, aged twenty-two years and eleven months.

He now sleeps in Jesus. His funeral services were attended by the writer in the second Methodist house, in Great Falls.

JOHN L. CHUTE.

BLODGETT. Died in North Danville, Vt., March 4th, John C. Blodgett.

He died strong in the faith that his sleep would be short. Bro. Leonard Wheeler spoke words of comfort, from Psa. 17: 15,—"I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness."

N. BLODGETT.

YOUNG. Died in Lynn, Feb. 19th, of scarlet fever, Cora Etta, youngest daughter of Charles and Elizabeth Young, aged three years, seven months.

They mourn not as those who have no hope. Sermon by R. Wendell. Text, 1 Thess. 4: 14.

PINGREE. Died in Orfordville, N. H., Dec. 1st, 1868, Eva L. Pingree, aged eight years, three months, and eighteen days.

She said, "I love you, dear mother, but I love God better."

Passing Events.

☞ The Jews are creating some astonishment by their mode of action in these modern times. They have been renowned for their dolefulness, but a change has come over them, and instead of being melancholy and sad they have become gay and festive. In many respects they excel the Gentiles in frivolity—as witness their theatre building in Europe, and their Puim Balls in America. What can be the meaning of the change? We saw it mentioned somewhere, not long since, that the Israelites were proposing to keep the Christian Sabbath. Surely the world is progressing.

☞ A few weeks ago a plan was submitted to the Pope for a new basilica, the erection of which he was asked to sanction. His Holiness replied: "If we consult the tendencies of the age, and consider the revolutions which are agitating the world, it is not basilicas we shall feel called upon to build, but madhouses; for it is plain that the whole world is going mad."

☞ The murder of the innocents, or ante-natal infanticide, has been rebuked and protested against by the Roman Catholic Bishop of Baltimore. The crime is of that soul-destroying description that ranks, we should think, among the deadly and unpardonable sins.

☞ The Court of Appeals at Naples, Italy, has decided that the marriage of priests of the Catholic church is legal. The decision establishes the perfect independence of the State in its relations with the church, and determines the position of a priest in the presence of the law. It is expected that the Ecumenical Council, which is to meet at Rome in December next, will confirm and indorse this decision.

☞ Among the papers of the late Princess Baciocchi, now delivered to the Emperor, are some forty-five volumes full of notes written by Napoleon I. at St. Helena. She leaves to the Prince Imperial all her landed estates in France, besides property to the value of 100,000 francs per annum at Trieste.

☞ The plans for the great bridge across the East river, between New York and Brooklyn, are being rapidly matured and the work will soon be begun. The structure will be a suspension bridge of the enormous span of 1,600 feet, and will be one of the finest specimens of engineering in the world.

☞ A bunch of matches, of the ordinary kind, was ignited by the sun the other day in a drawer in the office of a leading business man in Brattleboro. The combustion took place just as he was going out. Had it occurred a few minutes later there would have been another "mysterious case" of fire.

☞ Toronto is said to be full of New York thieves, frightened away from the city by the awaking up of justice and under the fear of a Vigilance Committee.

☞ Fares to Europe by the Cunard line have fallen nearly one-fourth within the last few days. Competition with the Inman line has done it.

☞ The number of marriages in New York is said to be constantly diminishing. Alas! for its morals.

☞ The American Missionary Association are about making a purchase of three thousand acres of land in Mississippi. A gentleman has promised to erect on the tract, when purchased, a normal school building worth $12,000.

☞ Gen. Grant's inaugural has been translated into Russian for publication in the St. Petersburg and Moscow papers.

☞ The lives of printers in New York city, it is asserted, do not average over forty-five years. The causes of this short-lived career of this useful class of workmen are to be attributed to working at night, and to the want of ventilation, and the overheating of composing rooms.

☞ An officer of the British navy states that from eleven years' observations, six years in the arctic regions and five years in the north of Scotland, he has ascertained that tremendous gales follow from twelve to twenty-four hours after the appearance of the aurora borealis.

☞ Louis Phillippe's son, the DukeD' Aumal, has become a regular contributor to the London Times. A recent article commenting upon the speech of Louis Napoleon is attributed to him.

☞ Schools for teaching English to Chinese are becoming numerous in California.

☞ One million postage stamps are daily used in the United States.

Notices.

Notice.

I intend, the Lord willing, to return to the St. Lawrence Mission about the middle of April, to labor there two months or more. If desired by any living on or near my route back, I would stop and hold meetings at three or four different places. Those wishing my labors, will please write me to Savoy, Mass., immediately, giving all particulars as to route, where to stop, who to inquire for, etc.

H. K. FLAGG.

P. S. I can return by either of the three routes —by Albany, by New York, or by Philadelphia, as the Lord may open the way. H. K. F.

Savoy, Mass., March 13th, 1869.

Notice.

By invitation of the church at Collinsville, Ct., the quarterly session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held in their hall, beginning Wednesday, April 21st, 1869. Preaching first evening. The place is accessible by railroad from New Haven, on the Canal road to Plainville; change cars for Collinsville. From Hartford, on the Providence and Fishkill road to Plainville; then change cars as above. Come in the Spirit.

L. F. MOORE, Secretary.

Conference.

If the Lord will, there will be a conference held in Garland, Me., at Holt's Mills, commencing Thursday evening, April 1st, at seven o'clock, and continue over Lord's day. As this is a new place for such a meeting, the brethren are anxious for a general attendance of the preaching brethren. Call on Bro. Millet, William Field, and Gardner Farmer. Bro. Farmer lives about one half mile east of the school-house. Those coming from Bangor and vicinity had better inquire at Bean's Mills, on the notch road, for Holt's Mills. Those coming from the north and west, inquire for Brn. Wm. Field and Abner Millet, at Garland Village. Preaching brethren will probably find a home at K. Holt's, at the Mills. It is desired that brethren and sisters in adjacent towns and neighborhoods should attend and lend a helping hand. Further particulars hereafter.

In behalf of the church, O. G. TRUNDY.

Notice.

By request of the brethren at Edenboro, Erie Co., Pa., I will join Bro. J. Wendell in holding a two days' meeting of the church in Edenboro, April 16th, and over Sunday, as Bro. Wendell and the church there may arrange.

Also, by the request of the brethren at Bloomingdale Valley, I will hold a quarterly meeting there, April 22d, and over Sunday, as the church there may appoint. Let there be a general rally at these quarterly meetings. Soon it will be too late to preach and hear the gospel. Then let all awake.

C. F. SWEET.

Conference.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at East Rochester, N. H., commencing Thursday evening, March 25th, at half-past seven o'clock, and hold over Sunday, the 28th. Brethren Couch, Pinkham, and Twombly are expected to preach the word. A general gathering of laboring brethren and sisters from other towns is desired. For the church,

JAMES QUIMBY.
J. C. SHOREY.

R. I. and Ct. Conference.

This conference will meet with the church at Danielsonville, Ct., Wednesday, 2 P. M., April 7th, 1869. Come up to the help of the Lord. Come from far and near. H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

The Resuscitator.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish the following letter inserted, for the benefit of sympathizers with Sister Weaver. The instrument which did this work was applied by myself a short time ago. I have induced her brother in Springfield to take hold with me in introducing it more extensively. All letters of inquiry and for the instrument must be directed to Munger & Weaver, Springfield, Mass., Drawer 81.

HIRAM MUNGER.

"I communicate to you the excellent effect of the Resuscitator you sent me. I have been an invalid for sixteen years, and most of the time confined to my bed, and have employed more than fifty physicians during that time, but without any permanent relief. My spinal complaint has produced other complicated difficulties. I have been subject to spasms and fits every month, but since I have used the Resuscitator, I have had but one, and my general health is better. Nothing has ever done me so much good as the Resuscitator.

L. B. WEAVER.

North Dana, Mass., March 13th, 1869."

Information.

As Bro. Richards has asked for information, through the Crisis, about what would be most likely to help the little girl at Bro. Seth Stone's, Camden, Me., I would say, the Prussian Galvanic Instrument has removed tumors, wens, and different kinds of swellings very mysteriously. With my experience, I would risk this treatment above all others. See notice to the afflicted in the Crisis three weeks ago. We have letters of remarkable cures by its use of late. It only costs $10.50, and is a family physician that is safe, and I can recommend it.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Notice.

The brethren in Manchester, N. H., are holding meetings at Merrimack Hall, as usual, and are in full fellowship with the "Crisis," "Voice of the West," and the N. H. State Conference. Preaching brethren please correspond with the Committee:—A. J. Mayhew, S. R. Davidson, O. Proctor.

Notice.

We would call the attention of our friends who visit Boston, and wish to go to a good, neat, quiet place to get meals, a few rods from the Crisis office, and at lower rates than elsewhere, that they will find such a place at No. 87 Hanover Street, kept by Mr. L. O. Pratt. A. W. SIBLEY.

Notice.

Preaching brethren visiting Lawrence. Mass., are requested to stop with Bro. R. F. Cram, corner of Bradford and Broadway Streets, as provision has been made for them by the church there.

For the church, A. W. SIBLEY.

Notice.

The interest in Albany, N. H., continuing, we shall remain with the people there for the present. Friends will address us at Tamworth Iron Works, N. H. L. C. & M. MCKINSTRY.

That "Rare Picture" Again.

Mr. John Hoxie, of Little Compton,* sends for one, but we have no clue to the State, and so must wait till he sends again. Some give an address that it would "puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer" to find out, so that if mistakes are sometimes made in the address, do not blame us. So many orders came in, we were unprepared to meet them, and have kept some of you waiting. We can now furnish all who wish, singly or by the dozen, at a discount. Several inquire respecting the "history" and the "authenticity" of the picture. We can tell you nothing beyond that published in the Crisis. The same is found on every card.

M. D. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

COURAGE.

Courage! the watch-word's ringing
Far down the ages past;
Courage! each pilgrim's singing
The latest and the last.
The long, rough way before us,
How many feet have passed;
Dear followers of Jesus,
They're welcomed home at last.

Courage! the aged pilgrim,
Far up and on the road,
Shout backward to the children
Just taking up the load;
And to the weary, fainting,
Half way the journey o'er,
"Bear up" comes ever wafting

Oh, tossed with pain and anguish,
Oh, bleeding feet, press on,
He sees us as we languish,
He beckoneth on, still on.
The Captain gone before us,
Heareth our waiting cry;
The smallest whisper reaches
The Lord of Hosts on high.

The Lord of Hosts! oh, army
Of pilgrims marching on,
Lift up the shout of triumph,
The gates are almost won.
The darkness fast is waning,
And rougher though the way,
Our feet are surely gaining
Upon the glorious day.

Shout gladly one to other,
Brethren, upon the way,
Jesus, our Elder Brother,
Cannot be far away.
We see the advancing banner,
The waving of his hands,
And high above the clamor
The voice of angel bands.

For the World's Crisis.

PENCILINGS OF A PILGRIM.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H.

This is an old sea-port town of twelve thousand. It has an excellent harbor, but for many years the naval trade has been nearly stagnant. The city bears the marks of dilapidation. The streets are narrow and irregular. The buildings are generally old and much neglected. There is no evidence of present growth. It is still true that there are some pleasant residences and various points of interest in connection with this weather-beaten town. One of the United-States Navy Yards is located here, and two or three iron-clad vessels are being constructed. Will they ever be called into requisition?

I found a band of pilgrims who gave me a cordial greeting and "heard the word gladly." The Lord helped me to use the naked blade, and the people stood it amazingly well. Some of the brethren were a little slow in starting, but they soon began to feel their responsibilities and seek the divine anointing. We had some very profitable meetings. The brethren urged me to come again, as soon as possible, and promised to stand by me in a regular campaign. It is not improbable that I shall accept the invitation. If so, may the God of Israel prepare us for battle and for victory!

NOT FOR SALE!

There are so many men in the general market, who can be frightened or flattered out of their principles, that it is a real luxury to find here and there a glorious exception. I found in Portsmouth a cheering example of fidelity to principle, in the case of a dear brother whose kinsman had offered him two thousand dollars if he would renounce his religious associations, and cast in his lot with one of the popular churches. Thank God, he was not to be bought! His love for Christ and freedom and truth was stronger than his love for money. How inspiring it is to see men of unbending rectitude! I plead not for mulish stubbornness that refuses to confess a fault when clearly pointed out; but I do admire that independence of character which enables a man to plant his feet on the rock, and stand there, unmoved alike by the flatteries or frowns, the cash or curses of men and devils too! Back-bone is the greatest want of many a man, whose good intentions are constantly neutralized by this constitutional tendency to cater and compromise. It requires real nerve for a man to "stand up for Jesus" everywhere, and say NO to the charming voices of a tempting world!

SETTLED AT LAST.

My faith in the doctrine of eternal torment became seriously jostled about two years ago. I determined to investigate the subject, calmly and thoroughly. My all-absorbing desire was to know the truth, however it might affect my preconceived opinions. I was willing to believe in the doctrine of endless misery, or renounce it, according to its agreement with, or opposition to, the word of God. I resolved not to cherish a theory because of its popularity, nor reject the truth because of the rabble cry—"Away with it!" I well knew that majorities are quite as apt to be wrong as right. The richest veins of gold have always been hidden from the popular eye. I determined to be very cautious and deliberate in drawing conclusions, well knowing that every inch of ground would be boldly contested. I prayed earnestly that God would lead me into all truth. I felt that I could well afford to stand on God's platform, whatever it might be. Though chiefly concerned to know the teaching of the Bible on this subject, I yet availed myself of such helps as came in my way. I secured and read the strongest works I could find, on both sides of the controversy, concerning the doom of the ungodly. Of course I found real arguments on each side, worthy of serious and prayerful consideration. But I was soon struck with the paucity of Scripture evidence to prove that millions of sentient beings will be immortal in misery. The overwhelming tide of testimony seemed to bear on the other side. I gathered up the strongest possible objections against the total destruction of the wicked, to see how formidable an array could be made. I found many of them could be easily demolished, and perhaps all of them made to harmonize with God's purpose to "burn up" the wicked, "root and branch." For two years I have been compelled to admit that the doctrine of endless torment is so terrible in itself, that no man should be expected to believe it without an array of evidence in its favor that is absolutely overwhelming. Such evidence I do not find. If two or three passages can be fairly disposed of, there is scarcely a word in the Bible that would ever suggest the doctrine of interminable woe. On the other hand, there are scores of passages that point strongly and clearly to the final extermination of all the wicked. What is the safe and sensible mode of harmonizing Scripture in such a case? Must the few be made to agree with the multitude? or the multitude with the few? Evidently the general tenor of scripture teaching [illegible] strong and clear. And yet old ideas and impressions would linger around.

But the chains are severed at last! The clearing-up shower descended a few days ago, while on my knees pleading with God for light. I am fully convinced that the devil and all his works will yet be destroyed; and the universe of God, so terribly marred by sin, will rise up out of the smoke and ruin, free from every element opposed to purity and love! O enrapturing thought! Transporting prospect! Glorious consummation! Eternal triumph! The plan of redemption will yet be a grand success! Millions of redeemed ones will be crowned as trophies of amazing grace; and all who would not come into the glorious plan will be accounted useless rubbish and cleared out of the way by the raging fires which God will kindle in the day of the sinner's doom! Praise God for being such a God! Praise him for devising such a wondrous plan of recovering mercy! The Bible possesses new charms. Harmony is restored. The last spot is removed from the shining face of the Sun. Hallelujah! I shall henceforth be a happier man! A. A. PHELPS.

THE GOOD SOLDIER.

It is one of the duties of a soldier to be "armed and equipped, as the law directs." It would not seem to be a hard task for a man to examine himself to see whether he was thus armed and equipped. "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God." 2 Cor. 10: 4. We are required to wear the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, and to take the shield of faith, and the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; and to have our "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." We have heard that "pride was a requisite element in the character of a soldier" who wars with carnal weapons. But the opposite of this is required of a soldier of Christ. He must be "clothed with humility." Then we must pray "ALWAYS with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit," and watch "thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints." See Eph. 6 It is thus that we must "fight the good fight of faith," that we may gain eternal life. Is not this an "exceeding great reward?" An inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, is reserved for every one of the faithful soldiers of the cross.

What are the foes with whom we fight? There are "fiery darts of the wicked" to be quenched; there are "strong holds," false reasonings, assumptions, "high things" that exalt themselves against the knowledge of God; there are mouths that must be stopped, not by the implements of the inquisition, or the spirit of Papacy, but but by "sound speech that cannot be condemned," and a spirit of "wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist." Praise the Lord. All your adversaries, though they are as numerous as the armies of Gog and Magog, and each man "a host in himself," all of them must fall before you. Lord, give us a single eye to thy glory, and help us to fight manfully. "Who is he that shall harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good," followers of Christ? There are wolves in sheep's clothing, who will cry out "persecution," when their false doctrines are assailed; but still we must let the arrows fly, and wield the glittering sword. We shall not wound each other unless we engage in "side issues." Let every soldier of Christ take courage. Gird on you armor anew, and keep your eye fixed upon the mark of the prize of your high calling. Look to Jesus, the author and finisher of your faith. Take good aim, load and fire, sending terror into the heart of the enemies of our King.

"Sure I must fight if I would reign,
Increase my courage, Lord!
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain,
Supported by thy word.

The saints in all this glorious war,
Shall conquer though they die;
They view the triumph from afar,
And faith presents it nigh."

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF JOHN CARTER.

And who is John Carter? The subject of this sketch was born at Coggshall, England, of humble parents, on the 31st of July, 1815. He was rather a wild, reckless youth, and wandered about with evil companions on the Lord's day, instead of attending church. When twenty-one years of age, he went with some others to rob the rookery of a well-known London banker. John Carter ascended first one of the tall trees in search of birds. When he had reached a height of about fifty feet, he missed his hold and fell to the ground upon his back. He was taken up senseless, and from that time never moved hand or foot. A serious injury to the spine had deprived him of all power of voluntary motion below the neck.

For a while the poor fellow's distress was great, in view of his utter helplessness; but at last the efforts on his behalf by sympathizing friends were effectual in bringing him to Christ, there to leave himself in self-abandonment, and accept the bitter cup placed to his lips, sweetened from henceforth with submission.

One day a little tract was brought to him, which gave an account of a young woman in some asylum at Liverpool, who had lost the use of her limbs, and used to amuse herself by drawing with her mouth. This suggested the idea that he might do the same; and he accordingly made the attempt. He drew sometimes upon a slate, and sometimes upon pieces of paper pinned to the pillow, working first with a pencil, and afterwards with water-colors. The first piece produced in this way was a butterfly. The insect was caught in the room, and a six-penny box of paints sent for, and the drawing made, an exact fac-simile of which is given in colors, which awakens our surprise at its correctness and beauty, considering the inexperience and helplessness of the artist. A fac-simile of one of his first efforts, a small rose branch with a half-opened bud, some leaves, and a very pretty bird standing on the branch, is really pretty, and naturally drawn. This is also in colors. A Syrian goat, a head piece, the Virgin and Child, wood-cut of our Lord, the sick horse, the head of a fox, are wonderful drawings, evincing superior talent, exquisite taste, and [illegible] hair-brush, and places it in his mouth, when, by a curious muscular action of his lips and tongue, he would twirl the brush round with great velocity, until he had thrown off all superfluous ink, and brought it to a very fine point. He then held it fast between his jaw-teeth, and by the motion of his head produced the most delicate and accurate strokes.

These illustrations before us were engraved in copper; for the engraver (Mr. Hall) said nothing else would do anything like justice to the beauty and excellency of his touch. The Queen of England has one of his drawings, and one—"A Rat Catcher with his Dogs"—has been on exhibition in New York, Boston, and Portland, the past year, and was highly eulogized by the press. In the beautiful volume before us, we have a likeness in gold leaf, on the cover, of John Carter, his head slightly elevated on the pillow, his easel before him, on which he is sketching a bust. The same is given as a frontispiece.

During the fourteen years of his paralysis, John Carter exhibited the fruits of true piety, and delighted in prayer and reading of the Scriptures. His death was hastened by a distressing accident. He was being drawn out for an airing, in a carriage prepared expressly for him, in which his couch could be laid; when, in consequence of the stumbling of the boy, who was guiding the carriage down a slight descent, the vehicle was upset, and Carter was severely bruised by the fall. He died the following month, June, 1850; but was sustained and comforted through the valley by the presence of his Savior.

This delightful biography, from the Riverside Press, Cambridge, and published by Hurd and Houghton, New York, will be read with intense interest by thousands, because of the wonderful talent and ingenuity of the person herein described. Truly,

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform,"

and behind the dark clouds of his Providence he reveals to his loved ones a smiling face.

CAST YOUR CARE ON GOD.

On the arm that faileth never,
Rest thy fears and burdens ever,
Rest thy weary heart reclining,
Hush thy spirit oft declining.
All thy murmured heart relentings,
All thy broken, lost repentings,
All thy load of vexing care,
Cast on Him who hears thy prayer.

Angels whisper to me gladly—
Hush thy heart oft murmuring sadly.
Child of dust! be thou believing,
Thankful for the gifts receiving;
Rest in God, and rest forever,
Rest that shall be broken never;
Enough to know his guarding care,
Rest in him who hears thy prayer.

Has the power creative failed thee?
Knew he not when foes assailed thee,
Felt he not the sin that stung thee,
Pitied oft when sorrow wrung thee,
Heard thy often piteous groaning,
When thou wast thy Lord disowning?
Cling to God, his blessings share,
Consecrate thy heart in prayer.

Short will be thy night of sorrow,
Soon will dawn life's endless morrow;
Soon the arm that wrought salvation,
Will redeem each holy nation,
Plant the throne of Judah's Lion
On the holy hill of Zion;
Glory's deep to deep shall call,
For God will then be all in all.

ANTICIPATION OF EVIL.

Half the evils over which humanity is daily groaning are but imaginary. If mental pain were a thing that could be weighed or measured, it would probably be found that the greater share of what rational beings endure, arises not from recollection of past misery; not from present distress, but from anticipation of future evil—of "borrowed trouble." Borrowing is bad in all its tendencies; and to borrow trouble is the weakest of all sinful, human weaknesses. For a disciple of Christ to do this implies doubt and a lack of faith in the promises of God; and indirectly denies his loving kindness, which has ever been manifested toward us. It shows a want of confidence in him who has promised "never to leave . . . nor forsake us," and "my grace is sufficient for thee," and "no good thing will I withhold from them that walk uprightly." What need will not these promises meet? and all may be obtained by asking in faith; in a word, simply believe. Therefore, while we have a Father in heaven, who careth for us, and provides every needed blessing, why are we ever foreboding evil, and refusing to take God at his word? His promises can never fail—not once; and we sin against him, and deserve his anger while we murmur and worry about the dim future—the spectre evils are a mere hallucination of the mind. How it must grieve our righteous Father, as he looks upon his professed children and sees their dissatisfaction, and hears their murmurings over present blessings, and unjust fears about a future they can neither understand nor control.

The anticipation of evil arises from various causes, in a general sense; but the main cause is a lack of faith and trust in God. Some incividuals are naturally trusting and hopeful from childhood. My earliest experience has been such; and I know it was because I believed in the existence of a God who was all-powerful, all-wise, and would govern the work of his hands according to his will. Though a sinner, I believed God, and trusted in his promised mercies. I did not believe because I thought it a sin to doubt, but because I couldn't help it. But when I came to "believe with the heart unto righteousness" then I considered it a sin to doubt. We have the promise of salvation only as we believe and are baptized.

The past tells us that "coming events cast their shadows before;" admitting this to be a fact, we need not be frightened at the shadows, for ofttimes

The shadows are longer and darker by far
Than the object that projects them;
So our evils, while viewed from a distance, are
More ominous, dark, and threatning.

The simile is to my thinking; others have a right to dissent if they choose.

How often we are unable to enjoy present blessings through fear they will soon be taken from us. The presence of a friend makes us gloomy as the hour of parting approaches. We do not enjoy the present for looking into the future. 'Tis the future that's ever shrouded in mystery; hence we, lacking faith, deem it all dark with evil. But as time rolls onward, and days, months and years pass, we fail to recognize in them the approach of so much dreaded [illegible] overtake them, they may prove to be no more an evil than did the disciples' ghost or spirit on the water. It was fear that saw the ghost; when fear was dispelled, they saw only their beloved Christ.

Hope is given us as a counterbalance to this painful trial of fear. Faith is her twin sister, and they ever go hand in hand. Fear is the reverse of both; is ever on the alert, is in constant dread. Hope thinks no evil, but desires and expects good under all circumstances, however trying. Man's spirit usually vibrates between hope and fear; but if hope were entirely removed; if evils now dreaded were regarded as certain, what an impenetrable cloud of gloom would brood over life. Thank God we are not left thus comfortless. We have a blessed hope, big with immortality, and we may and ought to have a faith that will lay hold on the promises of God; that will banish doubt and fear, and cause us to be ashamed to anticipate evil, while he has promised only good to those who love, serve, and obey him.

— Many lose the opportunity of saying a kind thing, by waiting to weigh the matter too long. Our best impulses are too delicate to endure much handling. THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT.

THEOLOGICAL DOCTRINES.

1. God is satisfied with his works.—"And God saw everything that he had made, and behold it was very good." Gen. 1: 31.

God is dissatisfied with his works.—"And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart." Gen. 6: 6.

The above is the first specimen of the so-called "Self-Contradictions of the Bible." Gen. 1: 31. and Gen. 6: 6, are the first martyrs to be crucified upon the cross of modern skepticism. But we trust they can be rescued by a fair trial. Does it follow that because God was satisfied with the workmanship of his hand, in the morn of earth's creation, that he must be satisfied with all the sin and wickedness of man for 1500 years thereafter? The text in Gen. 1: 31 applies to the time when the earth was filled with wickedness and crime—when man stood in open defiance to God and his law. And so far as the Lord's repenting because he had made man is concerned, we would remark that repentance in the Bible means a "turning from a thing," and agreeable to this definition God turned from preserving man on the earth and destroyed him by the flood of waters, because of his sins against him. Such repentance, God has shown in the overthrow of nations for their transgressions after having been sustained by him until they fillled up their cup of iniquity. Hence the apparent contradiction is harmonized.

2. God dwells in chosen temples.—"And the Lord appeared to Solomon by night, and said unto him: I have heard thy prayer, and have chosen this place to myself for a house of sacrifice. . . . For now have I chosen and sanctified this house, that my name may be there forever; and mine eyes and my heart shall be there perpetually." 2 Chron. 7: 12, 16.

God dwells not in temples.—"Howbeit the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands." Acts 7: 48.

There is not even an apparent contradiction here [illegible] an house of sacrifice, and as having the name and approval of God under the legal dispensation of Moses. The Queen of Britain rules the province of the Canadas, which is under her control, but it does not follow that she resides there. This, we think, very aptly illustrates the above passage, and must to every candid mind obviate the difficulty, if any exists. God made the temple at Jerusalem, the place of sacrifice, and he is represented as having his name and heart there continually, but the presumption that therefore he must personally dwell there, seems to betray more weakness of discernment in our infidel compiler, than contradiction between the texts he has tried to array against each other.

3. God dwells in light.—"Dwelling in light which no man can approach unto." 1 Tim. 6: 18.

God dwells in darkness.—"The Lord said he would dwell in thick darkness." 1 Kings 8: 12. "He made darkness his secret place." Ps. 97: 2.

The Lord creates both light and darkness, either of which may be the dwelling-place of his power, and though light eternal surrounds his throne, may he not manifest his presence in the "thick darkness," or in the cloud of storm? It may be said of man that he dwells in light, and then again he dwells in darkness, for each twenty-four hours presents these two conditions; and yet no one would infer that there must be a contradiction, because he thus alternately dwells in each. In like manner we may speak relatively of God, and say his dwelling-place is amid the realms of eternal light, but when he manifests his power, makes "darkness pavilions round about him." See 2 Sam. 22: 12. In order for the skeptic to sustain his position, he must show that God dwells only in light—then prove he dwells in darkness, but the Scripture will admit of no such construction, hence it does not contradict itself.—"The Bible Triumphnnt," by Mrs. H. V. Reed.

A SUNNY TEMPER.—You gain nothing by fretting; you only waste your strength by it. Choose your work, plan as skillfully as you can, put your whole heart into what you are about to do, and leave the rest to a kind Providence that overlooks not a single one of us. Do you know how many years of your life and happiness is mortgaged by the habit of worrying? And, after all, what does it accomplish? How does it help you on? How much strength does it bring to you in your labors and exertion? A ruffled temper all the time throws to the surface the mire and dirt of one's nature; it does not combine the best elements, and help them to work together to the best advantage, but only the worst, and gives them alone all the chance.

"THE LAMBS OF JESUS."

And is it true, as I am told,
That there are lambs within the fold
Of God's beloved Son?
That Jesus Christ with tender care
Will in his arms most gently bear
The helpless little one?

And I, a little straying lamb,
May come to Jesus as I am,
Though goodness I have none;
May now be folded in his breast,
As birds within the parent's nest,
And be his little one?

"ONE HEART HAPPY."

"Mother, mother, I have made one heart happy to-day," said little Willie, as he came bounding in from school one lovely summer afternoon and threw his arms about her neck, imprinting a sweet kiss upon her pale cheek. "Yes, mother, I have made one heart happy to-day;" and his his little bosom heaved with an honest pride and delight which caused his bright eyes to sparkle, and a rosy smile to play upon his dimpled cheek.

Little Willie was a bright, active boy, on whose loving countenance seven summers had smiled, leaving new beauties as their visible impress, and a reward for the warm heart beating beneath. His widowed mother, on whom the whole care of his training from infancy had devolved, was called to exercise great discretion properly to curb his naturally hasty temper, and to bring it into due subjection to wholesome restraint, and thus mold it for the accomplishment of some noble end in life—to love rather than hate—to do good rather than evil. And well had the mother done her task. He was a child of many prayers and much faithful instruction, and the good seed thus sown unsparingly, and watered with a mother's tears, had fallen in good soil, and was just beginning to spring up with a promise of an abundant harvest. The oft-repeated counsel that he ought always to try to make some heart happy each day had for once been heeded, and she rejoiced in the thought, and inwardly thanked her heavenly Father that she had lived to see her darling boy so loving and dutiful as he had been of late, and especially that happy day.

"Are you sure, Willie," she said, after a slight pause, "you have made one heart happy to-day?"

"Yes, mother; she said so, and thanked me, O, so many times!"

"Who was it you made happy? and what did you do for her?"

"It was Aunty, mother—Aunty Wilson, who lives in the house by the brook. I went in there when I went to school, and she said she had been looking out of the window to see the beautiful flowers and the little children plucking them; but she was old and lame, and she couldn't pick them as she used to, and as she had no boy nor girl to pick them for her, she had to be content with looking at them from her window. So at noon I went and got all the prettiest ones I could find and carried them to her; and she was so glad, and said God would bless me, for I had made one poor heart happy; that the flowers were very sweet; but she was soon going to a land where there are far sweeter flowers that never fade. Did she mean Paradise, mother?"

"Yes, my dear."

"May I get flowers for her every day, mother, and some of those nice ones from our nice little garden, that I may make her happy again?"

"Yes, my child, as often and as many as you wish; and I trust the remembrance of this day may cause you ever to strive to make some heart happy daily, and then it cannot be said that you lived wholly in vain."

"I will try, mother," he said, and his blue eyes filled with tears—tears of mingled sympathy and joy; sympathy for the disconsolate and suffering, and joy that even he could be of some service—little boy that he was—in making earth's weary and lonely hearts happy. Yes, and it was a blessed privilege. He had made one heart happy that day; and not one only, for the simple story of that little act of childish thoughtfulness and kindness had made a mother's heart happy also. Did not the brightening eyes, the sweet smile, and the earnest recital, tell his fond mother that his own heart beat lighter, and was happier [illegible] three hearts happy that day. The flowers which caused it might wither, but before that happened one more unfading flower was blossoming in three hearts, and sweetening life with its precious fragments.

Blessed privilege, indeed, to make one heart happy each day! Is there one who cannot or will not strive to do it? There is sunshine enough—there are flowers enough—there is perfume enough in this world of ours to make every heart happy, and sweeten every bitter cup, if there be always ready some kind word or act to unlock the avenues there, and open them to the reception of those blessed gifts. If every one would live for this, what a blessed world this would be! a little heaven below—every house a temple of praise, and every heart an exhaustless fountain of joy!

Let all live, then, so that each night they may say, "I have made one heart happy to-day."—Congregationalist.

A WORD ABOUT SWEET HOME.

"There is one spot upon the earth
Far sweeter than the rest;
There is one spot we all must own,
The brightest and the best."

Little readers, have you a home—pleasant, peaceful, happy? Oh! what a blessing! Do you realize it—are you thankful for it? Multitudes of little folks have no place they can call home. Others, again, have a place of turmoil and wretchedness, poverty and ruin. But a home that is a home in very deed is a heaven on earth, a little paradise. Was there ever a word that fell more delightfully on the ear than "Home, sweet home?"

"What thronging memories come!
Again that little group have met
Within the walls of home."

No spot on earth has the charms like that of home. Friends may be kind and minister to our necessities, our physical wants may be cared for; but still the heart longs for the sympathies of home.

"But there's a home, a happy home,
Where wayworn travelers meet."

O glorious home, the home of heaven, the christian's home, where sorrow and sighing, sickness and death, and, best of all, sinning can never come. There the saints of God shall meet, and part no more forever. "There we shall see Jesus," and be like him, for we shall see him as he is. Though the weary heart may find no resting-place on earth, "There's rest in heaven," when the toils and labors of earth are ended.

CHICAGO'S LITTLE MARTYR.

The story of Knud Iverson, a little Swedish lad who suffered martyrdom in the cause of christianity in Chicago, cannot be too often related, nor his praises too highly sung. And yet there are thousands who now throng our streets to whom his tragical fate and his remarkable fidelity to principles are unknown.

Knud Iverson was, in the summer of 1853, drowned in the Chicago river by a number of wicked boys, because he refused to accompany them to steal apples from the trees of a gentleman who resided in the neighborhood. In vain the poor little fellow, whose age was only twelve years, pleaded the requirements of the decalogue, the lessons of his instructors, and the dictators of conscience. To dissuade them from their evil purpose was simply impossible. His earnestness merely served to awaken their dormant depravity. They threatened him with submersion in the river while they reviled him; and when he continued to plead against their wickedness, with every refusal they plunged him into the stream, pushing him farther down into the dark waters, until death released him from his tormentors. His love of life, of fond parents, of affectionate brothers and sisters, and of his revered teachers, could not tempt him. in that brief but bitter trial, to step aside from the path of rectitude; and while his family, his pastor, his Sunday-school, and many sympathizing friends, wept over his remains, they derived great comfort from the glory which attended his departure.

His martyrdom became the theme of every periodical, and his example was held as a shining light before the pupils of every Sunday school. An effort to perpetuate his virtues by erecting a monument in some public place in Chicago, however, resulted in failure, owing to the negligence of those to whom its management was intrusted. The subsequent history of his murderers is shrouded in darkness.—Mat. Hawthon.

GOOD COMPANY.

It was a very dark, rainy night. Our boys, prayer-meeting had just closed, and Henry stopped to tell me a word of hope about one of our class for whom we had long been praying. As I went to the door and looked out into the darkness and rain I said:

"Harry, I am almost afraid to have you go so far alone this dark night. Is there no one going your way?"

He looked up with a bright smile and answered: "O, I am to have good company! I shall not be alone."

"Then your father or our brother are in town. are they?"

"No. Better company than that."

"Who can it be?"

"Why, the one whom we met at prayer-meeting, the Savior. You know he says (you read it to-night) 'I am with you alway.'"

"So you think you will not be lonely or afraid?"

"No, indeed. Christ is good company, and he has promised to take care of me always. Good night."

As I stood looking out into the darkness, after Henry's departure, I thought, this is not the first time a child's faith has reproved me. Henry is not afraid to go anywhere, for Christ will go with him. Why should he fear? Why should I? He believes Christ is ever at his side, though unseen to the natural eye. Christ is real to him; truly present; and so he will be to all his children as they walk through the darkness of this world.

The next day, meeting Harry, I said, "Did you have a pleasant walk last night?"

"O, delightful!" he answered. "It seemed as if Christ was with me all the way. He is blessed company in the darkness or in the light, isn't he, teacher?"

"Indeed he is, Harry, and may his presence always go with you as now."

THE BAD MARK.

A man came to a master workman of a large establishment to get a situation for a neighbor's boy.

"I've got a new boy for you," he said to the foreman.

"Glad of it," "who is he?"

The neighbor mentioned his name and residence.

"Don't want him," said the master, promptly. "He's got a bad mark. I meet him every day with a cigar in his mouth. I don't want smokers."

It was a bad mark indeed for a boy, though I dare say he thought it made him appear smart and manlike. It was certainly like the men one sees about the benches and doors of taverns and liquor shops.

They usually have a cigar or an old pipe stuck in their mouths. But they are not very good models for our your men and boys. They can find a great deal better one.—Ex.

"A LITTLE WHILE."

"A little while, and ye shall not see me; and again a little while, and ye shall see me; because I go to the Father."—1 JOHN 16: 16.

A little while, the Savior said,
Ye shall behold me here no more;
And yet a little while, he said,
Your eyes shall see me and adore.
What words are these his lips declare,
The language comes with mystic tone;
A little while, and I am here,
A little while, and I am gone.

A little while, my mortal life
Will pass and I am here no more;
The awful battle fought, the strife
With sin and Satan will be o'er.
A little while, and these glad eyes
Shall view my resurrection day,
Shall see me from the grave arise,
And soar to kingdoms far away.

Oh, when this heart is desolate,
And desolate it often feels,
"A little while" at Jesus' feet,
Like music o'er my spirit steals.
And when the world with crushing care,
Would rob me of my wanted rest,
A little while his words declare,
And ye shall see me and be blest.

O, may my doubts of unbelief
Be banished at this precious word,
And through each scene of woe and grief,
May each sweet syllable be heard;
And when the hour of death is near,
Amid its sharpest pains I'll smile,
If only those blest tones I hear—
It is but for a little while.

RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED.

BY L. C. COLLINS.

I have lately been reading with much interest several works, kindly sent me by friends, in favor of the non-resurrection of the wicked. I can but accord to the works I have read a truly Christian spirit, and admire the earnest manner in which they advocate their peculiar views. Neither do I regard these views as containing in themselves any thing that should sunder the bonds of Christian fellowship between brethren looking for the soon coming of the Master, and agreeing in the great question of the final and utter destruction of all the wicked in the end. It seems so desirable that all interested in the Advent cause should keep the unity of the Spirit, and show to both the church and the world the true spirit of Christian toleration, that I feel all minor views, or side issues, should be held in abeyance, and presented so in love as never to create the least dissensions among those who should in the fullest sense be brethren.

To me at least the above views put up no bar to the fellowship of those who entertain them. It rather seems to me that it is their great kindness of heart, their benevolence toward the sinning race, that has inclined them to their present view. But I am unable to adopt it as the doctrine of the Scriptures.

A principal evil resulting from its advocacy appears to be the great prejudice it creates in the minds of many against the doctrine of the advent at hand. For if so plain and positive declarations as those of Christ and Paul, asserting the resurrection of all the dead, can be set aside or explained away, the feeling is, that one must give up all confidence in the teachings of the Bible, or keep clear of all such interpreters of it. And this feeling is transferred at once to the leading doctrines of the Advent faith.

Neither can I rid myself of the feeling that it is not the doctrine of the Scriptures. To my mind the Bible all through teaches that sin is positively to be punished. But if there be no resurrection of the wicked, I see no way in which they are punished in any sense in which the righteous are not equally involved, and the one punished just as actually as the other. Now God's providence marks no clear distinction in his dealings between the righteous and wicked in this life. An argument drawn from Providence to prove that sin is punished here, would make the righteous the greater sufferers, and hence the greater sinners. The Bible recognizes the fact, too, that the wicked are often prospered, and have here their good things, while afflictions are meted out to the righteous, and through much tribulation they enter the kingdom of God. And few, I think, will claim that remorse of conscience is the punishment, as it is so manifest that the more a man sins, the less on this ground is he punished.

If it be said that death is the punishment of sin, I freely admit it; but I cannot see how that NATURAL DEATH can be claimed as a fulfillment of the penalty. If all the righteous were translated, then it would be manifestly clear; but, inasmuch as death reigned over all, from Adam to Moses, and has reigned from Moses until now, the righteous and wicked lying entombed side by side in one common grave, I see not yet how one is punished different from the other; or how they can be only on the ground of a general resurrection. Until then the righteous do not receive their reward, and until then I do not see how the wicked can suffer their doom.

Death in its infliction upon the sinner as a penalty for sin, must be entirely distinct from any thing visited upon the righteous. Otherwise what meaning can there be in these unqualified expressions of the Bible? "The soul that sinneth it shall die. The wicked shall be turned into hell: shall be cut off, burned up, be consumed, and perish." If all these threatenings are fulfilled when the sinner dies a natural death, they fall equally upon the righteous, and both pass equally under the punishment of the law against sin. The very nature of the penalty is the same in both cases. Now it seems absurd to talk about a penalty for sin, and that this penalty is death, when no distinction is made in its infliction, and no difference whatever in its affecting the two classes, save in its duration.

Now are not the righteous to be saved entirely from all the threatened punishment of the wicked for the transgression of God's law? So the Scriptures teach. "Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked." "It shall not come nigh thee." The righteous are "delivered from the wrath to come"; they "escape," and "shall never perish," and "shall never die." This does not mean "not eternally," but not at all, in any sense that these are threatened upon the wicked. "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die." Now this cannot mean natural death; they would die this any way. It is a death they might entirely escape, if they lived after the Spirit. It must be the second death; and the righteous are saved FROM it, not OUT OF it.

To evade this difficulty, it is claimed that the death of the righteous is only a "suspension of life," while that of the wicked is an "extinction of life." This certainly is making a distinction where the Bible and reason make none. The righteous have as fully passed under the power of death, and "see corruption," by virtue of the one great law of "death" that "hath passed upon all men," as have the wicked. So far as natural death is concerned, they have perished alike. The distinction is yet to be made when they come forth from the grave, the one to a resurrection of life, and the other to a resurrection of condemnation.

That there is any quickening Spirit cleaving to the dust of the righteous in any way different from that of the wicked, by virtue of which they shall be raised up, is certainly a misconception of the apostle's words, "that our mortal bodies shall be quickened by his Spirit that dwelleth in us." God is with his people here by his indwelling Spirit; witnessing with their spirits that they are his children, and that he will raise them up by the power of his Spirit, to be his in the world to come. But the same almighty power will be required to raise the one class as the other. The resurrection must virtually be a re-creation, by the same power that at first formed man of the dust of the earth, irrespective of any germ or living principle still adhering to the earthly dust. In no natural or Bible sense can death be viewed in any other light than as an extinction of life, perfect and complete.

If death be called a sleep, it is but to teach us, by a figure, that the dead shall again be brought back to life as before, and possess the same conscious identity of being as though but just awakened out of a sleep. The term is a positive assurance of a resurrection; without this it would be not only meaningless, but erroneous. Will it be urged that the righteous alone are said to sleep? Does not the Bible declare that the death of all men is "as a sleep"; "that God turneth man to destruction and sayest, Return, ye children of men"; and that even the rebellious Jeroboam and wicked Ahab, when they died, "slept with their fathers"? In death, it is true of all men that "the dust returns to the earth as it was, and the spirit [or life] returns unto God who gave it." That the believer is said to "sleep in Christ," and that his "life is hid with Christ in God," is a glorious assurance of a resurrection to eternal life.

The reward of the righteous and wicked stands inseparably connected in point of time, and show that the one is no more rewarded at death than the other. Do not the same Scriptures that teach that the righteous will be crowned, and enter together upon eternal life, teach just as plainly that the wicked will receive their sentence, and together sink down to endless death? "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, then shall he reward every man according to his works." And not before.

In view of such declarations in the Bible, repeated over and over, are we to suppose the vile of every age are to slip out of existence without ever being arraigned to know that they are adjudged to death as a punishment for their sins? Whatever may be the mode of the judgment, how can we suppose that less is meant by such a term than that each human being will know its decisions and the results of his probation? These facts certainly stand out most clearly in the scenes of the judgment, as depicted by Daniel and Christ, and by Paul and John. When Christ gathers before him all nations, are we to suppose this only includes the living of earth when he comes? Will not the dead all be there? When he shall say to those on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you," will not all the righteous, raised from their beds, from Abel down through all the ages, be there? Will one be missing then? And when he shall say to those upon the left hand, "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire," will not the "unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars," be there too? Shall not all these votaries of crime and sin hear and know their doom? Is their presence to be lacking, and the counterpart to fail? Will death and hell, the land and the sea, keep back? Nay. Living and dead, small and great, those whose names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life, and those who are not, will be there. All will be assembled then, and each for himself hear the words, "Come, ye blessed"! or, "Depart, ye cursed"!—Voice of the West.

(To be concluded.)

A TERRIBLY TORTURED TEXT.

BY A. A. PHELPS.

Perhaps no passage in the whole Bible is more unfairly handled by the adherents of modern theology than Luke 20: 37, 38. "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him." The last part of this passage was selected by Rev. Alvah Hovey, D. D., of the Newton Theological Seminary (Baptist), as the foundation of asermon recently preached in Worcester, Mass., on the conscious state of the dead. He of course argued that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, are now enjoying a blissful consciousness in the "middle state," because the Lord is their God, and "all live unto him."

To corroborate this position he adduced the usual collection of supposed Scripture proofs, such as Christ preaching to the "spirits in prison," the rich man and Lazarus, the thief on the cross, Stephen's prayer, and Paul's desire to depart. He deprecated the evil effect of teaching or believing that the dead are unconscious, as calculated to remove the restraints of virtue and lead to violence and suicide. "Let it but appear," he said, "that the Bible teaches unconsciousness after death, and the terrors of the future, as depicted so fully in Hamlet's soliloquy, in a great measure disappear."

It is said that "the sermon was listened to with deep interest;" but whether the terrors of Hamlet's soliloquy, or the truths of God's revelation, had the greater influence, is not certainly known.

I was not a little surprised, a few months ago, to see a similar argument from the pen of a Methodist editor. He gave the following syllogistic exposition of the passage above quoted:

1. God is a God of the living, and not of the dead.

2. But he is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

3. Therefore, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are now living.

That looks a little like logic, but does it contain one grain of Bible truth? Is it not a gross perversion of Scripture—a terrible torturing of Christ's words, to prove exactly the opposite of what he intended to teach? I believe the reasoning is purely sophistical, and the conclusion wholly unwarranted. The above treatment of this passage is such as honest criticism ough to be ashamed to adopt. The entire discourse relates to a single point—the resurrection of the dead. The Sadducees disbelieved, this doctrine which had been made so prominent in the Savior's preaching. They endeavored to undermine this great, fundamental pillar of the new religion, by resorting to what logicians call argumentum ad absurdum. They supposed that the perplexing case of seven husbands to one wife would involve the resurrection theory in inextricable difficulties, and thus deal out a staggering blow to their Pharisaic rivals. Jesus quickly demolished this objection by showing that marriage is only a temporary arrangement, to be swallowed up in the overwhelming glories of the resurrection state. He then adduced a direct argument to prove the resurrection of the dead. No language could show more explicitly that this is the very object in view. "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham," etc. The appeal to Moses wasespecially in point, as the Sadducees acknowledged the divine authority of the Mosaic record.

If the conscious existence of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob be admitted, how does Jesus prove the point in view—"that the dead are raised"? This very assumption makes his argument perfectly futile. The patriarchs referred to were actually dead. But God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. Yet he is positively called their God. How can this be true, unless these sleeping worthies are to be made alive by a resurrection from the dead? The present tense is used for the future, as is commonly the case in general propositions. Thrown into logical form, the argument stands thus:

1. God is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

2. But Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are now dead; and God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.

3. Therefore, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob must have a resurrection (in common with all men, "for all live unto him"), and not remain eternally dead, as the Sadducees teach.

This is the simple truth which Jesus sought to prove. Did he succeed? Most gloriously. If modern theologians cannot find the resurrection plainly taught in this passage, let them know that their theological ancestors—the Sadducees—were not so obtuse. They saw the point, and were speechless. This simple syllogism from the Master's mouth effectually spiked the anti-resurrection cannon.

The passage under consideration, so far from proving the conscious state of the dead, clearly proves the opposite. If the argument needs any additional strength, it may be found in the perfect silence which the Sadducees maintained in regard to an intermediate state of consciousness between death and the resurrection. If Jesus had given any countenance to such a belief, why did not these crafty men take advantage of it, by asking what relation the oft-widowed wife sustained to her husbands during the intermediate state? This would have been equally perplexing to Christ, and the objection, if sustained, would have borne with double weight against the Pharisees, as embracing two articles in their creed instead of one. But not the most distant allusion do we find to any such "middle state," for the obvious reason that Christ had never taught that dead folks were alive at the same time! There was no question, however, that Jesus fully believed and clearly taught a resurrection from the dead. Hence the Sadducees proceeded at once to the resurrection, as the period when life and action are to be resumed. What a pity that men will not treat the doctrines of Christ as fairly as even the quibbling Sadducees of his own day! Let us not make the Lord Jesus Christ responsible for doctrines which he either wholly ignored or heartily repudiated!—Voice.

IMMORTALITY.

Is man by nature an immortal being? To many readers the question doubtless appears strange and startling enough. We are so accustomed to be addressed from the pulpit, and through the press, as "immortal beings," and to be accredited with the possession of "never-dying souls," that to have the assumption of our natural immortality called in question, is at once a shock to our pride, and an offence to our 'orthodoxy.' Yet, we are enabled to enumerate below ten separate publications, ranging from the modest pamphlet to the octavo volume, and eight of them published within the last four years, in all of which we find this popular belief called in question; and that, be it observed, not by scoffing infidels, or materialist philosophers, but by clergymen of the Church of England, and evangelical nonconformist ministers, all of them, so far as their works enable us to judge, devout and earnest christian men, sound in all the essential doctrines of the Christian faith, and who, without exception, make their ultimate and most reverent appeal to God's inspired word.

Are they right or are they wrong? The question, be the conclusion what it may, demands a serious and satisfactory answer. It can no longer be quietly ignored as of little importance. It will not be stifled by the convenient but uncharitable cries of 'heresy' and 'rationalism.' It is beyond all doubt a question of great and growing importance, just because it virtually involves the further question, 'What is the nature and duration of the future punishment of the lost?' And he must be indeed blind to the signs of times who does not perceive, day by day, with increasing clearness that around this latter question the boldness of modern speculation, and the remorselessness of modern criticism, are concentrating themselves in avowed hostility against the orthodoxy of by-gone ages. Behind very much of the recent discussion on the nature of inspiration, and the divine authority of Scripture, lies this ulterior problem, of human destiny; nor is it at all too much to say that there is, at the present moment, no question within the whole range of theological inquiry attracting such deep and earnest attention, even among the most orthodox christians; nor one in reference to which religious opinion is drifting so widely and steadily. "A generation hence," says the Rev. W. L. Clay, incumbent of Rainhill, "educated christians will be as incapable of believing in endless perdition as they now are of believing in the diurnal revolution of the sun round the earth." And though this may be regarded as an extreme and incautious statement. yet it expresses with tolerable accuracy the opinion of many thoughtful and not irreligious minds. The question, then, presses: it can no longer, we repeat, be ignored; and to taboo it in a magazine like the Rainbow, having "special reference to the revealed future of the church and the world," certainly seems a curious, and not altogether creditable anomaly. Surely, none of us can be willing to admit that our faith in this matter, whatever it may be, is so delicate and fragile a flower that we fear lest the least wind of controversy should shed its petals on the ground; or of so volatile and inconstant an essence that it must be kept fast sealed in the dark vessel of a rigid dogma, lest, if the vessel be opened for examination, it should vanish at once into thin air.

The writers of the ten works enumerated, while differing among themselves on some points of detail, and in regard to the interpretation of a few texts of Scripture, are thoroughly at one in their enunciation of the three following general conclusions:—

I. They all maintain, in the first place, that man is, as to his whole nature, a mortal creature, and that no satisfactory evidence in support of the 'orthodox' doctrines of the immortality of the soul, and the necessary eternal existence of all men, can be adduced, either from reason or revelation. A few of their statements on this important point we shall here adduce:——"When a man seriously asks himself," says Mr. Dobney, "why he holds that all men, without exception, will live for ever—that every creature that has had the human form will be coeval with him 'who alone hath immortality'—he replies that every body believes it of course, that philosophers have constructed famous arguments that demonstrate it, and that Scripture abundantly proclaims it. But, in the mood I have suggested, obvious reply will not satisfy as it once did; for, as to the arguments of the schools, he knows them impossible logically to prove the immortality of man, and that he has only to throw the most famous arguments, from the days of Plato downward, into their logical form, for the fallacy lurking therein to become patent. Besides, as a christian man, recognizing the sufficiency of the Scriptures, and devoutly accepting the Sixth Article of the Church of England on the subject, he considers that he is not bound to linger in the schools, or to be biased by the teachings of philosophers—who moreover argue some one way and some another—before placing himself at the feet of those 'holy men of God who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost,' and, above all, at the feet of our blessed Lord himself.

"The men of whom I am speaking, coming afresh to the study of the Scriptures, have been struck with the silence of the Bible on this point of an absolute and unconditional immortality for all men. They find nothing in the book at all akin to the popular language on the subject. In company with prophets and apostles alone, they breathe quite another atmosphere, and find quite other light shining on their path. For, from the first page of Genesis, wherein they find the man assured by God that if he eat of the forbidden tree he shall 'surely die,' yet credulously listening to the serpent's lie, 'ye shall not surely die,' and subsequently removed from the garden 'lest he put forth his hand, and take of the tree of life, and live for ever;'—I say, from the beginning to the end, they think they find the Scriptures adopting one uniform tone. Simply disembarrassing themselves of the portentous assumption of a universal and uncontingent immortality (originating to some extent, possibly, in man's pride.) they find themselves free to interpret the Scriptures more naturally than before. Instead of obscurity, there is plainness.; instead of apparently hopeless contradiction, there is agreement; for they say that 'death' is death, and 'life' is life, and 'destruction' is destruction, and that 'perishing' means perishing" (pp. 19, 20.)

"Search the Bible from beginning to end," writes Mr. Davis, in his small but weighty volume, "and nowhere will you find sinners addressed as immortal beings. I do not mean as beings who survive the grave, but as absolutely immortal, or endowed with eternal life. Common as as it is to do so in sermons, they are never warned in Scripture as they value their immortal souls to shun sin, never warned there, as they value their immortal souls, to repent and believe in Jesus Christ. The great Teacher, who came down from heaven, did on no single occasion address men as naturally imperishable; neither did any one of his apostles."

But it may be asked, 'If this be so, how did the popular doctrine ever originate, and how came it to be so universally accepted in the Christian church?' The answer is given by Mr. Constable in his most admirable and masterly pamphlet, which, in a cheaper edition, we most heartily wish could be circulated by tens of thousands through the length and breadth of the land. He says:—

"Before the preaching of the gospel, the highest order of heathen intellect had framed for its satisfaction a theory of the immortality of the soul. While the generality of heathen philosophers taught that death was for all an eternal sleep, there were 'high spirits of old' that strained their eyes to see, beyond the clouds of time, the dawning of immortality. Unable, as we are able, to connect it with God as its source, and with his promise as our assurance, they framed the idea of an immortality, self-existing in the soul itself. Plato, in his 'Phædo,' has given us the marvellous reasoning of Socrates, and Cicero has exhibited the argument in his 'Tusculan Questions.' According to it, the soul is possessed of an inherent immortality. It is of necessity eternal. It could have no end, no death. What was true of one soul, was true of all souls alike, whether good or bad. They must exist somewhere, be it in Tartarus or Cocytus, in Pyriphlegethon, or the happy abodes of the purified. This sublime philosophical idea passed readily and early into the theology of the Christian Church. We find it running throughout the reasoning of Tertullian and Augustine. Heedless of Paul's warning voice against philosophy, they became the feeble apes of Plato. They applied their theology, as he his theology, to all souls alike—to those of the reprobate as of the redeemed. They taught that the life of the former must be as eternal as that of the latter.

"To this view the declarations of Scripture relative to future punishment were attached, and by it these declarations were moulded. The eternity of this punishment, and the many passages which speak of life and pain as existing, at least in some classes of the damned, in hell, were joined to the heathen doctrine of the immortality of the soul; and hence was formed the plausible and generally accepted view, that not only was future punishment eternal, but that it also consisted in eternal life spent in eternal pain. The fears of mankind, and the laudable desire on the part of christian teachers to warn by the most terrible of all denunciations, filled in this awful description of the future of the lost. The utter callousness to suffering produced by the long reign of heathen cruelty, and shared to some extent even by the christian mind of the period, bore it without a shudder, if not with positive satisfaction.

"The foundation of this theory was a mere fancy; that which gave continuity to its parts but a rope of sand. The essential immortality of the soul was, as Pliny called it, a figment. Its inherent fallacy will be to its apparent from the fact that it involved of necessity a past eternity of the soul as much as a future. Cicero gives it expression when he says of the soul, 'It can neither be born nor can it die.' Some of the fathers, shunning the first part of the proposition, eagerly adopted the second. They were just as wrong as, only less consistent than, the heathen thinkers. Others, judging more truly, rejected all idea of any essential immortality of the soul. Scripture denies the entire proposition; its second part as much as its first.

The result of this adoption and absorption of the heathen doctrine of natural immortality into the Christian church has been most disastrous. As Mr Minton well says, "To a heathen it was little matter whether he believed in the immortality of the soul or not. Christianity was poisoned by the infusion." And "there must, in truth," to use the words of Mr. Barlow, "be divine vitality in the christian faith, when in the face of such a creed as this, it has been able to survive."

The charge of "novelty" brought by some of the more ignorant opponents of the doctrine held by the writers before us, cannot be sustained. Besides the references given by Mr. Constable to Justin Martyr and Irenæus, the fact is that the Apologists, as a class, did not believe in the natural immortality of the soul; and from one of their number—Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, writing in the second century, we have a statement of this "novel" doctrine as precise and explicit as can be found in any of our recent publications. The passage is so admirable and so important, that we can not refrain from quoting it:—"But some one will say to us, was man made by nature mortal? Certainly not. Was he, then, immortal? Neither do we affirm this. But one will say, was he, then, nothing? Not even this hits the mark. He was by nature neither mortal nor immortal. For if he (God) had made him immortal from the beginning, he would have made him God. Again, if he had made him mortal, God would seem to be the cause of his death. Neither, then, immortal nor yet mortal did he make him, but, as we have said above, capable of both; so that if he should incline to the things of immortality, keeping the commandments of God, he should receive as reward from him immortality, and so become God; but if, on the other hand, he should turn to the things of death, disobeying God, he should himself be the cause of death to himself: for God made him free, and with power over himself. That, then, which man brought upon himself through carelessness and disobedience, this God now vouchsafes to him as a gift through his own philanthropy and pity, when men obey him. For as man, disobeying, drew death upon himself; so, obeying the will of God, he who desires it is able to procure for himself life everlasting. For God has given us a law and holy commands, and every one who keeps these can be saved, and, obtaining the resurrection, can inherit incorruption."

We cannot now examine in detail the various arguments for the natural immortality of the soul, and endeavor to estimate their real value; but we may, perhaps, be allowed to indulge in a brief reminiscence of mental experience. We have a still vivid remembrance of the occasion, long years ago, on which the first tangible doubt regarding the popular doctrine of human immortality was injected into our mind. Not from the reading of any book, nor as the result of any train of abstract ratiocination, did this doubt arise, but while walking hastily through one of the poorest and most degraded dis ricts of a great city. From the tolerably wide, but mean and squalid thoroughfare we traversed, numerous narrow and unsavory courts branched off, which seemed the chosen haunts of misery and crime. Disreputable and shameless girls and women passed along, brutal-looking men lounged about the low public houses, or gathered in groups with the women at the entrances of the courts, from which groups many an obscene expression and foul oath fell upon the shrinking ear; while blighted, filthy, and half-naked children crawled upon the pavement or dabbled in the gutter. A miasma of moral as well as physical pollution seemed to fill the murky air; compassion and aversion struggled together in the breast; when, in a moment—by one of those lightning-flashes of thought which reveal the deepest recesses of the soul—the question suggested itself, Are all these immortals? Is this (excepting the small minority whom divine grace and human charity may rescue from their present condition) what, morally and spiritually, it can accord with infinite wisdom and love to perpetuate to all eternity? That thought was a seed planted in the soul, which neither the traditions of the past, nor the cares and sorrows of the then present, had power to kill; it lived and grew as time passed on, it led to deeper and more earnest searching into the teaching of the inspired word, issuing finally in our present assured conviction, that neither from reason nor Scripture is there any sufficient evidence of the tremendous dogma of man's natural immortality to be discovered.

WORDS.

William Hazlitt says, "Words are the only things that last forever." How often do we use words as if they would soon be forgotten; never thought of after once their meaning had been conveyed to the hearer. But such is not the case. Words, whether written or spoken, will be remembered, if not forever, till the judgment. For we read, "That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."—Matt. 12: 36. We should be very careful, not only in selecting, but also in the way we use words. Use them in a kind, cheering way. Little words of love, spoken in a loving earnestness, sink deep into the heart.

We cannot be too particular in the choice of and especially the way we use words with children. Words learned in childhood are often retained in the heart through life, and have a wonderful efficacy for good or evil. Many have been checked or turned from a course of sin by words that were spoken many years before by christian parents and friends; and perhaps as many more are hurried down to destruction by cold, harsh, obscene, profane and untruthful words. Speak words of kindness by acts of charity. "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."—Prov. 25: 11.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT.

THEOLOGICAL DOCTRINES.

4. God is seen and heard.—And I will take away my hand and thou shalt see my back parts. Ex. 33: 23. And the Lord spake to Moses face to face, as a man speaketh to his friend. Ex. 33: 11. And the Lord called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where art thou? And he said, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid. Gen. 3: 9, 10. For I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved. Gen. 3: 32, 30. In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw, also, the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up Isa. 6: 1. Then went up Moses and Aaron Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the elder of Israel. And they saw the God of Israel. They saw God, and did eat and drink. Ex 24: 9, 10, 11.

God is invisible and cannot be heard.—No man hath seen God at any time. John 1: 18. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape. John 5: 37. And he said, Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see me and live. Ex. 33: 20 Whom no man hath seen nor can see. 1 Tim 6: 16.

If the words Lord and God in the passages above quoted, refer directly to the person of the eternal Father, we are free to admit that the infidel has made out a part of his case. by finding one contradiction in the Bible. But if the texts referred to in the Old Testament speak of the angels of God and not of God himself, then all the discrepancy vanishes at once. We shall now show that the Lord seen and talked with "face to face" was not the Eternal, but his angel—the messenger of his will. The question will at once arise why the angel of God should be called Lord? The answer will appear from Ex. 23: 20, 21. "Behold I send an angel before thee . . . beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not, for he will not pardon your transgressions, for my name is in him." From this we learn that the angel of God bears his name. Hence the Lord that went before Israel, and was seen in the bush by Moses, and that Moses talked with "face to face" on Mount Sinai, was the angel sent forth from the presence of Jehovah. In proof of this, we refer the reader to Acts 7: 35–38. "This Moses they refused, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge? The same did God send to be a ruler and a deliverer, by the hand of his angel which appeared to him in the bush. . . . This is he that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel which spake face to face to him in the Mount Sinai, and with our fathers, who received the lively oracles to give unto us." From this it is clear that the Lord seen by Moses and the elders of Israel was the angel of Jehovah, and the same is true of the Lord seen face to face by Jacob, (Gen. 32: 30,) as the reader will learn by reading Hosea 12: 14. "Yea, he [Jacob] had power over the angel and prevailed." Here the Lord that wrestled with Jacob, is called by Hosea an angel, and by turning back to Gen. 32: 1, 2, it will be seen that angels appeared unto Jacob just before he beheld God face to face. "And Jacob went on his way and the angels of God met him, and when Jacob saw them, he said, This is God's host," etc. From the foregoing quotations we learn the following facts:

1. God put his name in the angel that he sent to do his will, and the angel performed his mission in the name of him who sent him.

2. The appearances of the Lord, as recorded in the Old Testament are the appearances of the angel or angels of his presence, who did visibly appear and talk with men Hence all the supposed discrepancy of the testimony on this point is obviated. The New Testament affirms that God (Greek "theos,") has never been seen by men, which we believe is true, and the fact of the visible appearance of the angels to Moses and the fathers can never be made to oppose this great truth, or make the Bible appear contradictory. There is another point which needs a remark, before dismissing this proposition. In Ex. 33: 11, it is stated that the Lord talked "face to face" with Moses, and in verse 20 the same angel says to him, "Thou canst not see my face, for there shall no man see me and live." We think, however, that a reconciliation may be fairly urged from the context. When the angel talked with Moses face to face, he did not appear in his glory, for after this, Moses entreats the angel talked with, saying "I beseech thee show me thy glory." Verse 18. Now the angel, in whom dwelt the name of the Lord, assures him that he will cause all his goodness to pass before him, and will proclaim the name of the Lord; and further informs him that he will place him in the cleft of the rock, and cause his glory to pass by, "but my face" says the angel, "shall not be seen." Hence Moses could have a diminished view of his glory. The solution, therefore, is apparent; the angel could not allow mortals to see his face, in his glory and splendor. The above reasoning will, we think, remove the cavil, and harmonize with the whole tenor of the chapter. The angel could be seen and talked with, as God's messenger while disrobed of his glorious brightness, but when clad in the splendors of heaven, mortals could not behold him and live. Hence the skeptic again fails to make a discord in the testimony of Revelation. There are minor points in the propositions reviewed above, but they are of the same character of those already noticed, and consequently need no reply at our hands.

NEW BEDFORD.

The meetings in the City Hall, New Bedford, were resumed Tuesday evening, March 16th, and continued four evenings with very encouraging results. The hall was crowded every evening with some ten or twelve hundred persons, who were very attentive, and intelligent. We could not ask for better order than we had during the entire series of meetings. Many now see the harmony of the Scriptures more clearly than ever before. Dark passages are filled with light, apparent contradictions are turned into simple harmony, and mysterious sayings now look plain; in short, the Bible has become to them almost like a new revelation, because it is now so easy to be understood and harmonized. Leading members in the churches took an active part in the prayer-meetings, held from half-past six to half-past seven o'clock each evening. These meetings for prayer and conference were special seasons of refreshing from the Lord. Three or four would attempt to speak at the same time. Some four or five hundred would be in to those meetings. They will be remembered with much pleasure by the christians who were privileged to be present. Every lover of Jesus, without regard to color, sex, or denomination, was invited to take a part in the meetings; and the opportunity was well improved. We are more and more convinced that all sectarianism is opposed to vital godliness, and that it is the work of Satan designed to destroy the usefulness of the church of Christ. All who truly love Jesus, and are members of his body, love each other, and can work together, though they may differ on some points of doctrine. Those who have the most truth and light, and manifest the most of the spirit of Christ, will exert the leading and reforming influence in the church. Correct doctrine alone will not save men; they must have the practice, experimental part of religion, to be the true disciples of Jesus. A form without the power will not fit people for the coming kingdom. If we "have not the spirit of Christ we are none of his." If we are filled with his Spirit, we shall love what he loves. If we reject one whom he has accepted, he considers it as done to him. We cannot be too careful on this point; for Satan has made terrible havoc with the professed church by creating divisions, through the spirit of sectarianism. Let us do all we can towards pulling down every sectarian wall that separates the true disciples of Jesus. While in New Bedford, we had some very pleasant visits with Dr. Quint, who gave that very fair report of our campmeeting at Alton Bay in 1867. Many of our readers will recollect it, as it was copied from the Congregationalist into the Crisis. He is an able man, highly esteemed among his Brn. in the Congregational ministry. He is satisfied that there is to be no temporal millennium. He firmly believes that the new earth will be the final abode of the saints. We found him ready to examine with candor any Bible subject. He is a man who does his own thinking, and sees the sad state of things in nominal christendom. He often speaks with great plainness to his congregation, which is made up largely of the higher class of people. He is very anxious to devise some means by which the common people may be reached, and the castes in churches be broken up. He sees clearly that the present condition of christendom is very far from what it ought to be; and that it is high time to inquire for "the old paths," and seek the simplicity of pure christian worship. Pray for him, that the Lord may make him a polished instrument in his hand, to help in the great work of getting the bride ready "for the marriage of the Lamb."

We also met a Swedish minister, who was unexpectedly led into our meeting, and became most deeply interested in a discourse on the soul; when we endeavored to show that there is not a word in the Bible about an "immortal soul," concerning which so much is said at the present day; and which is the leading doctrine of the Spiritualists. We found his mind fully open to receive the light, and that he was willing to embrace it as fast as it was made manifest. He was ready to let his good name go for the sake of the truth; and whenever we can find such an one, we have but little fear but that they will be led into the clear light of God's word. Many would become the true and humble followers of Jesus, who are now far from him, if it was not for the reproach they must experience if they acknowledge all the light they see. We cannot be free in Christ, and at the same time be ashamed of his words concerning any Bible subject. Satan has succeeded in making the leading truths of the Bible unpopular, and in their place substituted popular "fables." Let us all be brave and bold for the right, if we lose every friend on earth, and be compelled to starve in a dungeon. Let what will come, be true to Jesus and his word.

LYNN.

We spent Sabbath, March 21st, in Lynn, Mass., and had a good day in the Lord. Many interesting testimonies were given at the close of the morning sermon. Their hall was crowded with very attentive hearers. The Spirit of the Lord was with us.

KINDS WORDS.

We feel it a pleasure to express our gratitude for the many comforting words often received in letters for the Crisis; but, as a general rule, our dear Brn. must excuse us from publishing such parts of their letters as express special approbation of a personal nature. We trust they will see the propriety of such a course. It is cheering to know that we enjoy their sympathies, and hearty cooperation in the great work of trying to save people by leading them to follow Jesus. We request a special interest in the prayers of all the friends of our Savior, that we may have wisdom and courage to do all to the glory of God.

WISH ALL FELT SO.

The following is from a good writer for "our paper." When we read it, we thought how much lighter would be the Editor's load, if all contributors could sincerely adopt his language and say:—

> "'Tis not for me to will
> What you shall say or do
> As Editor of the 'Crisis';
> I leave that all with you.
>
> If you think good for print,
> Some part, but not the rest;
> Use part, or all, or none of them,
> As seemeth to you best.
>
> Contract, abridge, or prune,
> Or strike off with a dash;
> Make such disposal as you please,
> Or count it all as 'trash.'"

We wish to say to our contributors, we endeavor to do the best we can; but then we cannot please all. Every one who sends an article for publication in a paper, wishes to see it the next number received; but this is impossible. Some must of necessity be left over; as the paper is not large enough to hold all the good ones received. We shall get them in as fast as we can. Do not conclude because your communication is not published at once, therefore it is rejected for want of merit; or even if it does not appear at all. But few articles are written for "our paper" that are not worthy of a place in its colums.

Keep writing. It will be a benefit to the writer, if it is never published, because it improves the mental powers. If the first article does not appear, send another, and another. Keep at it. It will not be lost labor. But when doing the best we can, do not censure us too sharply.

QUESTIONS.

Those who have sent us questions which have not been answered, must not conclude that they are lost, or that they will not be published. They are all on file and preserved. Questions are often sent which we think no one can answer. Others we shall answer as soon as we can. Some have already been answered several times, for the reason that the inquirer did not take the paper when the other answers were given.

PENCIL-WRITING.—Those who write for publication should use good black ink, and not a lead pencil; because pencil-writing is not so easily read by the compositors; and is liable to get effaced by rubbing. Please use ink when you can.

"IMMORTALITY."—Our readers will find the beginning of a very interesting article in this paper, on the subject of "immortality," taken from the Rainbow, an able monthly, published in London, Eng., edited by Dr. Wm. Leask. It will be seen that the truth has some able advocates in Europe. Thank the Lord for the spread of the truth. Many of the most devoted men and women in the churches are examining the subject, and becoming satisfied that the Bible does not teach the immortality of the soul.

RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED.—Our readers will find in this paper a part of an interesting article on the resurrection of the wicked dead, published in the Voice of the West, by Bro. L. C. Collins.

THE TIME OF JUDGMENT.

When are men to be judged? Is it before or after they rise from the dead? "What saith the Scripture?" "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his apperring and his kingdom;" or as Tyndale's old version reads: "When he appeareth in his kingdom." 2 Tim. 4: 1–3. "Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come." 2 Cor. 4: 5. He has not come yet, therefore the judgment has not yet commenced. According to the Scriptures, it will not take place till after the dead are raised. In Rev. 20: 13, we read: "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell (hades—the grave) delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works." When the sea and the graves deliver up the dead, they no longer remain in their power. But they are not judged till after they are brought out of the prison house of death. Criminals are removed from prison into the court room before examination and judgment.

NEVER DIE.

BRO. GRANT:—I am an earnest inquirer after truth. I find much in the Crisis that commends itself to my understanding of truth and reason. I wish to ask some honest, able expounder of Scripture, and Scripture translation, how shall we reconcile the following text with the doctrine of absolute, or total death of the living believers in Christ:—"And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?" John 11: 26. Also John 8: 51, 6: 50.

Yours in hope of the coming of Christ,
H. J. MUNSON.

We think these passages are clearly harmonious with the entire teaching of the Scriptures,—that the whole man sleeps in death till the resurrection of the dead, at the coming of Christ. Please look at the context of John 11: 26. Begin at the 23d verse, as follows: "Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live." When? "In the resurrection at the last day." How will it be with those who are alive at that time, and believe in Jesus? Will they die and remain dead a short time and then be raised up from the dead? Jesus makes this matter all plain by the next verse: "And whosoever liveth [at that time] and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?" Observe it is only the living believers at the time if the resurrection, who "never die."

The apostle Paul takes up the same point and says:—"Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed."—1 Cor. 15: 51. When? "At the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall all be changed." Those alive at that time shall "be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." This is the only class that will "never die."

We turn now to John 8: 51, and 6: 50, as follows:—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, If a man keep my saying, he shall never taste of death." Does the Savior refer to the first death? If so it is not true, for the most obedient die the first death as certainly as the most wicked. In his last revelation to man, Jesus says: "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." Rev. 2: 11. This "second death" is the one of which those "shall never taste," who keep Jesus' sayings. The first death they cannot escape unless by translation at the coming of Christ.

John 6: 50 reads as follows:—"This is that bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die." The same remarks apply to this passage as to John 8: 51, just considered.

☞ BOOK MARKS.

Some of our brethren have inquired where they could get these little pointers, ☞ for book marks to stick on the leaves of their Bibles, to point to the passages they want to refer to. For the accomodation of all such, we have some for sale at the office. Price, a card of twelve for 25 cts. AG'T.

"PICNIC RELIGION."—This is an excellent tract to circulate in these days, when nominal Christianity is being so mixed up with the spirit of the world, in its customs, fashions, manners, politics, amusements, strife and confusion; that it is as hard to separate them as the Siamese Twins. This tract of 16 pp. is from the pen of the author of "Apples of Gold in Pictures of Silver." Price $2.00 per 100. Address D. F. Newton, 303 West 20th St., New York. For sale at the Crisis office.

BRO. C. COLEGROVE, Sardinia, N. Y., writes that they purpose to build a meeting-house in that place. The Lord has been pleased to bless the people with a love for the blessed hope, and they feel anxious to have a place where they can invite their friends to hear more on the subject.

BRO. E. BARROWS, West Peterboro, N. H., writes:—"I went to Keene to hear you about one year ago. At that time I used tobacco, and had used it for over twenty years. It is now one year since any tobacco has passed my lips. Thank God, there is no tobacco scent about me. I am trying to live so that when Jesus comes I may be counted worthy of eternal life."

Good news, Bro. Barrows. You have got rid of one heavy weight. Many are being crushed beneath their tobacco burden. O when will the professed children of the Lord stop chewing, snuffing, smoking, and raising the poisonous, filthy tobacco weed?—ED.

SR. S. H. DAVIS, South Baltic, writes:—"Bro. Stevens is doing a great work with us. We have prayer-meetings every night but two in the week. The old person of eighty and the child of twelve are leaving their wicked ways and turning to the true and living God."

AN INQUIRY.

We wish to know what is piped and what is harped before we can support or patronize any religious enterprise whatever. But the point we have especially in view now is to know, from the conductors of each benevolent institution, agents, missionaries, tract distributors, and preachers in the Advent connection, whether they justify or approve the horrid practice or principle of butchering their fellow men under any circumstances whatever; whether by the authority of government, or in private combat, as killing another in self-defense or otherwise? We wish those missionaries and agents in the various departments, when they write for the Crisis, would disclose their views in relation to this thing, that their principles may be "read and known of all men"; for we can never connect our christian sympathy, fellowship and aid with any one, or "bid him God speed" (2 John 10) who does not take an open and decided stand against this, one of the most horrid, abominable and heaven-daring of crimes, the deliberate butchery of our fellow men. Why should any be ashamed to confess Christ before men? If we are the true followers of the Prince of peace, we shall love his doctrine in all its parts, and contend for it earnestly. We shall not hesitate to repeat and believe and try to practice his truth, looking to him for strength in every time of need. Let all who love the truth speak plainly and decidedly, letting their light shine (if they have any) in the columns of the Crisis. THOMAS F. TUKESBURY.

MEETING AT TAUNTON.

BRO. GRANT:—As you solicit a word occasionally from the readers of the Crisis, I will send you a few lines in regard to our meetings in Taunton, Mass. Bro. Emery, the pastor of the Christian Baptist church, invited me to hold a protracted meeting with him. He gave me liberty to preach as the Lord might direct. I accepted, and found Bro. Emery a true yoke-fellow in the gospel. Bro. Williams, one of my old fellow laborers in Vermont, was present, and joined with us a part of the time. The Lord blessed us with unity of spirit. Our meeting lasted three weeks, with good results. Sinners came forward, wanderers were reclaimed, the church was revived, and our congregation increased from the first. I found several there who love the blessed hope. Some have joined the Baptist and Methodist churches. Bro. and Sr. Truell are doing a good work in the Baptist Sabbath School. I look for good fruits from the meeting in Taunton. To God be all the glory. S. W. THURBER.

REPORT OF THE N. Y. STATE ADV. CHRIS. CONF.

The New York State Advent Christian Conference convened at Springwater, Thursday evening, March 4th. Preaching by Bro. A. C. Newell, of Darien, from Luke 21: 31.

Friday, 5th. Met at 1 o'clock. Preaching by Bro. D. Cogswell, from John 3: 16. In the evening, preaching by the writer, from Heb. 11: 6.

Saturday, 6th. Met at ten o'clock for business. Bro. Cogswell in the chair. It was stated by Bro. C. that about one hundred dollars were needed immediately to liquidate a debt on our tent, and fit it for the coming season, as some of the canvas is nearly worn out. Whereupon, it was voted that a collection be taken up at this conference and placed in the hands of Bro. D. Cogswell, of Dansville, N. Y., to forward to Bro. Fields, of Rochester, who holds the debt. It was also requested that the Secretary should make a call, in connection with the report of this conference, upon all interested in the tent enterprise throughout the entire State, to send in their mites at once to Bro. Cogswell, who will forward it to Bro. Fields. Now, Brn. and Srs., only think of the glorious results that have attended our tent-meetings thus far; and, in the name of our Master, let us unitedly make another grand effort for the salvation of perishing souls the coming season. The tent must be in the field just as soon as the weather will admit; and before it goes into the field, it ought to be paid for. Shall it be done? This depends upon the response of the brethren and sisters. Remember, time is short, and what is done must be done quickly. Do we believe it?

The Secretary not being present, Bro. J. W. Taylor was appointed Secretary pro tem. No other business being brought before the conference, it was moved the business meeting be adjourned to the annual conference. Carried. Preaching at one o'clock by Bro. H. H. Brown, from Titus 2: 1. Met again at 6 P. M. for prayer and conference, when the Spirit of the Lord took the guidance of the meeting, and we had a heavenly sitting together in Christ Jesus, which was followed by a discourse from Bro. W. J. Hobbs, from Rev. 1: 7.

Sunday, 7th, met at 9 A. M. for love-feast. Preaching at 10½ by Sr. E. S. Jennings, from Gal. 6: 2, 5. Preaching again at 1 P. M. by Bro. Newell, from Rom. 6: 23; and again in the evening by Sr. Jennings, from Matt. 25: 31. There was a very good attendance from abroad, and the brethren and sisters all seemed in earnest in trying to prepare a people for the coming of the Lord. J. W. T.

WHY I BACKSLID.

BRO. GRANT:—I write to let you know how I became a backslider. It was by jesting and laughing, smoking, and intemperance in other things. These habits led me to forget and neglect my duty to God, and to halt on the way. But thank the Lord, he has given me grace to repent of my sins, and return to him again. It is with much sorrow that I make this confession. The Bible says, "Confess your faults one to another."

Correspondence.

From Sr. Jane A. Benson.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—How do you do? As I am somewhat afflicted, and can not go out, I thought I would write you a few lines, for I suppose some have thought that I had gone to the land of the enemy, as the fever was the cause of my returning from the South. Not so. My work was not done, and I am still in the field, thank the Lord. The prayers of God's dear people, mixed with faith, shall save the sick. When I sit down and begin to look over memory's pages, and see what the Lord has done for me, I have to adopt the language of David—"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." Let us not get discouraged. Let us still wait on the Lord a little longer; occupy until our Elder Brother shall come.

I have been laboring this winter in different places, and bless the Lord, many have been brought to Christ, and are getting ready to see Jesus; for they believe the report that he is soon coming to this earth again. On the 5th of December, I left home for Shinnecock, Long Island, to spend a few days; but a terrible storm came upon me while on the way, and I know that the Lord was in the storm, though it seemed quite hard, for I got to a place called River Head, where they were to meet me, but no one was there; and through a mistake, the stage and all left me. I waited till nearly dark, then they would have me go from the depot. I tried to get back to the city, but it was of no use; the last car had gone. I then asked if there were any colored people in the place. The reply was, No, not that I know of. Then I went out of the depot, and went from door to door and tried to get sheltered from the terrible storm; but "No," was the reply; "I can't take you in." I said, I am a stranger, and am almost frozen, and know not what to do.

Then one gentleman said, "There are some colored people about three quarters of a mile from the depot, at a place called East Hampton; I guess they will take you in." All this time the enemy was at work. He said I was a fool for leaving home in such a storm. I would not say that this was not a trial of faith.

Some may say that it seems strange why missionaries are always talking about "hard times," and what they have to go through. Yes, our Captain, who went before us, said through much tribulation we shall inherit the promise. We know all this, but it is not only missionaries that have trials, but christians; the children of God in general. It was so in the days of Job, David, Paul, and many more. Paul says, it is a race. Then he says again, "I have fought a good fight." He compares it to a battle; and I say to-day, it is a warfare. But when I left Egypt, I knew the wind would blow; and when the Lord sent me out in the field some fifteen years ago, he said, Go, and I will go with you. So I went to East Hampton trusting in the Lord, for I had not a cent to pay for one night's lodging. What I had Sister Smith gave me from her rent money, and that was gone. So I told my errand, and they took me in, and my heart cried out with Job, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

I held meetings all day. The Lord carried it on. We had five mourners Sunday night. The meetings continued for two weeks, day and night. O what a blessed time we had. The whole church was revived, and some twelve professed faith in Christ. All I could say was, I thank God for the storm, for it was in his wisdom. I was paid. Yes, well paid. One white lady over seventy-five years old, for the first time in her life, could say she had religion. Some six white folks were converted. One lady told her daughter, if she got religion amongst those colored folks, she would disinherit her for ever; but she was one of the first ones.

Then I went to another place, called Quohaugue, and held meetings one week. The Lord was with us. Then two weeks in Shinnecock. Then I had some four or five places to go to, but strength failed, and I came home; and as I came I sang:

> "God moves in a mysterious way
> His wonders to perform."

To God be all the glory. I am trying to get my work done. I want to see Jesus; for just as soon as the youngest child is of age, the property will be divided. Bless the Lord. I am poor now, but shall be rich then. Then there will be no more winds to blow, nor storms to beat on these houses of clay. O Lord, hasten the time, for Jesus' sake. Pray for me. JANE A. BENSON.

From Sr. Fidelia Clark.

Dear Christian Friends:—It is with heartfelt pleasure that I read the many letters in the Crisis from the pens of the dear pilgrim band, whose object and aim is to cheer, encourage and instruct each brother and sister in their pilgrimage up the hill of difficulty; for it seems to me that hill is now before us, and there is no getting round it. But our blessed Jesus is ever ready to help us. Let us cling fast to him by a living, active faith, which will surmount all difficulties that lie in the christian's pathway through this cold, unfriendly world; for such it is to many a weary pilgrim, who, like myself, has no home or abiding place, or where to lay his weary, aching head. I am looking forward with strong faith to the change awaiting us as near at hand when all our trials will be ended. O what a glorious hope is ours, if we but hold out faithful to the end. When I think that all our Savior suffered would have availed us nothing had he not acted as our intercessor with the Father, oh what a debt of gratitude we owe to God the Father, to Jesus our mediator and Redeemer. Let us, dear fellow pilgrims, one and all, pray daily, and watch too, that we may hold faithful to the end of the race, and then wear the crown in the kingdom of glory. Thrice blessed hope! and how could we, and especially our dear sisters Chloe and Thera, endure the long years of suffering, but for this blessed hope?

Now, as I have alluded to the many trials of this life, I would also to some of the privileges, which are neither small nor insignificant. (1.) What interest and care our Creator has manifested for us in giving his dear Son to die for us, and in permitting us to address him as our Father, with the promise that he will bestow whatever we need, if sought through faith in Jesus' name. (2.) His revealed will to man, and Christian association in a variety of ways; such as public worship, the prayer-meeting, are important privileges to every christian; but yet a more needful part is a close study of the Bible, and closet duties. And I have enjoyed the quarterly conference, tent and camp meetings very well indeed, where I have met so many dear pilgrims, to whom I feel strongly attached, and expect I shall still more when we have passed beyond the river.

I will notice some articles in the last Crisis that interested me; viz., the Resolutions of the Brn. at Conf. at Buchanan; also on "Picnic Religion," by D. F. Newton; an article by N. McCulloch, Rochester.

FIDELIA CLARK.

From Bro. T. Wood.

BRO. GRANT:—I hereby acknowledge the receipt of letters, and packages of papers from dear christian friends. Many thanks for these favors, with their cheering words of comfort and good wishes. The Lord bless them all with abundant grace to overcome all the evils of this life, and save them in his eternal, glorious kingdom. The cause of Christ in Jacksonville, Fla., continues without any apparent improvement. A few believers in the Bible doctrine, I think, are trying to defend and uphold it, against much opposition and popular opinion, though they may be despised by the world and proud professors, yet if they are faithful to the Lord, they will find at last that to be honored by him, will be far better than the friendship of the world, which they may be called upon to sacrifice.

I learn from Elder P. A. Smith, that the truth is spreading much more in the country where he is preaching a part of the time. Some are believing and have been baptized. I think there is much less destitution and poverty in this vicinity, among the freedmen, than there is farther north through the states of Virginia, North and South Carolinas. This probably is owing in some measure to business generally, which is maintained largely by northern men and capital, which is circulated freely for lands; also in building and the lumber business, which is quite extensive. Some five or more steam saw mills running almost constantly, with their gang saws, thus turning out millions of that material for shipment to various parts of the world, and employing many hands in this department. Money is also freely circulated by the large number of visitors, travelers, and invalids, constantly coming and departing. The Freedmen are willing to labor hard for the sake of receiving their share of the common blessings. They have some schools, both day and night, for teaching the children and older persons, who are disposed to attend. A large, nice building, two stories in height, is now being erected under the auspices of the Freedmen's Bureau, for the colored schools. Thus in this part of the south, they are very well provided for in this respect. T. E. WOOD.

Jacksonville, Fla., March 8th, 1869.

From Bro. J. Moody.

BRO. GRANT:—Perhaps the brethren scattered abroad would like to hear from us in this southern region. We are at work doing what we can for the benefit of the destitute and suffering. I have endeavored to find out the true condition of the people by inquiries, and by visiting them at their houses, and they all seem to tell the same story about their poverty and need of help. There are a very few who are comfortable for clothing and bread; but the most of them are in great want of all the comforts of life. I have been out to-day traveling around on the plantation to see them in their open cabins. I found some eating their dry morsel; and I found some sick on their bed of rags, in pain and suffering, and helpless. Pen and ink cannot describe one's feelings to see such scenes of want and distress. I think the most of them are trying to do the best they can under the circumstances. They are turned out upon their own resources, without any means to help themselves. Many of them have to dig up their ground with a hoe. We at the North would think it very hard to have to get our bread in this way, and then have to pay for the use of the land besides. This is the best that many of them can do. There are plenty of places for meetings. I have a great many calls, about every Sabbath, to go and read the Bible, and talk to them about the coming of Jesus; both among the white and colored; and some of them seem to love to learn about it. They love to go to meeting, and are anxious to learn to read, so that they can read the Bible. Their singing sounds so sweet, it would do you good to hear them. We should love to stay here and labor with and for this people, if we had health and strength, and means with which to help the needy. It would compensate for all the sacrifice we have to undergo. We have found the people very friendly and kind; far more so than we expected. The Lord has been with us and blessed us, and I trust our labors have not been in vain. My wife has been quite sick, but is gaining slowly now. How glad I am that the time is near when that home will be given to the faithful, where there will be no more sickness and sorrow.

Your Bro. in Christ, JOB MOODY.

Darlington, S. C., March 4th, 1869.

From Sr. C. C. Smith.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord liveth, and blessed be his name. I will trust in him for his mercy endureth forever. I truly feel he is my rock, and when trials and temptations from the enemy come rushing in like a mighty flood, he is my safe hiding place from all the storms of this vain and deceitful world. Dear brethren and sisters, may God help us to lay aside all the foolish fashions of the world, take Jesus for our pattern, and live every day as becoming the children of the true and living God. My heart is pained, when I look around on the professors of the religion of Jesus, and see them adorning their bodies with all the fashions and gewgaws they can heap upon them; when there are so many poor that are starving and perishing for the comforts of life; and I see it too much among our sisters who profess to be looking for the coming of Jesus. It is my prayer that we may come out from the fashions of the world, and show that we are truly looking for our blessed Lord and Master from heaven. Dear sisters, let us be clothed with the whole armor of Jesus,—our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, our lamps trimmed and burning, and oil in our vessels, all ready to replenish when our blessed Lord and Master shall come to call for us. God forbid that we should be so covered with the forms and fashions of the world, that dear Jesus shall not know us when he comes. We must have the life and the pure love of Jesus in our hearts; have our faith stand in the power of God, not in the wisdom of men. We must have the love of Christ's kingdom in our souls, and live rooted and grounded in God.

We must have that faith which is willing to labor and toil for the cause of Christ. He says it is more blessed to give, and work in his vineyard, feed the poor, and clothe the naked, than to receive; and he says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." The time is so short, we ought to be up and doing. Whatever our hands find to do, let us do it with all our might. The Lord has been very good to me. He has kept me from dangers seen and unseen, and has brought me down beyond three score years and ten. O what reason I have to praise God; and I feel to-night, that I can say, I know that my Redeemer lives, and because he lives, I shall live also. How good it is to feel that we have Jesus ruling and reigning in our hearts, and feel the witness every moment of our lives. I find a solace in Jesus the world can neither give nor take away. Praise the Lord for his unspeakable goodness to poor unworthy me; and let me say to all my brethren and sisters, I am making no other calculations than to outride all the storms of this life, and one day land this weary self in that glorious city, the New Jerusalem, the city of our God, to go no more out forever. There I expect to meet those dear loved ones that I have seen suffering in the agonies of death, and have followed to the enemy's land. No tongue can tell the anguish but those who have passed through the trying scene. Glory be to Jesus, he said when he went away, he would come again. He has the keys of death and the grave, and will bring those loved ones with him. O praise the Lord for his goodness to the children of men. My dear brethren and sisters, let us prove faithful a little while longer. God has promised us a fullness, and may our vessels be full and running over, is the prayer of your dear sister, looking for speedy redemption when Jesus comes, C. C. SMITH.

South Hadley Falls, Mass., Feb. 14th.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. S. S. JULIAN, Model City, Mich., March 16th, writes:—"I take pleasure in forwarding a new subscriber for the Crisis, deeming it worthy of patronage and circulation. I have been a constant reader for more than three years, and not only receive instruction, but much pleasure in perusing its columns, and do heartily recommend it to all who wish for a good family, religious paper. I do not suffer any of ours to lie idly by, after we have perused them; but lend and give them away to those who do not, or can not take any paper. Although I am personally a stranger to you, you may reckon me among your friends and patrons that not only pay you, but love to pray for you, that you may have wisdom, strength and grace sufficient for your responsible labors, both with the press and in the pulpit, at home and abroad; and that success may attend your arduous labors in the Lord's vineyard.

I have spent my youth and manhood, with some of my riper years, in the gospel field of the West; but performed that labor under the greatest disadvantages, as I now think, on account of an imperfect knowledge of the blessed word of God; and it seems to me (now that my eyes are opened) most incredible that I ever taught the errors of modern theology, such as an eternal hell-fire, immortal-soul doctrine, consciousness in death, etc. But it leads me to rejoice greatly in my emancipation from such darkness, and to exercise a great deal of charity for those who yet cling to those theories; and I do think that we have increasing evidence that we are in the last days, and may with the greatest propriety, as christians, have our "loins girt about with truth," be clothed with the "breastplate of righteousness," "the shield of faith," "the sword of the Spirit," and for an helmet the hope of salvation.

Since I have embraced more fully the old gospel hope, and have been separated from my former church associations, I have experienced severe conflicts, disappointments and temptations in my new relations or associations, growing out of mismanagement; and this teaches us that even here there is no rest, and that we should look for our reward when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels. Therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who will save all those that believe."

BRO. ALI ANDREWS, Bridgeport, Conn., writes:—"We have had a series of meetings in this city, and I am happy to say that we have never had anything like them before. Our place proved to be too small, and we moved to Good Templars' Hall. In both places christians of other denominations came in, and got so waked up and interested that they took the lead in the social meetings, after and before preaching, and we old soldiers had only to sit still and rejoice to see and hear the workings of the Spirit of God with the people. Many old Methodists, Congregationalists and Baptists declared they never witnessed such good meetings before. Some sinners have been converted, and others are anxious. We never received such favor from the people in this city before. They seemed to forget that we were infidels, as they had charged us heretofore.

A word as to our meeting. After having been scattered to the four winds by parties that had no fixed principle, and we had all become like the fig-tree without fruit, an effort was made to water the old tree, and the consequence was, we reorganized our church with some six members, which was soon increased to twelve. More than one year ago we resolved to have lay preaching every Lord's day, at 2 P. M., which has been faithfully performed by four brethren chosen by the church, to take their respective turns.

Srs. Smith and Mellen, of the Star-of-Hope Mission, have been with us some. We had our places of worship full, and the people seemed to be in perfect union with us; and Bro. Leonard says we have gained more favor and done more good by this series of meetings than we could otherwise in two years. Praise the Lord for the work he has done."

SR. H. P. CHASE, Bridgewater, Mar. 17th, writes:—"Dear Brethren and Sisters: Who love the Lord, if I could say a word to strengthen and encourage you, I should be glad. 'Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out.' Believest thou this? He says, 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away.' And, 'he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.' If you wish to abide the day of his coming, and stand when he appeareth, do his will and obey his commandments, and you shall have a right to the tree of life and enter in through the gates into the city, whose streets are gold, whose gates are pearl, and the glory of God is its light. What a home is prepared for all the dear saints. A glorious change awaits the righteous. They are to feel no more pain, there is to be no more crying, for the last tear is wiped away; no more death, for death, the last enemy, and 'him that had the power of death' is destroyed. There will be no sad hearts then. The old earth will be exchanged for a new heaven and a new earth, all smiling in beauty, with no thorns, no thistles, no chilling winds, no scorching heat, but the climate will be just right and agreeable to the saints. Says David, 'I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness.' Praise God for ever more."

Bro. L. F. Moore, Goodspeed's Landing, Mar. 12th, writes:—"Last fall I came to this place and found that Bro. Seth Woodruff had preached once, and by the help of God I undertook to proclaim the glorious gospel of God. At first I found some prejudice, but as the truth was presented in the love of it, prejudice began to give way, the meetings grew both in interest and numbers, until we were obliged to find better accommodations, and more room. Still the interest increased, and the people hired a larger hall, in order to accommodate the audiences. Having had no experience in protracted meetings, I asked Bro. I. B. Potter (under whose labors I was converted and baptized) to come and help. He went, alone at first, I being unable to go on account of my wife's sickness. I followed as soon as possible, and found some thirteen up to the anxious seat, and the interest increasing. Last night eleven more were up for prayers, and still the work goes on. Some of the above we believe have expressed hope in Jesus, and some fifteen have embraced the doctrines of the Bible."

Sr. L. B. Weaver, North Dana, Mass., writes:—"My dear ones in Jesus: Grace, mercy and peace be multiplied to you, and blessings from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ, our blessed Savior. Weary with the sorrows and the burdens of this pilgrim life of suffering and affliction, and with a body so racked with pain and distress that tears dim my eyes, I take my pen to write a few lines to the readers of our more than blessed paper, the 'Crisis.' Never did I feel to prize it more than at the present time.

In the bitterness of my soul I cry, 'Come, Lord Jesus,' and come quickly, and take thy dear ones home, and end the sad wail of the lone and bereaved ones of earth. Here in our quiet little home peace and love reign, and the family altar is never torn down. It is sweet to mingle our voices together in prayer and praise to the Giver of all earthly blessings; but, alas! sorrow is mingled with every thing in this world. For a few days we are together, happy and joyous; then the sad farewell must be spoken."

Sister Weaver wishes the one who wrote her from Bethel would write again, and tell in what State she lives.—Ed.

Bro. M. L. Searles, Battle Creek, Mich., writes:—"How I love the Bible truths and all the precious promises to God's children. How thankful I feel in my heart this morning that God ever sent his servants to Rochester, N. Y., with the tent, and those great and blessed truths. What a work the Lord has done there, and is still doing, and to his name we will give all the glory and praise forever. How I do love to scatter this light and truth wherever I go, although I have but the widow's mite, and the one talent; yet my heavenly Father does condescend to bless me. How he blessed me on the cars, when my heart was pained at seeing such a flood of papers and books of all kinds, except good ones poured in upon the people, and to see the old as well as the young, church members as well as the world's people, swallow with avidity the sugar-coated poison of the evil one. I felt it my duty to distribute reading matter also, free to those that would read; and many did read the tracts, and I saw some good fruit, praise the Lord. I leave it all in his hands, and will trust, though he slay me."

Bro. F. A. Mitchell, Concord, N. H., writes:—"By the mercies of God, I am permitted to say that God has done great things for me. He has led me to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world, and I can thank and praise his name for what he has done, and what he is still doing. Bless the Lord, O my soul. I want to be one of that number who shall be ready to meet Jesus when he comes in power and great glory. Jesus our Redeemer endured the cross for the joy that was set before him. He overcame death, and is our companion in pain. The angel of his presence gives us strength and love and joy. We must fulfill his last words of instruction, to feed his lambs, and visit and minister to every child of want and sorrow within our reach. Sweet will be our rest when the labor of life is done. Sweet the voice that will welcome us home.

Your paper has done me great good, and I can not do without it. Yours in the Spirit of Jesus."

Bro. J. H. Stevens, Manchester, N. H., March 20th, writes:—"A blind man came to my house, and desired the brethren and sisters to pray for him. Said he, 'It does seem to me that I shall die. I have not slept hardly any since Sunday evening.' This looked like the old-fashion work of God, that goes down deep. Amen, roll it on, Lord. So my dear Bro. Farrell and wife, Bro. Hatch, and Sr. Thurber, from Canada, came over to my house, and knelt down for the poor man. God heard and answered prayer, and his soul was filled with glory. It would do you good to hear him talk. He was rescued from the grasp of the devil. He had been a confirmed Spiritualist for eight years, blind inside and out; but the Lord is giving him light. Bless his name."

Sr. Selenda Carbee, Lunenburg, Vt., writes:—"Your much loved paper came to my hand by the way of Bro. A. Gorden. The Lord bless him for it. It is a great blessing to me, for I have no other preaching; and, as one sister expressed it, 'It is preaching, conference and prayer-meeting' to me. I hardly know how to wait from one week to another for my paper. O the blessed truths that it contains, my soul loves. I delight in the good news that Jesus is coming; and I do think all those that love him will love to hear about his coming to earth again; coming to set up his kingdom under the whole heavens. O glorious day. Lord, hasten it, is the prayer of your unworthy sister."

Bro. J. Y. Briggs, Bridgewater, Vermont, writes:—"I thank you for those tracts you sent me. I have sown them in many ways; some I gave to people in this town, who were trying to be Spiritualists, and I think they have done much good; others I sent to my brothers and sisters in different places; some to friends in Saratoga, N. Y., and in various other places. Besides that, they gave your humble servant much light on the Bible, which I have tried to impart to others. May the richest blessings which earthly mortals can have be yours, and may we meet each other on that glorified shore, is the prayer of your Bro. in Christ."

Bro. A. S. Kelley, Stoneham, Mass., writes:—"There are a few in this place who are still looking for the same Jesus that went away. We believe he will come again soon. We have meetings three times every Sabbath in the school-house, at Farm Hill station. A good number come in. We have a good Sabbath School. The Lord is at work in this place. Some wanderers are coming back, and sinners are starting for eternal life. The good Lord is convincing of sin and judgment to come. Blessed be the name of our Lord, who is still gracious, and calling sinners to come to him."

Bro. H. A. Little, Warren, N. H., writes:—"We are having excellent meetings in this place. Bro. T. E. Lang has been laboring with the people here for a few months in the past. The Lord has truly been with us. Sinners have been converted, and backsliders reclaimed. A goodly number have been forward in baptism. O that the church of God would wake up, and labor more earnestly for the salvation of mankind, for what is done must be done quickly. Signs are thickening, and all things portend that Jesus is soon to come."

Bro. J. Porter, Dansville, P. Q., Canada, March 17th, writes:—"We are buried up in snow from six to twenty feet deep. This is the condition of our roads at this hour. Travel is stopped. A novel thing here is the sound of a whistle, which I have not heard for weeks. After you left here, I started for Ottawa, and was delayed fourteen days on the way. I was nine days and nights in the cars. Four hundred men turned out to shovel snow from roads. The oldest man in Canada has not seen the like, and an awful state of things is expected here when the thaw comes."

Bro. D. Cogswell, Dansville, Mar. 26th, 1869, writes:—"Our dear Bro. Geo. Hess, was burned out last night, the family barely escaping with their lives. They have nothing left—some of them only their night dresses. Sister Hess is sick. Would it not be pleasing to God, if some who have the good things of this world, should help Bro. H. in his present sad condition? The church here will help what they can."

Bro. C. H. Sweet, Washington, Ct., Mar. 4th, writes:—"We were not disappointed in our meetings at Pine Swamp. God was with us. The saints were strengthened, and four arose for prayers."

Married.

In Loudon, Feb. 17th, 1869, by D. F. Leavitt, Levi Allen, of Alton, N. H., and Mrs. Mary A. Knowles, of Lake Village, N. H.

Obituaries.

Elder George Champlin. Died, Feb. 6th, at his late residence in Providence, R. I., of typhoid fever, Eld. George Champlin (colored), aged sixty-three years.

Since the restoration of Bro. Champlin to the confidence and sympathy of his brethren in the ministry, he has been preaching with great acceptance with the Warwick Plains church, one Sabbath in each month. He was rapidly drawing back the alienated hearts and affections of the church, by a well-ordered life and godly conversation. He was also laboring with the Pond Street Baptist church in Providence, where he was esteemed very highly for his work's sake. But his labors are done, and we trust that, in his own words—the last that were understood—he "rests in Jesus. Rest, rest—yes, I rest in hope."

He was committed to his last earthly repose in his native town of South Kingston, Feb. 9th. Funeral services were held in the Pond Street church, March 7th, and at the Warwick Plains church, March 14th. At each of which large and deeply affected audiences attested the respect in which he was held; not alone by his own brethren in the church, but by many of the other churches holding sentiments differing from them and him. The services at these several places were attended by the writer.

We wish here to call attention to the dependent condition in which his wife, Sister Champlin, is left. Poor, dependent, and almost totally blind. Will those who are blessed with an abundance of this world's goods, remember her in their donations, and be "recompensed at the resurrection of the just." A. Durfee.

P. S. Any donation intended for her benefit, sent to the address of George Champlin, Jr., Dexter Street, Providence, R. I., will be faithfully applied.

Ellenwood. Died in Athol, Mass., Jan. 30th, 1869, Axa Ellenwood, wife of Bro. Benjamin Ellenwood, aged forty-five years.

Death has taken a bright jewel of the Lord from our midst. She was a kind, affectionate wife and mother; one that carried sunshine and gladness to many hearts by her consistent christian life. Her house was a home for the weary preacher, who was ever greeted with a hearty welcome. Her consistent life and kind acts to the needy have endeared her to many, who now mourn with our brother the absence of the loved one. But he is comforted with the blessed hope of soon seeing his dear wife in that world where death cannot come. We endeavored to speak words of comfort to the mourning friends, from 1 Thess. 4: 13-18. J. Hemenway.

Vance. Peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, in Wolcott, N. Y., March 9th, Bro. Vance.

He was formerly a Baptist, but two years ago last fall, when Bro. Hastings' tent came to Wolcott, he embraced the truth of the sleep of the dead, destruction of the wicked, and the soon coming of the kingdom of Christ. He let his light shine. In his last sickness, the Baptist minister tried to persuade him that he would go to glory as soon as he died; but his hope was in the resurrection of the dead. Words of comfort to the afflicted were spoken by the writer, from 1 Thess. 4: 13, 14. M. R. Miles.

Staples. Died in South Elliot, Me., after a distressing sickness of about three months, with tumor, Sr. Margaret, wife of Bro. Daniel Staples, aged forty-three years.

Sr. Staples was patient and resigned, and felt the Lord was with her. After her death, according to her request, she was opened, and a tumor taken from her which weighed fifteen pounds. She died in the faith that Jesus will soon come to call her to a better life, where no pain will ever come. The funeral was attended by the writer. G. W. Brown.

Wiley. Died in Wakefield, Mass., March 14th, 1869, Harriet B., wife of John Wiley, aged seventy years, six months, and fourteen days.

Sr. Wiley was converted in early life, and with her companion walked the pilgrim's path for fifty years. In 1843 Sr. Wiley embraced the blessed hope of the coming of Jesus. She died in peace. Her loss is keenly felt by a large circle. May the good Lord sustain and strengthen the mourners. C. Richardson.

Jewell. Died at East Farnham, P. Q., March 11th, 1869, Lilace A., daughter of Eri and Mary Jewell, aged six years, three months, and twelve days.

Words of consolation were spoken by the writer, from Jer. 31: 15-16. May the grace of God sustain the parents and friends. E. G. Chadsey.

Taylor. Died in Brome, P. Q., Sept. 23d, 1868, Carrie G., daughter of John and Clarinda Taylor, aged two years, four months, and thirteen days.

Words of comfort were spoken from Jer. 31: 15-16. Loren Marsh.

Lord.—Died in Rochester, N. Y., March 20th, 1869, Sr. Eliza Lord, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Anson Lord, of Honeoye, N. Y., aged sixteen years.

She was a subject of the tent-meeting revival, and a member of the Advent church in Rochester. A dutiful child, affectionate sister, and an accepted christian has fallen. Words of comfort were spoken by Eld. James Hemenway, in the Presbyterian church at Fairport. H. Pratt.

Hayden. Died in Chicago, Ill., March 14th, of consumption, Jane, daughter of Nathan and Lucy Hayden, aged nineteen years and seventeen days.

We rejoice that Jane gave evidence of a hope in Christ. She fell asleep in Jesus, to rest until he awakens her to sing redemption's song. Sermon by the writer, from Job 14: 14. C. C. Ramsay.

Nute. At East Medway, Mass., March 15th, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Nute, wife of Joseph P. Nute.

Pope. Died in Windsor, Me., March 8th, Algie, daughter of John and Mary A. Pope, aged seventeen years.

She was amiable and lovely. God bless the mourning friends. S. K. Partridge.

Hyrlburit. Died in Westerly, R. I., March 13th, 1869, S. Fanny L. Hyrlburit, aged sixty-five years. She sweetly sleeps in Jesus. Her funeral was attended by the writer. A. Durfee.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, March 23. The strike of the cotton operatives, which commenced at Preston, is spreading to other parts of the country. In Glasgow it has become general, and several mills have partially suspended operations for want of hands.

Paris, March 23. In the Corps Legislatif yesterday, an army contingent of 100,000 men required by the Government was voted. The session was then adjourned to the 31st instant.

The French and Belgium journals publish the preliminaries of the conference between France and Belgium to harmonize their mutual commercial interests.

Paris, March 24. Rio Raneiro dates state that Lopez is collecting his scattered forces at the mouth of the Tebiquary. Detachments of the Paraguayan army were in the environs of Asuncion, which city was still held by the allies.

At the last meeting of Council of Ministers the Emperor introduced the project of a law abolishing the whole system of workmen's registers. He expressed his satisfaction with the results attained by the progressive measures of the past few years. After reviewing former legislation enlarging the rights and liberties of the workingmen of France, he said he believed that the law he now proposed would place them in their proper position, tend to disarm hatred, and cause force to give way to right. The Emperor's project was adopted by the Council, and the law will be submitted to the Corps Legislatif at an early day.

Madrid, March 24. The draft of the new Constitution was laid before the Constituent Cortes today. Its leading features are as follows: The government is to be monarchical in form, with a Senate and Congress. The Senatorial term is limited to thirteen years. Senators are to be elected by Provisional Councils—four for each Province. Deputies to the Congress are to be elected every three years by universal suffrage. The reign of the King is limited to a term of eighteen years.

The majority of the committee which reported the Constitution are favorable to the separation of the State and Church. The minority propose that the Roman Catholic be retained as the religion of the State with toleration for other creeds. The liberty of the press and the right of public meeting are fully guarantied by the new Constitution.

The Cortes has passed the Conscription law.

London, March 24. The debate on the bill for the disestablishment of the Irish Church was resumed in the House of Commons to-night.

Mr. Spencer H. Walpole, member for Cambridge University, opposed the bill, and the O'Donoghue member for Tralee made a fervid speech in its favor.

Mr. Gathorne Hardy followed. He said that the strength of the Liberals came only form the majorities at the hustings. It rested on no firmer basis. Mr. Gladstone had pledged himself and his followers to the destruction of all that was deemed most sacred. The destruction of the church was urged by envy and jealousy. The speaker maintained that the church had always fulfilled its mission.

Mr. Gladstone concluded the debate. He reviewed the course of the bill, and the arguments which had been made for and against it. He declared that a new policy was necessary for Ireland, and this was the first step demanded by the unanimous voice of the majority.

Mr. Gladstone resumed his seat amid deafening cheers, and the House divided on the motion that the bill be read a second time, with the following result:—For the motion 368; against the motion 250. Majority for the government 118.

The announcement of the result was greatly cheered in the House, and the cheers were taken up by the people in the lobbies, and the news was thus conveyed to an immense crowd outside the House, who joined in the applause with the wildest enthusiasm.

The House at 3 o'clock in the morning adjourned over the holidays to the first day of April.

Paris, March 27. The Gaulois newspaper says that the Emperor Napoleon has demanded an explanation of the King of Prussia in regard to the recent mobilization of troops in the western provinces.

March 29. Officers and privates on leave of absence have been ordered to rejoin their regiments on the first of April.

London, March 27. Advices from Spain render it certain that Montpensier will be proclaimed King. He will arrive in Spain within a fortnight on the iron-clad Victoria, now in Lisbon.

DOMESTIC.

New York, March 24. A Buenos Ayers letter states that the allies at Asuncion were preparing to pursue Lopez, who had been recruiting his army about twenty leagues from the capital. The people have all removed to him, and Concepcion, Villa Reca, Cerro Leon and several towns are completely deserted.

Minister McMahon remains with Lopez, and the archives of the American Legation at Asuncion have been scattered.

San Francisco March 22. The Oregon papers report that smoke is issuing from the volcanic mountains of Hood, Jefferson and Three Brothers, earthquakes are expected as a consequence.

The Indians of Humboldt county, who have been committing outrages on the settlers, lately attacked a government train, killing ten mules and wounding many more. The loss sustained will reach $12,000.

The prospect of good crops is encouraging throughout the State. Wheat and barley promise better than in any previous grade.

Crossing the English Channel.—There are four plans proposed for establishing a passage across the English Channel between Dover and Calais. The expense of the several plans ranges from $200,000 to $100,000,000. The cheapest plan is a tubular bridge, and the most expensive one is to have a series of large ferry boats, with powerful engines, capable of receiving and carrying the train across the channel, and so large that the motion of the sea would hardly be felt. The other plans are, a suspension bridge, which will cost $40,000,000, and an ocean tunnel, which will cost $50,000,000. Some of these plans are before the British Parliament in the shape of bills.

Notices.

Notice.

I intend, the Lord willing, to return to the St. Louis Mission about the middle of April, to labor there two months or more. If desired by any living on or near my route back, I would stop and preach at three or four different places. Those wishing my labors, will please write me to Savoy, Mass., immediately, giving all particulars as to route, where to stop, who to inquire for, etc. H. K. Flagg.

P. S. I can return by either of the three routes—by Albany, by New York, or by Philadelphia, as the Lord may open the way. H. K. F.
Savoy, Mass., March 13th, 1869.

Notice.

By invitation of the church at Collinsville, Ct., the next quarterly session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held in their hall, beginning Wednesday, April 21st, 1869. Preaching first evening. The place is accessible by railroad from New Haven, on the Canal road to Plainville; change cars then for Collinsville. From Hartford, on the Providence and Fishkill road to Plainville; then change cars as above. Come in the Spirit. L. F. Moore, Secretary.

Conference.

If the Lord will, there will be a conference held in Garland, Me., at Holt's Mills, commencing Thursday evening, April 1st, at seven o'clock, and continue over Lord's day. As this is a new place for such a meeting, the brethren are anxious for a general attendance of the preaching brethren. Call on Brn. Millet, William Field, and Gardner Farmer. Bro. Farmer lives about one half mile east of the school-house. Those coming from Bangor and vicinity had better inquire at Bean's Mills, on the notch road, for Holt's Mills. Those coming from the north and west, inquire for Brn. Wm. Field and Abner Millet, at Garland Village. Preaching brethren will probably find a home at K. Holt's, at the Mills. It is desired that brethren living in adjacent towns and neighborhoods should attend and lend a helping hand. Further particulars hereafter.
In behalf of the church, O. G. Trundy.

Notice.

By the request of the brethren at Edenboro, Erie Co., Pa., I will join Bro. J. Wendell in holding a two days' meeting of the church in Edenboro, April 16th, and over Sunday, as Bro. Wendell and the church there may arrange.

Facts and testimonies concerning Papal Rome in its present condition, of a very interesting nature. Illustrated with good engravings. Per dozen, by mail, $1.06; single, by mail, 12 cts.

3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. 4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.
5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $1.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.
6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing; but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.
7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.
9. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; embracing testimony from the above sources, concerning the nature and destiny of souls. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single 8 cts.; by mail, 9 cts.

For the World's Crisis.

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

We are pilgrims and strangers in this land of unrest,
But we seek the city of the pure and the blest;
We are often here oppressed and with sorrow cast down,
But we seek life eternal and a glory-gilt crown.
O that city! crown immortal!
In the bright world to come.

We are very often found in the slough of despond,
But a hand lifts us out and points to life beyond;
We are often heard to murmur, and bitterly complain,
But ask what we will, 'twill be done in his name.
O that promise! O how cheering!
Let thy will on earth be done.

We are closed in with darkness, like the still hours of night,
But beyond the dark cloud the sun shines bright;
We are tempted and tossed, and often dismayed,
But we know our life is bought and our mission paid.
O that purchase! blessed ransom!
Made by God's only Son.

We are saddened in heart that our hope is long deferred,
But we know he'll come again, for he says so in his word;
We are trying in patience to say, "Thy will be done,"
For we know it wont be long ere the kingdom will come.
O, my Father, speed that morning!
Let thy kingdom quickly come.

SOPHIA JACKMAN.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTER FROM HUNGARY.

MY LABORS.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—After much reflection and prayer, I am resolved to open also our holy mission in Hungary, among the noble Huns, as well as the poor Slavonians and the Polanders, for which my sympathy is great. I reached Pest the 20th of January, and find in the streets of Pest and Offen abundance of mud, and the beautiful Danube entirely covered with ice, but very little snow. The ministers of the Lutheran and Calvinistic congregations in this very interesting city of the sons of Arpads received me politely enough, but, as everywhere, with authority and caution, fearing that the new reformation, and our solemn voice of warning for the second coming of our dear Savior, would disturb in some way their established "consistory and usages." My traveling expenses, notwithstanding the greatest economy, from Switzerland to Munchen and Vienna were very great, and for that reason it is impossible for me now to lecture publicly unless I should be able to pay twenty to forty francs for a hall; therefore I begin my mission entirely in silence, from one house to another, forming small family meetings around the city, mostly among the Catholics, who receive me with much candor. They never read the Bible, and prayed me to bring them. Unfortunately I was not able to buy more than three; one in German and two in Slavonian, which were received with much gratitude.

During the thirty-eight days of my difficult work here, God Almighty blessed me abundantly, by forming five small missionary stations around the town, one in the heart of the city of Pest, and one in Offen. Therefore I have done, with the help of God, what I could, by visiting the people privately, and conversing with the best and most influential Hungarians of this vicinity.

THE MISSION.

This Eastern European Advent Christian Mission in Hungary is of great interest to the church, and we must pray God that this great freedom that the Hungarians enjoy presently here (by the grace of Comte de Beust), under the Austrian domination, be also blessed with the pure gospel authority of this last message, which is so dear to our hearts, and that this glorious mission become in reality the morning star and the rising sun (Rev. 7:2), to show clearly to these people the great rebellious tyranny of fallen man, and the legitimate rule of Heaven.

THE COUNTRY.

The kingdom of Hungary, once so mighty and powerful, is even now one of the largest crown lands of the Austrian empire, containing 5,000 geographical or 110,000 English square miles. It is divided into Upper and Lower Hungary, or the circuits beyond and on this side of the Danube and Teiss, and contains fifty-two counties, which in independence and form of jurisdiction resemble the Swiss Cantons. Some of the counties occupy the space of a large territory; for example, Bihar county contains 4,200, and Pest county 4,050 English square miles. There are also entire circuits which have hitherto enjoyed peculiar immunities, freedom and privileges, as in the Jazygier and Rumania, as also in Little Rumania, between the Danube and Teiss, which have always had the Palatine as their highest judge.

The whole territory, almost surrounded by the majestic Carpathian chain from the Polish Galicia as a garden with a fence, and intersected by various navigable rivers, abounding with choicest fish, as the Teiss, the Save, the Drave, and the magnificent Danube, produces within itself all that the necessities and comforts of life demand. Distinguished by its excellent breeds of cattle, and by natural productions of every kind, as the best corn, wine, gold and silver, rock-salt and iron, with a climate temperate and very healthy, especially in Upper Hungary.

ITS POPULATION.

The population of Hungary according to religion: Roman Catholics, 6,000,000. United Greek church, 1,000,000. Lutherans, 1,000,000. Reformed, 1,000,000. Unitarians, 47,000. Russian Schismatics, 2,000,000. Jews, 250,000. Infidels and Spiritists, 1,880,406. Total, 13,177,406.

According to languages: Hungarians, 4,815,759. Slavonian, 1,667,256. German, 1,279,662. Wallachians, 2202,542. Croatians, 886,079. Raltzians, 828,365. Shobatzians, 629,868. Russniaths, 444,903. Polish, 100,050. Wends, 40,864. Bulgarians, 12,000. French, 6,150. Greeks, 5,680. Armenians, 3,798. Montenegrians, 2,830. Clementines, 1,600. Hebrew, 250,000. Total, 13,177,406.

THE PEOPLE.

The Slavonian people are generally poor and unlearned, but naturally intelligent, kind and humble, which is a contrast with the Magyars, who are a very proud and high-minded people, seeking all that can satisfy the flesh and blood before all; but still they are great lovers of sciences, truth and liberty. May God Almighty prepare them to seek also the liberty of Christ, and to cherish his holy gospel truth.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Still continues to occupy the public mind, and the great apprehensions of war in Turkey cause those who have the means to conceal it as much as possible; even the paper money is very scarce here, and much suffering results to the people generally from this awful speculation; but it cannot be otherwise; we are not living in the golden time of Nebuchadnezzar, but of the clay and iron, and this is the reason why we have neither gold or silver in the market. James 5:3 must be also fulfilled. But notwithstanding all these very heavy obstacles, the truth of the fifth and universal kingdom must and shall be proclaimed.

May God help me in his mercy to send to you more interesting rappotes from the East, is my humble prayer.

Your affectionate Bro. in Christ,
M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

Shall there not be some material encouragement sent to this indefatigable brother and missionary, to help him and the cause he would advance in this new and interesting field? In labors abundant, on foot and alone, should he not expect the warmest sympathy and cordial aid from his brethren at home? "The laborer is worthy of his hire."—Ed.

For the World's Crisis.

THEY WERE BURIED ALIVE.

Yes, buried alive! How sad the thought; yet how true. How oft we hear of such things, especially on the battle-field. When in those dark trenches, the poor soldiers who have fought bravely to save their country from ruin, dead, half-dead, arms gone, legs broken, heads cut off, some only slightly wounded but unable to walk, and perhaps to speak; amid the bustle and roar of cannon, and clash of arms, and shouts and shrieks of wounded men, and the flow of human blood; alike the dead are dragged into the dark tomb, to finish out their lingering lives, which soon will end when maddened horses and cannon wheels come rolling over them with the fury of war. Yet, being sensible of their fate, and unable to speak, they lift a hand, and perhaps utter a deathly groan, to let their comrades know that they are yet alive. But there are hundreds yet to bury, and no time to take them out.

But how much worse for the servant of Christ to bury men and women in baptism, the blessed emblem of the resurrection of Christ and his saints to a new life, while yet alive to the world, and to all its fashions and forms; having their ears shining with gold, and on their fingers is seen the shining ore; besides all this often found at the glass, while with iron hot, and hair in hand, they crimp and curl, as though they belonged to the worldlings' band.

Notwithstanding all this, if application is made for baptism, in they go into the watery grave, and are baptized in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. My Lord and my God, why is this so? It may be for the sake of increasing numbers in the church, or having the name of baptizing a great many. O, my God, save thy servant from having such desires for vain glorying as this. They forget the admonition of Paul, or else do not esteem it as being very important, when he says in 1 Tim. 2:8-10,—"I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands, without wrath or doubting. In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparal, with shamefacedness [or sober faces] and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." Also 1 Pet. 3:3,—"Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel."

Oh, say they, I do not think there is any harm in wearing a little, and especially a wedding ring. But remember, dear reader, that God has not made any reserve for wedding rings, nor friendship's presents. Such characters as are here represented are hindrances to the cause of Christ in every sense of the word. Alas! they were buried alive, when there was scarcely a sign of death about them.

Again I say, that such ofttimes are buried with Christ by baptism, the glorious representative of the death and resurrection of our blessed Savior, also of the resurrection of the dead saints to immortality, or a new life. 1 Cor. 15:51-52,—"Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed; in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." 1 John 3:2,—"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

Here is the great change which is to be wrought upon the saints of God, and for which all nature with outstretched neck is reaching forward and longing after.

But to bring about this event Christ had to die for the ungodly. Did he die twice? No, not but once. Did he die, the whole of him? Yes, thank God, without any reserve. Was he buried once, twice, three times? Not but once. Was the whole of him buried? All that died. Did he rise? Yes, he rose the mighty conqueror over death and the grave.

Christ died for sin; we die to sin. Christ rose to a new life with the Father; we rise to a newness of life by faith in Christ. Gal. 2:20,—"I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." So we must die to this world; being dead, we are buried with Christ (or in his likeness); we rise as conquerors over sin, flesh, and the devil; are raised from moral darkness to a moral life, from spiritual darkness to a spiritual life, being begotten unto a lively hope of being made like Christ when he comes.

Experience is a good school-teacher; and by it I have learned some things relative to the subject of which we now speak. I fear that some of the servants of Christ, with myself, have been at times in too much of a hurry to baptize persons after professing religion. I discover that there is a vast difference between converts and convicts.

Sometimes people take conviction for conversion; but if we are not in too much of a hurry, or too blind, we shall soon discover the true characters of all; for the rule which the apostle James speaks of works well yet. Jas. 3:11-12,—"Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive berries, either a vine, figs? So can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh." It seems to me that it may be well for us, brethren, that we be more careful in regard to this work, which we profess to be called of God to perform in his name.

There is great danger, I perceive, in doing our work (or the Lord's work), as though it was a matter of no importance to us how it is done, if it is only done; but Paul said (1 Cor. 14:40), "Let all things be done decently and in order." This should be remembered by all of God's workmen. We find that these difficulties arise more especially at times of revivals, and campmeetings, where there are so many, perhaps, to be baptized. And perhaps some whose God's humble servants have refused to baptize, on account of difficulties of which we have spoken, may have seen a notice in the paper that those wishing to be baptized can do so at the campmeeting; and so they go, and are baptized, in spite of all that's good or bad.

We are aware that it is crossing to inquire into these things, and to tell them that we can not administer to them the ordinance of baptism; but it will be worse for us when we come to see the reproach which has been brought upon the cause of Christ by our negligence and diffidence which we have manifested in this matter, and many others.

It is time, beloved, for us to know what we are doing, and to know that we are doing it right, and in the right time. God help us, brethren, to stand for the right. We do not speak these things on the authority of hearsay, but we have seen them with our own eyes, and felt the sorrow in our own heart. Sometimes people's feelings are deeply wrought upon by human sympathy only, and take that for godly sorrow, and are baptized; and that is the end of their religion. At other times, persons are persuaded by some particular friend, or friends, to be christians. This is all right, if the motive is right in this matter; but by this letter we wish to stir up your pure minds, brethren, by way of remembrance of these things. But if any who should read this discover that they have not been as careful in this matter as they should be, we hope they may profit by this simple letter, and try and do better in the future. For it seems to me, beloved, that if we were more careful about these things, we should not see so much reproach heaped upon the cause of Christ as salutes our eyes and ears almost daily.

And I here confess that for the reasons which I here present, I have at times refused to immerse. Whatever blame may be attached to me, or to any of my brethren, for so doing, I can not help. For I have learned that it is better to please God rather than man. For that which is without faith is sin. And I furthermore say that until I am convinced that I am wrong, I shall still refuse others who answer to the description as is here described. But my prayer is, O God, help thy servants to cry aloud and spare not, and not be governed by the feelings and notions of men, but rather by the Spirit and word of God.

O, ye servants of God, stand not still, but march on to the battle. Gird on the whole armor; victory is coming; it must come; it will be ours if we fight for it. Army of the living God, hast thou not heard that the Lion of Judah hath gotten the victory over the grave and every foe? Then be not dismayed, but with holy zeal take courage, and march onward till the victory is won. And while earthly kingdoms are reeling like drunken men because of the loss of blood, and nations are growing angry and are about to strike the fatal blow, stand like men of God against the surges of the sea of iniquity; and when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory which fadeth not away. Amen!

THE TRUTH.

BELIEVE IT—PREACH IT—LIVE IT.

One of the great faults of the professed friends of truth is a separation of these three essentials which God has married together. Some believe it (if they believe anything) who neither preach it nor live it. They do not believe the opposite error, but they are ashamed to say so, and they are unwilling to let it have an effect on their lives. It has no more power on their hearts than life has in a dead man. It is like the cold light of the moon, not warming any thing to life and growth; and when people are thus, the fear of offending the proud and popular, and of getting in the way of unfriendly opposers, causes them to hold their peace when they would speak for the truth if for anything; but they are negatives, and so not worth much to the cause. They are not even worthy of so much approbation as the fearless advocates of error; for fearlessness and boldness are commendable, and in error worthy of a better cause. The pearl they possess is laid up out of sight. Their talent is buried in a napkin, and its value is unknown; for all they may do, it will always remain so. I read of one who came to Jesus by night, "secretly, for fear of the Jews,"—Nicodemus by name. I believe he was a representative of this class; although some of these fearful, silent ones are better informed, and know better what Jesus meant, when he said, "Ye must be born again," being believers in the resurrection of the dead; but they restrain the Spirit of God, keep back the truth from flowing out in their lives, and through their life, and so do not confess Christ unto salvation. O, if we could only get this class out into the work, what good they might do. They understand the way; they do not need the Aquillas and Priscillas to "teach" them "the way of God more perfectly"; they are provided with the munitions of war, but have not the courage, or disposition, to fight.

It is true, nevertheless, that a belief of the truth is prerequisite to preaching it and living it; but those who thus "hold the truth in unrighteousness" are condemned because they stop short of the whole work. They are deficient in that heartiness which will make one active in bringing out of his treasury things new and old, for they only who heartily believe can be qualified to preach and live what they believe.

We notice, too, those who preach the truth, who neither believe it nor live it. They are mere hypocritical pretenders. There may be a form of hypocrisy in believing, and pretending not to believe; but the sheer, open, flagrant hypocrisy is in preaching, and not caring whether it be true or not; for then, one pretends to be a friend, when he is not; while the other only pretends not to be, when he is as much a friend as anything. These preachers are loud in their proclamations, and may get some to believe. They understand the theory, and the scriptural arguments, and they rattle through them like a parrot; but that is all. They accomplish but little, except for the devil, from the fact that it takes the life to substantiate the words, and there they fail, and are the worst of all people in the world as hindrances to the cause of God. Loud-mouthed bluster, trumpet-tongued boisterousness, clamorous mountebankism, is sickening and disgusting; and these parrot preachers are characterized by this sort of advocacy, unless one happens to be of that smooth-tongued, oily deceitfulness, so serpent-like, charming with poisonous effluvia.

True advocacy of truth, on the contrary, is characterized by a calm, dignified, solid, earnest, eloquent (in the true sense) effort to make people feel and receive that truth, which is to the speaker a glorious reality. There is no great cross in advocating what is of no great importance to the advocate; and hence this class get rid of the cross of the gospel. God pity them. There are far too many in the world.

Of the third class, we have but little to say, as such are seldom found; nay, never found, who live what they neither believe nor preach; but often we find those who strive to live, and avoid advocating the truth. Such persons are in effect but mere moralists,—not christians. The world sees, and can see no difference between them and others whose lives are just as good, and who claim to be only moralists. It is often said that it is better to live than talk; but we doubt it. One can not be done by the christian without the other; and no one can live as well without, as when advocating the truth; for the advocacy of truth gives a higher tone to a good life; it characterizes it; it proclaims what it is, for it gives meaning to it, and shows that it is not for mere moral effect that sins are broken off, and evil things avoided; but for truth's sake; for the sake of the cause of Christ; hence power and meaning are given to the life by the words, and to the words by the life; and to both by a hearty belief of the truth, which is like fuel and fire and water and steam to the engine.

Let us put the three together, or rather let them be where God has put them. It is a kind of trinity we believe in. Have it, and you will be always abounding in the work of the Lord. You will not be dwarfed, nor stunted, nor warped, nor gnarled. You will not be sheepish and squeamish, nor dumpish, nor drowsy, nor skeptical, nor dumb, nor blustering; not parrot-like, nor hypocritical, nor anything but faithful, earnest, working christians, constantly and consistently engaged in the work of the Lord.

TO THE BRETHREN.

Dear Brethren, one and all:—As we see the political people so busy in nominating their candidates, and trying to make people believe they are all right, and must be elected, what zeal they manifest. How hard they work, and how many faults of the candidates come to light. Then others try to make him out all right. The longer the campaign, the more corruption comes to light, and the more lying must be done. He is the regular candidate and must be elected. No split this time. We must go this ticket. So, brethren, we will not trouble them, but will go in for our candidate. Will you run the same good candidate this year? He has been up a long while. Who can find any fault with him? What has been his past life? Good. How was he to the poor? He was their friend. O, I have not time in this to speak of many of his qualities. You very well know he is all right. You know his policy,—equality is a part. On reconstruction he is right; the whole earth is to be brought back to its Eden beauty; his people all to be made immortal; land a plenty; privileges to the city—that beatiful city—fruit from any of the trees; sit if you please under the tree of life, walk the golden streets, visit and talk with any of your friends, and as long as you please.

I cannot stop to tell all you can have. You know it is good enough, so we come to the question, will you vote this ticket, and let all other candidates go? How small other candidates look, compared with him. Come, vote for him the rest of the time. Don't deny your faith any longer. Let the world go, politics and all, ballot box, cartridge box; let them all go. Vote for Jesus. He is sure to be elected. Stick to the regular nomination. See that your vote is all right, then vote early and often.

I hope and pray you will think this matter over. I have but just hinted at it. I have seen so much evil in trying to elect other candidates, I felt like saying a few words, hoping I have not hurt any one. The Lord help you, is the prayer of one who has left these things behind some time ago. Thank God. I have no candidate but Jesus. I am for him every ballot.

TEMPERANCE.

When I was thirteen years old, I went to learn the shoemaking trade with Mr. N——, in the town of W——. Up to that time I had never tasted liquor of any kind. Mr. N. was then doing a good little business, was a respectable citizen, and quite kind to me. But there was an evil that awaited him, and threatened me; that evil was brandy. This trap of Satan was cunningly set. It was common, when a pair of boots were sold at the shop, for the buyer to throw down a "York shilling," to procure some brandy to "treat." I, being the boy, was sent to the tavern to get the little stone bottle filled. On returning, the contents were dealt out to each one in the shop, and I, though so small a boy, was not slighted. My employer said it was good, and I soon believed it. I soon had learned who "treated," and was glad to see such men come to get work.

The appetite for strong drink soon so grew upon my employer, that I would often be sent to the tavern on Sunday morning with the stone bottle, to get a supply for the Lord's day, a little of which would sometimes be left till Monday morning. I was then, as now, an early riser. I made the morning fires. As I went to the cupboard early one morning to get a match to light the fire, I noticed the stone bottle on the shelf. I felt a great desire for a little brandy. I took the bottle in my hand, and found it was not empty. I raised it towards my mouth, but, though every soul in the house was asleep but myself, there was One near to a motherless and tempted child who never sleeps. I shall never forget the emotions of that moment of struggle which ensued between a depraved appetite and an enlightened conscience.

Upon that same shelf from which I had just taken the bottle lay my Bible, which had been given me by my brother, and which I always carried to Sunday School. I looked upon the bottle, and then at the Bible. I thought how much the love of this brandy had grown upon me in a short time. Now I was about to steal it. The contest was earnest, but victory turned on the side of reason.

I set the bottle back upon the shelf without tasting, and took down that dear, blessed Bible. With it in my hands and my eyes upon it I said, "I never will drink any more liquor" (or words of like import); and having so said I kissed the holy book. From that moment the temptation was no more. I had, through divine help, gained the victory. I took a match and lighted the fire, and felt happy in having taken the pledge, which was the first one I ever heard of. "Be not overcome with evil, but overcome evil with good."

AN ACROSTIC.

To Eld. Peter S. W. Deyo.

Press on, dear pilgrim, never fear,
Eternal life is drawing near;
Though troubles rise and sorrows come,
Each day will bring you nearer home.
Repentance preach to sinners dear;
Salvation too, the kingdom's near.
While foes surround on every hand,
Declare the truth, for Jesus stand;
Each error meet, each truth defend,
You'll be rewarded in the end.
Oft here on earth your heart is sad,
But Jesus, who is faithful, said
You who have suffered with me here,
My robe of righteousness shall wear.
Deliverance will surely come,
Press on, press on, you're nearing home.

— The Scripture is a river of truth and love that flows from God.

— The most corrective punishment is kindness.

— That is the best part of beauty which a picture cannot express.

— The real use of talking is almost lost to the world by the excessive custom of lying.

— Clothes and company do often times tell tales in a mute but significant language.

—More have been ruined by their servants than by their masters.

— Our wealth is often a snare to ourselves, and always a temptation to others.

— He is not only idle who does nothing, but he is idle who might be better employed.

— Repentance without amendment is like continual pumping without mending the leak.

— Good sense accomodates itself to the world; wisdom endeavors to conform itself to heaven.

— The seeds of repentance are sown in youth by pleasure, but the harvest is reaped in age by pain.

— Most of our misfortunes are more supportable than the comments of our friends upon them.

— Love, like the cold bath, is never negative; it seldom leaves us where it finds us; if once we plunge into it, it will either heighten our virtues or inflame our vices.

— The most common error of men and women is that of looking for happiness somewhere outside of useful work. It has never yet been found, and never will be while the world stands. Of all the miserable human beings it has been our lot to know, they were the most wretched who had retired from useful employments, in order, to enjoy themselves.

For the World's Crisis.

HOW MANY SUCH ARE THERE!

In conversation once with an aged saint of orthodox sentiments, he expressed himself thus with regard to the state of the lost:

"It is," said he, "an awful subject to contemplate. The idea of countless milions of human beings, suffering through endless ages the pangs and agonies of unmitigated woe. It fills my soul with sadness." He did not say doubt.

Another orthodox brother, who has stood firmly on the side of the Lord for over thirty years, and is highly esteemed by both saint and sinner, lately opened his heart to me on the same subject. He said the doctrine weighed almost constantly upon his mind. He says when he awakes in the night it is present with him and often prevents his going to sleep again till morning. It bows him down with sadness while such thoughts as these force themselves upon him.

"Oh, why could not the all-wise God have devised some plan to forever annihilate the miserable lost ones? Can it be that there is a necessity for such a decree? Can it be that the glory of God demands it? If so, how does it promote it?"

"Sometimes," he says, "I feel to exult in God my Savior, to praise him for his matchless love and woodrous grace. My soul mounts up as on eagle's wings. I am as it were on Pisgah's top, and I behold with holy rapture the blessed land. When, in a moment, thoughts of the lost force themselves upon me, and I am hurled down to the depths of sorrow. My joy takes wings, and I feel as though my soul were bowed, chained down, almost crushed by some unendurable weight."

The Lord blessed me in presenting to him a view more in harmony with the character of that God, who "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." A God whose justice is tempered with mercy. Whose love does not descend to fondness and indulgence. Whose righteous indignation does not degenerate into vindictiveness. Whose wisdom and foreknowledge anticipated, and whose mercy prevented, such a dire necessity, by making the way to the tree of life inaccessible to fallen Adam, lest he should live forever in his fallen state.

My soul rejoices in the God of the Bible, just and true, merciful and gracious in all his dealings with men; and in acknowledgement of this truth will every knee bow and every tongue confess. They that go down to the dust shall bow before him, and none can keep alive his own soul. In the judgment, even the wicked will be convinced of the righteousness of their sentence.

Oh, the subtlety of the old deceiver. He invents a horrid lie, palms it off on God's children as God's truth, and then uses it to turn men to infidelity, or with it so torment the child of God as to keep him weak; to prevent him from becoming strong in the Lord, and so destroy his usefulness.

Oh that the people who do know their God might be strong and do exploits in the name of the blessed Savior. What weighty responsibilities rest upon us. God help us to discharge them.

ABOUT FLORIDA.

BRO. GRANT:—Having just returned from Florida, I feel it my duty to write a few lines for the benefit of those who want to go to that country. I have been in Florida about three months for my health. I am troubled with the asthma, and I must say while I was there I was very much better; but when I came home I brought it with me. I think it is a very good place to go for that complaint, or lung difficulty, if one has the means in their hands to live on; for I will assure you that a man cannot stay there long without a mint of money. One man told me that the charges were a perfect robbery. When I was in Jacksonville, the climate was all that could be desired. In the winter I went south some forty miles, west some seventy miles, and to many other places. I took particular notice to see what grew out of the soil. I found sweet potatoes, sugar cane, and oranges, were the principal productions they raised to live on; the rest came from the northern market. They do in some places raise a little corn. The land is too poor to raise corn well. It is most all pine land, and any one who knows about farming knows pine timber grows on poor land; or it is considered so in this country. Some people pretend to call it good land in Florida. If white sand constitutes good land, they have got it; for the land in Florida is as white as flour, at least a great part of it.

Well, what do people live on? It is one thing—sweet potatoes, what they call hog and hominy. Their cattle are very poor and small; their swine more so. I was out in the country some thirty miles on a hunting expedition of a few days, and while there Mr. Thompson butchered five hogs, two years old; and what attracted my attention was, in the afternoon he cut them up for salting, and cut out the ham bone, and did it with a pocket knife. I should say the hogs might kick the beam at seventy-five pounds. That is a specimen of what they do in Florida. I must say it is the poorest land of any State I was ever in. There are plenty of people who have sold out and gone to Florida with small means, who would be glad if they had never heard of the place. Some have written home to their friends to lend them money to get back with.

I forgot to speak of Jacksonville market; they do have something they call beef, but it is enough for a northern man to look at it, without taking any home with him. By the way, I saw a man from the State of Maine, who went down to the Indian river to see the country, and they told him that people were leaving the country there. Some of them had been there one year, others for years, and they could not make a comfortable living. I think it would help Florida very much if they would raise the surface about ten feet; for a great part of the State is a swamp. I might say that Florida has got her part of sand flies, mosquitoes, snakes, and alligators.

In regard to the health of people in Florida where I have been, in every place I find the chills and fever; people either have got them, or have had them; and it is an uncommon thing to see a native of the country who is a healthy looking person. I do not believe Florida is a healthy place in summer. To be sure, oranges look splendidly on the trees, but what are they compared with the fruit we raise at the North? Now when you sum the thing all up, there is a class of northern men that have gone to Florida; some of them are in Jacksonville; and they have bought land, and built houses, and rent them at a very high price. One year's rent will build the house. Others have bought land to speculate upon. Those men are the ones who are writing about Florida, and call it next to Paradise. They say, Look at those beautiful oranges; how delightful! who would not like this country?

In regard to Jacksonville, it is nothing uncommon to see a dead dog, or a cat, or a hog lying in the street. I saw a dead hog lie in the street near the St. James Hotel for the last thirty days before I left.

Now if any one has got the Florida fever, and wants to go there, my advice is, go and see for yourself before you take your family. Perhaps some may say I am prejudiced against that place; but that is not so; for I did not go there to settle; I went for my health, and it helped me while I was there. Looking for the coming of Jesus,

AN INCIDENT.

One Sabbath morning, a few young men, comprising the praying band of the First M. E. church, assembled in their room, for their usual meeting before the morning services. Finding the room cold, they attempted to light a fire, but the matches would not burn. Finally, after exhausting their own supply, they borrowed a fresh lot at the parsonage, and coaxed some shavings into a feeble blaze. These, however, soon refused to do their duty, and the young men gave up the idea of a fire. They decided, however, to have a short meeting and then disperse. Soon they had peculiar feelings. One, who attempted to sing, said his throat seemed to choke. Others felt headache and throbbing pains. But, each, ignorant that others were affected peculiarly, tried to master himself and share in the meeting. However, on kneeling in prayer, these sensations became too dangerous for repressing. One left the room. Just then another fainted. His companions dragged him out. One by one they emerged into the open air with flushed faces, trembling limbs and racking pains. Sympathizing friends conducted some into the parsonage, and others to their homes. Physicians were called, and all finally recovered. Some were very near death, and all will feel the effects of this fearful trial for days. What could be the cause?

The room was used for meeting on Friday evening. Afterward it was closed, and the impure air confined to breed poison and disease until Sabbath morning. Then the door and windows were opened. But these are in one corner of the room and there was no fire to start a draft. So the bad air remained, and the carbonic acid from the last assemblage, reinforced by the effluvia so long confined, was ready to do its work of death. The boys tried to start a fire, but the fuel would not burn—even a match could not find oxygen enough to support combustion. But ignorant of chemistry, as are thousands of people, they remained and tried to compel their bodies to live where fire would not.

There was a broken pane of glass in the solitary window. Through this the bad air ran out from the upper part of the room, but below this level it was dense and deadly. They kneeled down for prayer, and so came under its influence more directly. The carbonic acid crept through the arteries and veins, stopping the flow of blood, dulling the pulse, flushing the cheek, clogging all the channels of circulation, and threatening life itself. The pestilential effluvia of the breath, kept bottled up in a room for thirty-six hours, was inhaled, and swept through, poisoning their whole bodies. Thus we have here one of the most natural results of the want of ventilation. There was no smoke or gas from the chimney. There was no odor strong enough to attract the attention of any one not sensitive to bad air. All was the straightforward effect of supposing that a window raised will of itself ventilate a cold room."—Elmira Advertiser.

CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.

Mr. Dunbar Moodie, late sheriff of the county of Hastings, writes to the Montreal News recommending vinegar and water as a cure for hydrophobia. He tells of a Captain Paul who was bitten by a mad dog on the finger, which soon commenced to swell and gradually increased, extending to the whole arm. A broad red streak extended on each side of the bitten finger up to the shoulder on the outside, and to near the armpit on the inside. He at once took a sharp pen-knife and scarified the finger all around the wound, which bled plentifully. He then moistened some common salt with vinegar, and rubbed it into the wound perseveringly. Gradually the red streaks disappeared until they were confined to the hand. The application of the salt and vinegar produced a copious discharge of watery fluid from the wounds in the hand. He then applied a common flour poultice for some time, until he thought the danger was past.

Several days ago an English lady, on a visit to a friend at Gosport, opposite Portsmouth, was severely bitten by a rabid dog in one of her hands, just as she was about returning in the ferry-boat to Portsmouth. The hand gave her great pain, but on immersing it in salt water the pain gradually abated. In this manner she kept the hand in the salt water all the way back to Portsmouth, which is about a mile from Gosport. By this means the salt water proved an effectual antidote to the poison of the wound from the dog's teeth. Immediately after biting the lady, the dog bit a coachman and a boy, both of whom died of hydrophobia.

FAINTING.—If a man faint away, instead of yelling out like a savage, or running to him to lift him up, lay him at full length on the floor, loose the clothing, push the crowd away so as to allow the air to reach him, and let him alone. Dashing water over a person in a simple fainting fit is barbarity.

— Health is purity, and purity is a condition of health. Every pore of the skin, every globule of the blood, and every fibre of the system, need to be washed every day with pure water.

EURIPIDES was one of the very few men who have been choked to death by the seed of a grape, but a great many die every day from swallowing the juice.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Come, ye that love your gracious Lord,
His table now surround;
Come, all who love his precious word,
Where faith and hope abound.

In memory of your dying Lord,
Come eat this sacred bread,
And drink ye all this sacred wine—
His body and his blood.

Let all examine each himself,
And then so drink and eat,
Despising pride and sordid pelf,
All low at Jesus' feet.

Remember now his dying groans,
His bloody sweat and tears;
For every soul he thus atones,
And drives away our fears.

Then upward look with longing eyes
For your returning Lord;
For soon he'll come from yonder skies,
Fulfilling all his word.

O, then, with him you'll eat the bread,
And drink the heavenly wine;
While crowns of gold adorn your head
With stars that brightly shine.

RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED.

BY L. C. COLLINS.

(Concluded.)

It is objected, as unreasonable, that the wicked should be raised from the dead to die a second time; as though they were made to suffer death, and be destroyed twice for their sins. It is asked, if "the people of the old world are to perish over again, and the inhabitants of the plains are again to be burned up"? The fallacy of all this is here. Under the present system of grace, the first death is not the penalty of the divine law for personal transgression. All men, good, bad, or indifferent, die. The old world and the Sodomites were all under this law of death; die they must. That they were prematurely cut off from this life because of their exceeding wickedness, will no more excuse them from the final judgment than the man who may now be drowned in the river, or perish in the flames of a burning steamer, or sink into death quietly upon his bed, shall be excused. All must be there. "For God will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."

God is going to make before his whole intelligent universe this clear, open settlement of all human accounts. And if we cannot see what good it will do, or what reason he has for it, our short-sighted fault-finding should cease forever, with the fact that he says he will do it.

If he has not said this, then I see not how it is possible for him to use human language to do it. Christ says (John 5: 28, 29): "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

There is no criticism, or system of interpretation, that can break the force, and change the plain import, of the above passage. And the sophistry and ingenuity that can evade its literal meaning, would invalidate the testimony of any witness, and change the signification of any written document, human or divine. I cannot state the doctrine of this essay, and I challenge any one to do it, in as unmistakable language as the Savior himself has done it here.

There is but the literal sense in which the good and the evil are in the grave. And both are to HEAR the voice of the Son of God. When it was said to Ezekiel's valley of dry bones, "Hear the word of the Lord," they did HEAR, and lived. So these "hear and come forth: they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of condemnation," to receive "the wages of sin," which "is death." Here is where the divine penalty comes in; when those who "live after the flesh shall die," and when those who "through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body shall live."

Paul says (Acts 24: 13, 25): "Believing all things which are written in the law, and in the prophets. And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."

It is claimed that Paul's faith in the resurrection, which he here calls his "hope," could not have included the resurrection of the wicked dead, inasmuch as their resurrection would stand connected with scenes of anguish and despair, that could be no object of "hope." But would not such an argument bear equally against the doctrine of Christ's second coming? Does not Paul say he will come in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel? Yet Christ's coming was his "hope"; and he calls it a "blessed hope."

But it is argued further, that Paul quotes here what the Pharisees believed, of which he believed only a part. Then, as an honest man, he should have quoted of their faith only so much as he did believe. I leave it to the candid reader to judge if he does not, according to all rules of language, endorse here what he does quote? If not, then he might have started out in telling what was his hope, and that they allowed it, and gone on and quoted their whole creed, when he did not believe a quarter of it. With my faith of a conditional and limited salvation, how would I appear before a Universalist council, declaring that "I had hope toward God, which they themselves also allowed, that the dead will be saved, both the just and unjust"? Now my faith is included in theirs, it is true, as a part is included in the whole; but I should judge it a very unfortunate way of stating it.

Paul here states the ground of his faith. "Believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets." The prophet Daniel had written this doctrine of the resurrection of the just and unjust. (Dan. 12: 2.) "And many of them [or the multitudes of them] that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake: some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." It is just as clear that those who come forth to shame and everlasting contempt awake, as it is that the others become conscious. The Pharisees claimed that the text taught this doctrine, and Paul squarely subscribes to it.

And, further, Paul clearly teaches this doctrine in his letter to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 15: 22): "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." The apostle is manifestly speaking of a general resurrection. "How say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" (verse 12.) Not from the dead, nor from among the dead, nor of a part of the dead, but of the dead, without limit or distinction. He predicates the resurrection of Christ upon this broad ground of a general resurrection. "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ risen. And if Christ be not risen," he goes on to show that here must end all hopes.

He then changes the argument, and asserts the resurrection of Christ, which he had before demonstrated (see verses 5–8), and goes on to prove a general resurrection. And he proves it as I would prove that they have a general summer in Minnesota. "How say some among you that they have no summer in Minnesota? If there be no summer there, then they can raise no corn; for no corn can be raised where there is no summer. But I produce the corn; here it is; the very corn that was grown there, of the best kind, and fully matured. And what is the conclusion? Why there must be a summer there. So he says, "But now is Christ risen from the dead [from those literally dead], and become the first-fruits of them that slept"—that had literally died. "For since by man came death [the death of the body], by man came also the resurrection of the dead"—the bringing back to life the same body. "For as in Adam [that is, by or through Adam] all die [go down to the grave], even so in Christ [that is, by or through Christ] shall all be made alive"—come up again from the grave.

This is the simple truth here uttered. It can have no reference to any thing other than a literal resurrection of the body. It proves this, and it proves nothing further—all that die shall be raised from the dead. It does not prove that all will be raised in glory, and be saved. "Every man" will be raised "in his own order," or rank. "Christ first"; "afterward they that are Christ's at his coming"; "then the end," when comes a destruction of enemies; enemies not glorified, but trampled, and crushed under foot. These enemies die; with their dying, death, the last enemy, is destroyed, because there are no more to die.

In Paul's description of the resurrection body, he passes over those who "come forth to a resurrection of condemnation," and dwells only upon those who "come forth to a resurrection of life"; just the same as he does when he comes to speak of the change of the living. He passes in silence over such as will be doomed to death, and speaks only of the glorious change that shall then pass upon the righteous. That he should speak of the dead as being raised only to glory, does not prove that the wicked are not raised in corruptible bodies to perish; any more than when he speaks of the living as changed to immortality, it proves that none are left in mortal bodies to die. Other Scriptures teach positively these points. But that he does not include all in his description of the resurrection body his own language shows—shows manifestly that he has only in view the glorified righteous. He addresses himself directly to believers. He says, "as we" "brethren" "have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." Then in passing to speak of those who shall be alive in that day, he says: "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." This I believe is the true exposition, and that it will stand.—Voice.

Perfection.—The discussion of differences is often greatly facilitated by accurate definitions. Speaking of the doctrine of sinless perfection, as attained upon earth, a Methodist preacher of some celebrity proposed to make it very clear. "Christian perfection, my brethren," said he, "is not angelic perfection, nor Adamic perfection; but it is to be as perfect—to be as perfect—to be as perfect—as—the nature of the case will permit." How perfectly now we can all agree in that!

IMMORTALITY.

II. The second main point on which all the writers before us are agreed is this—that the grand and distinguishing doctrine of the New Testament is, immortality only in Christ. Of this doctrine we almost hesitate to write; our conceptions of its importance and blessedness are so intense and exalted, that we fear to be charged with extravagance and absurdity. Seen in connection with it, many of the most fundamental doctrines of the christian faith—such as the Incarnation, Atonement, Regeneration, Resurrection, and Eternal Judgment, acquire, to us at least, a subjective reality and power which they do not otherwise possess. And not only so, but while this sublime truth thus enhances the value of each and all these doctrines separately considered, it at the same time binds them together in a unity of divine truth, which is indeed a true and living "body of divinity," and not the dead inarticulated skeleton which theologians have presented under that name. It may in truth be compared to the chemist's rod plunged into the saturated solution, for around it all the latent elements of revealed truth crystalize in forms of exquisite beauty; but we would rather liken it to a blazing torch lifted up amid the darkness of this world, casting upon the awful problems of human existence a gracious light, and revealing amid the bewildering mazes of theological speculation a straight and shining path for the faltering feet.

But let us hear what our authors have to say on this momentous subject. "The salvation effected" (by Christ,) says Mr. Burgh (an honored name among students of prophecy, which we should not have mentioned here, had not the admirable little volume published by him anonymously, been long ago publicly attributed to him,) "is most commonly expressed in terms which, according to the popular doctrine of immortality, have no meaning; such as the word 'immortality' itself, 'life,' and 'eternal life.' The passages in which the first of these terms occur have been already given; and it has been seen that it is exclusively applied to those who are saved, and spoken of in a way utterly inconsistent with the supposition that all are immortal. Thus in one of them the apostle describes the righteous as 'seeking for immortality.' But wherefore should a creature seek for immortality who is already immortal? Again, 'Christ hath brought life and immortality to light by the gospel;' but both of these, the popular creed says, the damned have as well as the saved, independent of either Christ or the gospel, by natural constitution, etc.

'Life' is another expression for the benefits of Christ's death (and resurrection,) and also used by itself, without any word of qualification. (See John 1: 4; 5: 40; 6: 33; 20: 31. Acts 3: 15; 5: 17, 18; 2 Cor. 2: 16; 2 Tim. 1: 1; 1 Peter 3: 7; 1 John 5: 12; and compare 1 John 2: 17.) Now what is the meaning of 'life' in all these passages? and why, of all words, is it thus selected to express the first of all the blessings of redemption, if all have life by nature, life in its fullest extent, immortal life? and, above all, how are we to receive the last of these sayings: 'He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son hath not life'? Shall we give it a positive contradiction, and read it—'He that hath the Son hath life; and so has he that hath not the Son'? It is easy to say that life is not here meant by life. And why, then, with reverence we would ask—why did not God say what he meant? Why, since all have life, do we not find the difference of the life marked (as was so easy to do) by some such qualifying terms as a 'blessed' life, and a 'miserable' life? Much is said about the Scriptures abounding in figurative language; but unless it be maintained that the whole is figurative, and that words are nowhere used in their plain meaning, these passages must be excepted; as it cannot be said they are taken from the poetical books, or quoted out of contexts couched in allegory, or symbolical in their structure. Moreover as has been before observed, this term 'life,' like 'immortality,' is nowhere predicated of the lost.

Again, 'eternal life' is another frequent expression for salvation. It is unnecessary to quote the passages; but when we read, 'The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord' (Rom. 6: 23,) where, it is again asked, is the sense of saying, that the gift of God through Jesus Christ is that which all men have already? And, what is the meaning of 'eternal life' in this passage? With what is it placed in contrast? With 'death;' and therefore we conclude that 'life' means life, or else we have a double metaphor in this most simple of all Scripture declarations. And 'God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.' What would the writer of a dictionary of Scripture terms say is the meaning of 'everlasting life' in this passage? That being contrasted with 'perish,' it must be understood literally; unless 'to perish' be to live everlastingly, and then there is no contrast in the passage." (pp. 16–19.

It is of course fully admitted that when the Scriptures speak of the eternal life of the righteous, they do not intend merely endless existence; but, as Mr. Dobney has well observed, "Although the life that is promised to them that believe, eternal life, is something unutterably more than protracted and interminable continuity of existence, yet this continuity of being must be an essential and a fundamental element—the very basis indeed—of the blessing to be secured, as seems to be taught by the distinctive assertion, 'He that doeth the will of God abideth forever.' Let us say that this 'life' held forth as a prize to man—who, though not immortal, is capable of immortality—is the very life of Christ himself, and therefore of God; so that the happy possessors thereof are indeed 'partakers of the divine nature' (2 Peter 1: 4.) Is not this amazing thought the one which especially predominates in the gospel and epistles of 'the beloved disciple'? With him Christ is emphatically 'the Life.' It is he who reports the deeper teachings of our Lord concerning his object in coming into the world: 'I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly;' 'I give unto my sheep eternal life, and they shall never perish;' 'Because I live, ye shall live also;' but to the despisers he says, 'Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life.'" (pp. 20, 21.)

Reader, is not this most emphatically a Christ-exalting doctrine? Truly does Mr. Davis affirm, "The doctrine for which I am contending especially exalts the Redeemer of men. We are not immortal independently of him, and indebted to him that we are immortal in happiness, instead of being immortal in woe; but for immortality itself, in other words, for eternal life, our only right trust is Jesus Christ. In the fullest sense that you can give to the declaration, he is our life. We derive from him spiritual life. And by spiritual life, I mean life through his indwelling Spirit; holy, happy, eternal life; not holiness alone, nor happiness alone, nor simply holiness and happiness combined, but with this, life itself; never-ending vital existence." (p. 18.)

As we write the music of the glad Christmas bells has hardly died upon the ear, and we surely do well to ask ourselves, What is it that we commemorate at this joyous and blessed season? Doubtless, as to the actual fact, the birth of the man Christ Jesus. But what does that fact really embody? What is its definite spiritual significance and value? We maintain that any answer is inadequate which falls short of this—It was the taking of an atom of our frail mortal nature into personal indissoluble union with the Divine nature, and in virtue of that union, lifting it up above the atmosphere of sin and death which encompasses this fallen world, into a higher, even a divine, religion of holiness, immortality, and glory, to be the seed or nucleus of that new creation, which is most really, to use a much abused but blessedly true expression, 'An extension of the Incarnation.' So that as we bend in adoring contemplation over the cradle of Bethlehem, we may, without the least poetic license, adopt the language of a recent poet when he says:

"It is the birth of a new earth,
Not of a little child—
This Jesus, born at Bethlehem,
Of virgin undefiled."

We would urge any christian reader who is not unwilling to receive this blessed doctrine of immortality in Christ, and whose mind consequently is not closed against it, to read the New Testament with special reference to this question, marking as he proceeds the necessary effect of its admission upon other doctrines of the christian faith. And if this be done without prejudice and in a receptive frame of mind, we cherish the confident anticipation that ere the search is concluded, he will have hailed the rising of a new spiritual sun, whose gracious light diffuses itself throughout the whole heaven of divine revelation, and be enabled to repeat the words of the beloved apostle with an emphasis and appreciation hitherto unknown: "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God. . . . And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in the wicked one. And we know that the Son of God is come, and has given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life." (1 John 5: 11–20.)

For the World's Crisis.

BIBLE, OR TRADITION?

Which will you have? We can have our choice. The responsibility is ours. Tradition declares man is immortal. The Bible nowhere admits the immortality of man, but always makes it a blessing to be sought after, and no way to reach it but by "patient continuance in well doing," and to be had only at the sounding of the last trump and resurrection of the dead.

Tradition says, We have "immortal souls," "never dying souls," or souls that can never die. The Bible assures us, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die"; that if we convert a sinner, we "save a soul from death." Let tradition tell us how we can save a soul from death if it cannot die; let logic answer.

Tradition rewards every man at death; the good go to heaven, the wicked go down to hell. The Bible rewards men at Christ's coming, and only then; "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works."

Tradition rewards men one at a time, before the day of judgment. The Bible has them all at judgment before they receive their reward. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."

Tradition gives all men eternal life; consequently, the unbelieving must suffer eternal misery, always dying but never die,—eternal life in misery. The Bible says Christ is the way, the truth, and the life; and makes life conditional on believing in Jesus. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Christ is the one to give life. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

Thus much at this time in drawing the contrast. There is no obscurity on the part of the Bible. The language is plain; none need mistake it, nor say they cannot understand it. Then, reader, look at the contrast and decide the matter between yourself and the great God, who gave us the Scriptures by inspiration, profitable for doctrine, instruction, and correction, thoroughly furnishing us for every emergency; securing us against every evil of this life, and ensuring us eternal life in the world to come. Now the question—Which will you choose?

"The Bible shall be my constant choice,
Believing it I shall rejoice."

Chelsea, Mass. L. Boutell.

For the World's Crisis.

INDIVIDUALITY AND INCREDIBILITY.

The trees of the forest, all drawing nourishment from the same soil, maintain their individual dignity. The hemlock will have its bitter, and the maple its sweet; the one yielding its foliage to frost, the other holding on to its green mantle amid the sleet and snows of winter. Why all this? Philosophy may say the maple opens her pores from which she sucks up her nourishment to the sweet, and closes them to the bitter; while the hemlock drinks up her supply of the bitter, and closes her pores to the sweet. Another philosophy will tell us, that they drink up the fluids alike, and that each appropriates to its use that which is adapted to its own nourishment and growth, according to its kind; each believing in turn that the individuality is only maintained in the different kind of trees, but not in trees of the same kind. For instance, the maple, the hemlock, or the apple tree, have no individuality among themselves. The contrary would look incredible at first; but when we see that little pippin cion maintaining its individuality, grafted into whatever apple-tree you choose; and when you see the little bud only of the "greening" triumphing over a whole tree of "baldwins" in its individuality, incredibility retires.

Now if God preserves this distinctive individuality in trees of the same kind, shall it be thought incredible that God should preserve the same distinction in men? When it is declared that he gives to every seed his own body, can it be supposed that man's individuality will be of less account? This certainly looks incredible, and Scripture denies it. "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption." The it that is sown is the same it that is raised. "I myself," is the language of Job. "I myself"," is the language of Christ. That which dies must live again, individual and distinct from others, or there is no resurrection of the dead. H. Pratt.

For the World's Crisis.

GREEK AND HEBREW.

Many of our brethren are at the present time searching the Scriptures and employing every means in their power to get a better knowledge of the Bible. To this end they have been trying to learn the original languages more perfectly, especially the Greek of the New Testament.

I wish to give a word of caution to those who do not thoroughly understand the Greek, that they be more careful how they quote or use the Greek text. For they not only expose their own ignorance, but they lead others into error also. "If the blind lead the blind, they will both fall into the ditch," and become a laughing stock to the world.

For example. We find a criticism in the Crisis, No. 25, on the word "Semeron," in which the writer corrects the erroneous application of the word. The previous writer had rendered the word "Seemeron,"—"day," "a day," "same day." The term "Seemeron" is found in the Greek N. T. forty-one times, and is rendered "this day" twenty-three times, and "to-day" eighteen times. The word "day" in John 20: 19 is translated from "heemera."

This is not the only case that we might mention. Some of our most (would be) prominent writers are guilty of misapplying the Greek text, and by so doing lead the people into error. I hope that they will take a hint when they read these few lines, for there are those watching who will expose them if they do not desist.

Brethren, let us not search the Scriptures merely to maintain some petty theory, but to understand the truth. Let truth be our motto. The truth is what we want. There are but few texts in our common version of the New Testament for which we need the original Greek text in order to get a proper understanding of them. Yet there are a few which gain an essential difference by the proper reading.

May God help us to search earnestly for truth, knowing that we are in "the time of the end," when many shall search and keep searching, and "knowledge shall be increased." But let us be careful lest we be carried away by the errors of others. We are truly in perilous times. We need to "watch and be sober," lest we be lulled to sleep by the peace and safety cry which is so universally made at the present time. Remember that "when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, ... and they shall not escape." J. W. Burroughs.

Neponset, Ill.

— A profligate young fellow seeing an aged hermit go bare-foot by him,—"Father," said he, "you are in a very miserable condition if there is not another world." "True, son," said the hermit, "but what is thy condition if there be?"

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT.

5. God is tired and rests.—"For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed." Ex. 31: 17. "I am weary with repenting." Jer. 15: 6.

God is never tired, and never rests.—"Hast thou not heard that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary?" Isa. 40: 28.

The effort here made is purely of a technical character, and will need but a few words to expose the infidel's cavil.

In regard to God's resting and being refreshed, we would say that the Douay Bible gives us a fair translation of the passage, "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and in the seventh day he ceased from work." This view of the text at once removes all objections. Jer. 15: 6—"I am weary of repenting," does not express the idea of physical exhaustion on the part of God, but a state of regret for the many sins of his people; whereas Isa. 40: 28 implies that God has ability to perform without exhausting his power.

The one text (Jer. 15: 6), alludes to God's sympathy with his people, and his sorrow for their disobedience, while the other shows that he is able to execute all he has promised. Hence the texts are not contradictory.

6. God is everywhere present, sees and knows all things.—"The eyes of the Lord are in every place."—Prov. 15: 3. "Whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the earth, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand hold me."—Psa. 139: 7, 10. "There is no darkness nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves. For his eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings."—Job 34: 21, 22.

God is not everywhere present, neither sees nor knows all things.—"And the Lord came down to see the city and the town."—Gen. 11: 5. "And the Lord said, Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous, I will go down now and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not, I will know." Gen. 18: 20, 21. "And Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord, amongst the trees of the garden."—Gen. 3: 8.

The omniscience of God is a plain doctrine of revelation, and to suppose otherwise is to undeify him, and rob him of his divinity. The skeptic, however, claims that the Bible is inharmonious on this point, inasmuch as it teaches that God is not all-wise, and as proof we are referred to Gen. 11: 5, Gen. 18: 20, 21, Gen. 3: 8. The most important of which we will examine. Gen. 18: 20, 21, may be considered the most worthy of notice. The Lord here spoken of as coming down to see if the cities were as sinful as was reported, etc., has reference to the angels who came down from heaven to inflict judgment upon these wicked cities, provided that a certain number of righteous men could not be found therein. This position will appear plain by examining the context, and will, we trust, remove the obscurity. In Gen. 18: 1, it is stated that "the Lord appeared" unto Abraham, the second verse says Abraham saw "three men," and in the third verse he addresses them as "my Lord." Two of these angels journey towards Sodom, while one remains, and with him Abraham pleads for the saving of the city. The two angels appear in Sodom at even (Gen. 12: 1), and Lot addresses them as "My Lords," and in verse thirteen they make known to Lot their mission in these words, "For we will destroy this place, because the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the Lord, and the Lord hath sent us to destroy it." See also verses 15 and 16. Hence the Lord here spoken of had direct reference to the angels of God, who came down from heaven to execute the judgment of Jehovah.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT IS IMMORTALITY?

This is a very important question. It is positively declared by the great apostle to the Gentiles that God "only hath immortality."—1 Tim. 1: 16. If God only hath the principle of immortality, eternal life, then, of course, no human being can be in possession of it as an inherent principle of life. How is immortality to be obtained by man? As a gift from God; for, "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Then, of course, no one has it till God gives it to him. But when is immortality, or the principle of eternal existence, to be given to finite man? Not till he has passed through death, or that which is equivalent. At the resurrection they come forth to life, or are raised from the dead; and then the life which is hid with Christ in God will be imparted to us, and we shall appear with him in glory. Then will be fulfilled our Savior's declaration, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." At the resurrection, the Savior will give them that are his the power of eternal existence, from the time they are raised from the dead; and no person will ever be in possession of the principle of eternal life while he is in a state of mortality and subject to death; for it would be a perfect contradiction of terms to say they had eternal life, and still had got to die before the Savior could give them eternal life. The doctrine of the immortality of the soul originated among the heathen philosophers and priests. Is it right to keep before the people a doctrine which is condemned by common sense, reason, philosophy, and the Bible?

Says the objector, How is the doctrine of immortal-soulism in opposition to the Bible? We will try to show you. God has declared that "man is mortal."—Job 4: 17. The Bible plainly tells us that "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6: 23. Jesus said when here on earth, "I am come that they might have life."—John 10: 10. Please read the following passages: John 1: 4; 3: 36; 5: 39–40; 6: 35; 11: 25; 14: 6; 1 John 5: 12. These passages plainly show that, in order to have eternal life, we must receive it from God through Jesus Christ, or not have it. Every thing in God's word shows us that no part of man is immortal, or can be made immortal, or have eternal life, until Christ comes the second time and raises the dead, and changes the living.

Why does the great apostle Paul tell us that our life is "hid with Christ in God," and that we shall have it when Christ comes? Col. 3: 4. And why does he tell us to "seek for immortality," if we have immortal souls that cannot die (Rom. 2: 7)? and why does God tell us in his word that he will render to us eternal life (Rom. 2: 7), if we have already got it?

We will now show from the word of God that the souls of the wicked must and will die. We read in Ezekiel (18: 4), "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ps. 22: 29, "No man can keep alive his own soul." In Jas. 5: 20, we are informed that "he that converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death." How can an immortal or never-dying soul be saved from death? I must confess I do not know. Will you tell me how the passage of Scripture in Ps. 146: 4 is fulfilled, if the soul is immortal and knows more than all the living when the man is dead? "In that very day his thoughts perish." Look at Isa. 53: 10–12; and Eccl. 9: 4–6, 10;—"The dead know not anything"; "their love, and their hatred, and their envy, are now perished." How can a dead person know more than all the living, when it is here declared they "know not anything"? Shall we be guilty of charging the Holy Ghost with a falsehood? The soul primarily means the whole man, made from dust. Gen. 2: 7. Sometimes the word is rendered person; sometimes life; and is often applied to beasts, and sometimes the blood in man is called the soul. But the word "immortal soul" is not to be found in all the Bible. B. Perham.

NOTES ON 2 TIM. 1: 10.

As addenda to an excellent article in the Crisis of Feb. 17th, I send the following note by Dr. Adam Clarke on the above text, as found in his Commentary, as confirmation of a well-sustained position; the more valuable on account of its paternity.

"'Who hath abolished death' [katargeesantos men ton thanaton]. Who hath counter-worked death, operated against his operations, destroyed his batteries, undersunk and destroyed his mines, and rendered all his instruments and principles of attack useless. By 'death' here we are not to understand natural death merely, but that corruption and decomposition which takes place in consequence of it; and which would be naturally endless, but for the work and energy of Christ. By him alone comes the resurrection of the body; and through him eternal life and glory are given to the souls of believers.

"'Brought life and immortality to light.' The literal translation of the original is, 'He hath illustrated life and incorruption by the gospel.' Life eternal, or the doctrine of life eternal, even implying the resurrection of the body, was not unknown among the Jews. They expected this, for they found it in their prophets. It abounded among them long before the Incarnation; and they certainly never borrowed any of it from the Christians; therefore, the gospel could not be stated as bringing to light what certainly was in the light before that time. But this doctrine was never illustrated and demonstrated before; it existed in promise, but had never been practically exhibited. Jesus Christ died, and lay under the empire of death; he arose again from the dead, and thus illustrated the doctrine of the resurrection; he took the same human body up into heaven, in the sight of his disciples; and ever appears in the presence of God for us; and thus has illustrated the doctrine of incorruption. In his death, resurrection and ascension, the doctrine of eternal life and the resurrection of the human body, and its final corruptibility, are fully illustrated by example, and established by fact."

I would that Dr. Clarke had always been as correct in his expositions, as consistent with truth. The rendering of the text in the Emphatic Diaglott, is as follows: "Who has indeed rendered death powerless, and who has illustrated life and incorruptibility by the Glad Tidings." On the last clause of the 12th verse, Clarke says:—

"'That which I have committed unto him.' This is variously understood. Some think he means his life, which he had put, as it were, into the hands of Christ, in order that he might receive it again in the resurrection, at the great day."

This certainly was Stephen's dying request (Acts 7: 59), "Receive my spirit,"—take my life as a sacred, a final deposit, to keep unto life eternal, to be restored by Christ at the last day to the veritable Stephen who, having prayed thus, "fell asleep," and "was carried"—not by angels to Abraham's bosom, but "by devout men to his burial," to await the blessed resurrection, his life being "hid with Christ in God." Col. 3: 3–4.

The Note in the "Cottage Bible" is as follows:—"'And brought life and immortality to light.' 'Life and immortality,' as Tillotson remarks, 'is a Hebraism for immortal life.' It cannot be denied, that not only the Jews, but many of the heathen also, had anticipations of a future state; but they were comparatively defective and obscure; and the latter, at least, may be compared to moonshine, faint and cold; but the gospel throws the full beams of the Sun of Righteousness on this doctrine, and renders it resplendent and illustrious. Some, however, translate the Greek word—aphtharsian, not immortality, but 'incorruption' [so Parkhurst], and refer it to the doctrine of a resurrection; of which, indeed, the heathen were wholly ignorant, and which was rejected by many of the Jews; but it was clearly revealed in the gospel, and an example of it exhibited in the person of Jesus Christ." Read and ponder. C. P. Dow.

PITTSFIELD.

We spent a pleasant Sabbath in Pittsfield, N. H., March 28th. The meeting was held in the Town Hall, which was crowded with a very attentive audience. The morning love-feast was excellent. We have never found the people there more ready to hear than they appear to be now. The truth is spreading in that town. There are some devoted christians in the place, whose influence is most healthful. They are christians every day, at home and abroad. They are known and read of all men.

We had a pleasant interview with Brn. Emerson, Mooney, and Leavitt, who are faithful men in the vineyard of the Lord. Two rose for prayers, and we all felt refreshed in the Lord.

NEW BEDFORD.

Our meetings have been continued in the City Hall, New Bedford, to this date (April 1st), with cheering results. Many now see the glorious truths of the Bible in a clear light. An intelligent lady, who was a member of one of the evangelical churches, said: "The preaching to which I have been listening in my own church has thrown me into skepticism, because it made the Bible so mystical; but now, after attending the meetings in the City Hall, all looks plain, and I see new beauties in Christianity, and I love Jesus and the Bible better than ever." Her testimonies in the meetings were heart-cheering. Several others expressed themselves in a similar manner. Backsliders returned to the happy embrace of the Savior. The prayer and conference meetings continued to be most precious seasons of refreshing to the friends of Jesus. Many from other churches came in to worship the Lord with us, and to help praise his holy name.

The church in New Bedford has taken advanced ground in the service of the Lord, and feel determined to live nearer to him who died to save them. They felt more like coming out from the world, and being separate; and they see the necessity of such a position, in order to be ready for his coming. The church is giving a good light in that city. May the Lord help his children there to shine brighter and brighter till the perfect day.

April 2nd. Our meeting last evening was the best of all. About one thousand people were present. The scene was solemn and glorious. The children of the Lord felt great liberty in prayer and exhortation. Backsliders confessed their wanderings, and several rose for prayers. It was truly good to be there, because the Spirit of the Lord was upon the people, giving much joy to the saints, and heart-trembling among sinners. We felt most sensibly the approving smiles of our heavenly Father. Bro. Batchelor was with us to assist in the good work. He is one of the faithful laborers in the Lord's vineyard.

LAWRENCE.

We spent Sabbath, April 4th, in Lawrence, and found a prosperous church. The Spirit of the Lord was with us. There is much interest to hear concerning the great truths of the Bible. We called on Bro. and Sr. Wm. Ingham, who have spent the winter in Lawrence. He remains about the same as he was last autumn. Those who knew him as a preacher, will remember his faithfulness and self-denial in the cause of Christ. He and his dear companion are worthy of christian sympathy, and in their sad circumstance would be greatly comforted with any thing sent to assist them in obtaining the necessaries of life. Please remember them in your prayers and donations. Direct to Mrs. W. M. Ingham, Box 56, Lawrence, Mass.

FULL OF MEANING.

The following saying, from one of our exchanges, is full of meaning:—"Satan's most artful device is to induce disbelief in his own existence." A thief would be anxious to have people believe that there was no such person in existence, and then the doors and safes would not be locked against him. The seducer would like to have every body think that all were pure, so that his wicked devices would not be suspected. So Satan would be much pleased to convince all that he did not exist; then no one would be on the watch "against the wiles of the Devil." All the Spiritualists are proclaiming for him that he is an imaginary being,—the invention of early christians, used to frighten silly, weak-minded people. They say the time has come to put away such foolish notions. Just when he is doing all in his power to overthrow christianity by the work of his demons, or angels, he would have us believe that he is only a myth of the past, and not a reality.

We see no reason to doubt the Devil and his angels are as truly literal beings as the Lord and his angels. He who disbelieves in his existence is certainly in much more danger of being drawn into his snares than one who believes and watches for his seducing wiles; believing that he is laying plans to lead all, if possible, to follow him and his teachings instead of Christ. If ever the christian needed "the whole armor of God," in order to be "able to stand against the wiles of the Devil," it is now. Let us be wise, be on our guard, lest we fall by yielding to the temptations of Satan, as did our first parents in the garden of Eden.

PLANCHETTE.

The little instrument, known as the Planchette, is being very widely introduced. It has become a fashionable parlor companion. Of course there is nothing wrong in the instrument itself; but its use is wholly opposed to Christianity. Says the "Religio Philosophical Journal," a Spiritualist paper, published in Chicago:—"Planchette is, indeed, revolutionizing the world." The Spiritualists call it a "flank movement," by means of which they have been able to introduce Spiritualism into thousands of families, who would not go near a circle for information. The instrument is a convenient machine for the use of the demons, when they wish to give communications. Every lover of Jesus should shun them as he would deadly poison.

NAPOLEON III.

A writer says:—"When Napoleon wants peace, get ready to fight." We believe there is much truth in the statement. The Emperor says one thing and means another. He is truly a "wonderful man." It is generally believed that he is preparing for some grand move the coming season. He has cried peace till he is well prepared for war upon a grand scale. Some of the governments of Europe have but little confidence in his word, and have been taking measures to be ready for terrible scenes, when they come. No nation dares cross the path of Napoleon; but Prussia feels unwilling to be dictated by the French Emperor. She is making earnest preparations for war, and thus has caused Napoleon to demand a reason of the Prussians for such warlike movements. Much depends upon the answer.

We think the time is at hand when Napoleon will seek some excuse for declaring war upon Prussia as a reward for the snubbing given him by Bismark two years ago. If Napoleon moves to the battle field, all Europe will be aroused. The aim of this mighty monarch is to establish "universal suffrage" in Europe, and humble all the powers that stand opposed, and thus make himself the head man among the people, and be worshipped as their Messiah; causing them to believe that he is the Deliverer promised. This is the aim of the demons, who are operating through him to accomplish their diabolical purposes. How far they will succeed is yet to be seen. We would not speculate in relation to coming events, but we feel sure that we are not far from stirring scenes. Those who look for the triumph of christian principles among the nations of the earth will certainly be disappointed. Satan will cause the cry of "peace" to prevail amid the most gigantic preparations for war, in order to keep the watchmen asleep till it is too late to sound a successful alarm. When planning for the worst, he will spare no effort to blind the people, and make them believe a "good time is coming," in consequence of certain political and social improvements; but he will be careful to keep Jesus and his word out of sight, and not have them incorporated into his proposed reforms. He is making great efforts to substitute a system of Humanitarianism for the pure religion of Jesus. Popular ministers are proclaiming that Christ was only a good man, much in advance of his times, setting a worthy example in those days; but that the old system of christianity should now be changed for the improved one as advocated by the Parker school, and others, who receive their sentiments from the teachings of demons given through their mediums. An earnest effort is being made to subvert pure christianity, and establish a religion, which in every feature, is entirely counterfeit. The whole tendency of the popular current is in this direction. This is the time for christians to watch and pray. Napoleon will endeavor to keep on the top wave of popular opinion, and act as the prime minister of Satan in this world, to bring about the state of things most pleasing to the Devil and his angels. The eyes of the great men are upon him, wondering what he will do next. The mass of the people in the old world, including the various religious and political interests, are looking to him as their deliverer; while he, in turn, is looking to them as his supporter.

The following is from the Boston Evening Transcript, March 30th:—

GATHERING STORMS IN EUROPE.—The cable brings to the papers of to-day one item of news, which, if reliable, is of great import. It is stated that all officers and privates belonging to the French army, on leave of absence, are ordered to rejoin their regiments on the first of April. Such an order always means business when emanating from the War Minister of the French empire, and at the present time it possesses peculiar martial significance. There are grave subjects of difference between France and Belgium, in which are involved the causes of animosity that have been smouldering beneath the surface of affairs since Bismark 'reconstructed' Germany, and curbed the ambition of Louis Napoleon. These troubles are of so great magnitude that the London Spectator of March 13th discusses and endeavors to forecast the conditions of a struggle for the conquest of Belgium by the French nation. It asserts that the English, however disinclined to fight, would not listlessly see Belgium incorporated into the French empire, but would exert all their power to prevent such an occurrence. Their determination, if known to Louis Napoleon argues the Spectator, would do much to persuade him against the attempt. Prussia would, of course, range herself by the side of England, while Austria would probably seize the occasion to wrest from Prussian rule the provinces lost to the House of Hapsburg in the late war. The part which Russia would take in the conflict would undoubtedly be determined altogether by its interests in the direction of the Euxine and the Bosphorus. So momentous is the war into which Europe may at any time be plunged by the desire of Louis Napoleon to strike at Prussia through Belgium.

It was thought that Bismark and the reticent occupant of the Tuileries had been made sufficiently friendly to avoid open hostility, but the French despot is the 'creature of destiny,' as was the great Napoleon. The mercurial people whom he has deprived of every popular right begin to chafe in their fetters. They cannot brook the idea of being virtual slaves at home, and cowering beneath Prussian power beyond the Rhine. They are now driving their once master, probably to his destruction. Under the semblance of a fair business operation, such as the purchase of a Belgian railway by a French corporation, he has tried to obtain easy entrance for his legions into Belgium, and thereafter into Germany. The Belgium Government flatly refuses to commit suicide, and hence the complications. Much will depend upon the course of England, as to the extent of the difficulties now quite menacing."

SEEKING HONOR.

"In honor preferring one another."

We were thinking how many among the public men of this county, and in the world at large, have a spirit in harmony with the passage of Scripture just quoted. We believe the Spirit of Christ never leads one to seek the honors of this world. Said Jesus, "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not that honor that cometh from God only?" John 5: 44. This being true, that honor-seeking prevents believing on Jesus, and leads to infidelty; then, of course, it will be Satan's policy to cause every one to seek "honor one of another." One prominent trait of character in the Pharisees, who rejected Christ, was to "love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and and the chief seats in the synagogues; and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi." Matt. 23: 6, 7. Are there any at the present day who profess to be watchmen on the walls of Zion, who, like the Pharisees, love to be called "Rabbi, Rabbi,"—Dr., Dr.? Are there any who are striving to obtain these titles?

Why did not the Pharisees believe? One special reason given is because they sought honor of men. It was asked by some when Jesus was on earth, "Have any of the rulers, or of the Pharisees believed on him?" John 7: 48. Of course not, so long as they sought "honor one of another."

The same question comes up at the present day—Does Dr. so and so believe what you preach about the signs of the times, the fulfillment of prophecy, the state of man in death, and the final end of the wicked? No. Why does he not see it? He is a learned man. We are not his judge. But is it possible that great men, in these days, should do as did the Pharisees at the first advent, seek "the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats" in honored places; "and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men" by high-sounding titles? If this be true, is there not a sufficient reason why they do not see and believe the simple, great truths of the Bible, that are now shining forth so brilliantly? The belief of these very truths would make them unpopular, and rob them of their high seats at feasts, fairs and festivals. But those who have consented to give all for Jesus, let their good name go, and be willing to become "of no reputation" as did Jesus, embrace and publish the whole truth, will testify that their peace is "like a river," and their evidence of acceptance with the Lord as bright as a sunbeam. Their dishonored position, sanctified through the truth, affords them more comfort than all the honors a vain world can bestow. He who seeks honor in this life must seek it from the enemies of the cross of Christ, because "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. By receiving honored positions, men escape persecution. Satan distributes the honors of this world among those who will help on his cause; hence Christ has taught us not to "receive honor one of another." We well know that poor human nature loves it, but when we become partakers of the divine nature, we cease to seek honor of men.

After we we become christians, if we yield to the temptation of the Devil, and again seek honor of men, we grieve away the Spirit of God, and then are left to do as did the Pharisees. It is to be feared that many professors of religion are in that condition; ensnared by the enemy, and do not know it. Let there be a heart-searching by the aid of God's word and Spirit; and if the enemy be found hid away in some corner of the heart, rout him with the weapon of all prayer, and give Jesus full possession.

The following leading editorial in the Boston Journal, March 15th, shows a striking contrast between the spirit of the world and the spirit of genuine christianity:—

THE OFFICES.—Now resounds through the corridors of Washington, up and down Pennsylvania avenue, under the arches of the Capitol, and particularly beneath the portals of the White House, the wild, fierce hunt for office. Aged and young, members of all trades and professions, and of none, join in the pursuit, groaning under autographic recommendations, button-holeing everybody deemed likely to afford assistance, and talking themselves hoarse. To begin with the highest class of offices, it is reported that there are probably twenty applicants for every foreign mission, each appearing sanguine of success. Senator Drake says that his Missouri constituents have put into his hands no less than a dozen applications for first-class foreign missions. The city of Pittsburg alone has seven applicants for foreign positions. We can form some idea, therefore, of the immense throng of general office-seekers, including representatives from every city and almost every town in the union, who have now opened their campaign in Washington, which will prove nearly as trying to the new President as his memorable struggle in Virginia.

It is useless to moralize upon this spectacle; it is merely bringing to the surface, somewhat rudely and unpleasantly, a feature of human nature which prevails everywhere, and no more strongly here than in other countries. It is to equally little purpose to urge young men, and others blest with good business situations, to keep clear of this mania for office: for it is by no means confined to the young or inexperienced. Show us a man who has already enjoyed a fair share of offices—has been a Governor, member of Congress, etc.,—and in nine cases out of ten, we are sorry to say, you show us a persistent, model office seeker."

It would be very difficult to persuade any of those office-seekers to come to Christ, or to embrace any unpopular truth; hence it has ever been one special object of the Devil to make all essential Bible truth unpopular; while he has done his best to popularize his noted lie—"Ye shall not surely die." Gen. 3: 4. If it were not unpopular, no doubt there are many who would to-day be earnest defenders of the great and important truth, that man in this life is wholly mortal, and is to obtain immortality "by patient continuance in well doing." Others would believe and proclaim the immediate and personal coming of Christ, if the doctrine was only popular. We had better die a martyr than to occupy such a position.

FROM BRO. C. C. COLEGROVE.

I enclose for insertion a part of a very interesting letter from Bro. R. C. Shimeall, well known as a copious, learned, and able writer on subjects relating to the coming kingdom. Although I have not his expressed permission for this, I trust it will be no violation of confidence or propriety. Permit me to remark that this brother has sacrificed all for the cause, and that if there is one who loves the appearing of Jesus, possessed of liberal means, who would feel it a privilege and an honor to aid a worthy champion of the truth of the immediate return of our Lord, there is here an opportunity for a merited benefaction. If the Lord is pleased to impress this hint on any thoughtful and benevolent mind, I am sure I shall feel rejoiced. His address is Morrisania, Westchester Co., N. Y. I may simply add that for one I have very great confidence in the general correctness of his prophetic interpretations. C. C.

"Thank God, my dear Bro., amid all the political complications and furor confusion created by misguided diplomatists and statesmen, and chimerical speculatists of these times, my faith in the inspired prophetic word remains unshaken. Yea, 'none of these things move me.' Why should they, so long as all the momentous events now transpiring upon the prophetic platform have but one direction and tendency, that of confirming my 'previous expectations.'

"The events now at hand are the following, viz.: the restoration of the Jews to the Holy Land, in their unconverted state, by Napoleon III. The unification of the Latin races into a Napoleonic dynasty, in connection with the gathering together, and consolidation under him, of the last great democratico-atheistic confederation of the nations of nominal Christendom. The 'battle of the great day of God Almighty' on the field of 'Armageddom,' which will be instigated by the treachery of Napoleon III., through a violation of his 'LEAGUE' with the Jews; their revolt, and his consequent invasion of Jerusalem, as described in Zech. 14: 1, 2, 3. Meanwhile, events of less magnitude, but of great importance, will transpire, either as accessory to, or growing out of, the greater; e. g.—I do expect soon to hear that the indomitable 'EUROPEAN SPHYNX' has arrogated to himself the title and prerogatives of 'Cæsar Pontiff' of the Roman church.

"The Herald of Jan. 27th, under the caption of 'NAPOLEON AND THE POPE,' has the following:—'The Emperor of France intends to give the Jewish and Protestant churches a legal standing and a voice in France, by making the Grand Rabbi and the President of the Protestant consistory SENATORS of the Empire. This is a notice to the Pope.' The editor adds, 'that his church is no longer omnipotent,' etc.

"In regard to the affairs of SPAIN, it is now being generally conceded what I have insisted on from the commencement of the revolution, that it would adopt a monarchical and not a republican form of government; and moreover, that whoever fills its throne, the incumbent will be placed there by the choice of Napoleon III., who is now playing a characteristically deep game in that matter, but a game which I firmly believe will secure the return of the trump card to his hand. It is this circumstance which leads him to cling with such tenacity to his long cherished idea of 'ITALIAN UNITY,' for it at once subjects France, Italy, Spain, and of course Portugal, aye, with it Great Britain, under Napoleonic rule. Let the papers talk about his 'fits of lethargy,' and approaching 'sinility and overthrow'! a deluded world and a sleeping church will soon learn, to their dismay and consternation, the truth of Dr. Bellows' words,—'intelligent phlegmatics rule the world.' I think that the recent European Congress at Paris on 'the Eastern Question,' is designed in the providence of God to avert any war as growing out of the Græco-Turkish imbroglio. 'The man of fierce countenance (Dan. 8: 23–25), viz., TURKEY, when he falls, it is not to be by the arbitrament of arms. The prophetic word declares that 'he shall be broken without hand.' (See Dan. 8: 25, last clause, and Rev. 16: 12.) That power is at the disposal of NAPOLEON III., and when his other plans are sufficiently matured, like the evaporation of a mighty river under the absorbing rays of the sun, it will cease to be."

PRAISE THE LORD!

What for? For all things, and more especially for the rich manifestation of his power among the people here, in converting sinners, reclaiming backsliders, and strengthening the weak saints. Agian I say, Praise the Lord! Eight more happy ones have just been baptized by Bro. L., making thirty in all that have been baptized this month, and most of these are members of the school.

O, what a work is going on among this people, and especially is he working among the young; and it is with them we must rest our hopes. The present condition of the colored people warrants us in saying, that should time last even a few years, the greater good can be accomplished by rightly directing the now rising generation, rather than by exclusively giving attention to the elder portion. This class has so long been under the old regime of violence and deceit, that the truth is not so readily received as by the young and tender-hearted. And when the truth of the gospel is once fixed in their minds, they have an antidote for every ill of after life, and something that keeps them from many of the superstitious notions of their ancestors; elevating them in the scale of humanity, and preparing a people for the judgment.

Is time too short for this work? Well, we can reach more among the youth with the gospel than any other class, and with greater effect for good; then why not put forth some effort for them? The Lord will have his own, and when the aged and middle-aged will not heed the invitation to the gospel feast, then those in the highways and hedges, who have heretofore been passed by, and have been suffered to remain unmolested, shall be summoned to the feast. So is the Lord at work.

I will not attempt to describe the last baptismal scene; the long procession, the river alive with boats, the sweet songs of praise welling up from the waiting congregation, combined to make an impression that will not be effaced while reason retains her throne. And these scenes are frequently occurring, as the poor children flock to the Savior and find sweet peace in him. O that all our friends could witness what we have witnessed; how their hearts would fill with joy, and indeed many would say, "The half never was told," for truly words can not convey to the mind what we would like to convey. Still the work is going on; the interest seems not yet to flag in the least; a seriousness is on the minds of many that must end in freedom. The whole community is stirred to the bottom, and may it remain stirred up until the day of perfect peace. Remember us in prayer, and also remember that words of cheer to us are like drops of water to a thirsty one. L. F. COLE.

TO THE BRN. IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Dear Brethren:—I have something of importance to say to you, and I think I can do it in this way better than any other. We must have a mission-tent in this Province. Yes, in the name of the Lord we will set up our banner. I am now writing to every lover of Jesus and his appearing who reads the Crisis; and I ask you to give for this object, according to your means. There are some who love the truth, who do not get the Crisis. Will you hunt them out, and let them know what we are doing, and give them a chance to build with us. Ask those who do not love the Lord, if they would not like to take stock in this building. It will open the way for you to exhort them to get ready for the judgment. You read the heart-cheering account of the labor in the New Brunswick tent, last season; and now, shall we have one? I know you will say, Yes, in the name of the Lord, we will. Will Bro. Grant please learn from the tent-maker in Boston, what a tent fifty feet in diameter, and of the same material of the N. B. mission-tent, will cost?* I understand it was made there, and we want ours of the same quality and dimensions. Please inform us through the Crisis, and much oblige your Bro. looking for deliverance when the Deliverer comes. J. B. FITCH.

"GOOD TIME COMING."

This is the title of a tract by Bro. Sidney Hall of Hartford. He has published and nearly distributed twenty thousand free. We received and scattered one thousand in Rochester. I have taken much interest to inquire the result, and every time found them highly commended as a candid exposition of the first principles of our faith, and well calculated to introduce the same among the people. It should have received an earlier notice. Those wishing tracts for free distribution can write Bro. Hall, who is scattering them like the leaves of autumn. I trust he will be comforted to know that his labor is not in vain in the Lord. H. PRATT.

STAR OF HOPE MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—We feel very grateful to our friends for their liberal donations to the Star-of-Hope, as well as to our monthly subscribers, for their promptness (in most cases) in sending their subscriptions, to aid us in meeting the heavy demands necessarily made upon those who carry on an institution like this. There is a great amount of good being accomplished, and we are almost daily having some manifest token that our heavenly Father is approving of the work. We have continual applications for assistance, in the way of food, clothing, or money; and, through the blessing of God, we have not been obliged to turn many empty away. Our calls to visit the sick are very numerous; and oh, the destitution and misery that greet the eye, as we enter some of these wretched abodes, so dark and forlorn in their appearance! but we have attempted to describe these scenes before, and we find words are inadequate to portray to the minds of those unacquainted with missionary life the picture as it is; suffice it to say, we are often led to cry from the depths of our heart, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly," and put an end to sin and suffering.

Our meetings are still in a prosperous condition. Quite a number have been converted during the last month. May the Lord still give to those who have the means, a heart to aid in this great and last work; and to those who have the heart, and not the means, do aid us by your prayers and sympathy, while we try to lie passive in the hands of the Lord, to be used in any way that seemeth to him good. Your sister in the highways and hedges,

ROCHESTER.

Bro. Hemenway came here Saturday, Mar. 20th. Our evening prayer-meeting was quite interesting. Seven or eight arose for prayers; some were blessed. Sunday was another of those heavenly times which the Lord has permitted us to enjoy here without opposing influences. Again we visited the baptismal waters, and buried four more in the likeness of Christ's death. Though the air was very cold, it was a good time. The afternoon and evening were seasons of deep interest; at the close of which, some ten or twelve started for Mt. Zion. May no lions scare them, or fairy scenes of earth divert them from the light of life. To-day (March 22nd), we are called upon to attend the funeral of a beloved daughter of Bro. Anson Lord's, who sweetly sleeps in Jesus, of which we shall speak more anon.

Laborers of God's vineyard, why stand ye idle? Why clamor over dry theories, when men are perishing for some kind hand and sympathetic heart to lead them to Christ?

WILL YOU TRY?

It can hardly be that any who read the appeal of Bro. Colegrove, in which he so earnestly and truthfully sets forth the claims of "our paper," have quite forgotten it; and let me ask you if you did not then resolve that you would make some effort to get at least one new subscriber for the Crisis? For one, I did so resolve, and I now send the name of one new subscriber and the pay for the same. If every reader of the Crisis would do as much, the subscription list would be doubled, and the usefulness of our excellent paper greatly increased.

Will you try to do as much or more than this? Do not forget it. Do not delay. Act promptly, and a blessing will attend your efforts.

HOW TO RETAIN THE PEACE OF GOD.

"Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known to God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."—Paul in Phil. 4: 7.

The above is Paul's receipt for keeping one's self in the love of God; for it is the presence of divine love that produces the peace here spoken of. And when one feels its blessed presence in the heart, there is an inward desire for its continuance; then, following the apostle's rule, we should by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, make this request known to God, and thereby secure a continuance of the blessing promised.

At the same time it is necessary to guard against those desires and passions of the fleshly nature which tend to quench the glowing fire of God's love in the breast.

"For," saith the apostle again, "all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another. This I say, then, walk in the spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh. For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other. But if ye be led by the spirit, ye are not under the law. Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I have told you in times past, that they that do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law."—Gal. 5: 14–23.

Giving over to any of the above works of the flesh, tends to quench the Spirit in our hearts. We shrink from the thought of the commission of any of the greater sins enumerated here, and yet we should zealously guard against the lesser. We look with horror upon murder, and yet it is written, "He that hateth his brother is a murderer." Idolatry we regard as pertaining to heathenism, and yet "covetousness" is called "idolatry" in the New Testament, because it makes a god of one's self. Variance is very often born of some wrong or slight received from another; and the "old man" says, I would not stand that; I would let him know that I am as good as he is; and persons that should be friends become enemies to one another.

Is there any remedy for these things? Yes. "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed." If a person has wronged you in any way, go and pray to God in secret that he will forgive him, and the wrong will cease to annoy you, and the mind will become occupied with something better than the failings of our erring fellow men. "If ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive your trespasses."—Matt. 6: 14–15.

Forgiveness! what a blessed word to hear with reference to one's own sins. Would we know the blessedness of sins forgiven? "Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven," are the words of the Son of man, who had divine authority to forgive sins to such as forgive others their trespasses. Do not be too particular in dispensing pardon, when by being liberal you can obtain peace and pardon from above, which far outweighs any fancied satisfaction that can be obtained from nursing a grudge for wrongs received. Do not wait for a brother to come and ask forgiveness, and to be convinced of his offence; forgive when you can, that you may be forgiven. The Savior prayed for his murderers—"Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." It is best to follow his example.

How gracious the benediction sounds—"Grace, mercy and peace, from God our Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ." But much better to receive this benediction in the heart, and feel the divine love glowing within the breast, speaking conviction to the soul, and saying, Thy sins are forgiven thee. This we can have if we forgive those who trespass against us, and then seek the Father's blessing, through Jesus Christ, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, thus making our requests known unto God. For in so doing we have the apostolic assurance that "the peace of God which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

The writer has to return thanks to God, through Jesus Christ his Son, for the many manifestations of his blessed love and peace within; for blessings received at the tent meeting in Cambridgeport last August, and for still greater tokens of love and peace received at the campmeeting at Alton Bay, particularly at the communion on the last day of the meeting, when an intense love and peace filled his soul.

The memory of it is very precious, although followed soon after by the death of an only son. And since this affliction, I have enjoyed many precious seasons of communion with God; when peace, like a river deep and still, thrilled my soul with joy divine. This enables me to sing—

"I am glad salvation's free;
Salvation's free for you and me,
I am glad salvation's free."

WHAT WILL YOU DO?

What will you do, dear reader, to enlarge the circulation and usefulness of the Young Pilgrim? The circulation can soon be doubled, if every one will do his part? Will you do yours?

Come, boys and girls, young men and maidens, fathers and mothers, sisters and brothers, ministers, superintendents, teachers and all; let us every one take hold and see what, with God's help, we can do. Warm weather is coming, new schools are starting, old ones reviving, and all things are waking to new life. Let us awake too, and begin with new zeal in the Sabbath School work. Show the Young Pilgrim to your friends, raise subscriptions, form clubs, and help on the good cause.

We shall do our part in trying to make the Young Pilgrim "the best Sabbath School paper in the land," and a safe and unerring guide to our youth and little ones, in the way of truth and righteousness, to the kingdom of heaven. Will you help? W. H. H.

"THE BEST SABBATH SCHOOL PAPER."

From the Editor of "The Child's Delight."

To the Editor of the Young Pilgrim.

Brother Editor:—I have secured you a new subscriber. I recommended your little paper as THE BEST OF MY EXCHANGES. It is so good that I must insist on your sending me two copies again in exchange; for I cannot make one do for cutting and filing.

Respectfully, S. BOYKIN.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. J. W. BALLARD, San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 24th, writes:—"For the past year or so, I have been a reader of your valuable paper, through the kindness of one of your subscribers 'Mrs Lucy Scholl.' For some time I was disposed to disbelieve, and argue against the correctness of its teachings and doctrines. Reared as I, and a large majority of modern youth are, under the belief that we have immortal souls, and that when we are done with temporal things, we immediately go to our reward, be it association with God and holy angels, or banishment forever from his hallowed presence, I conceived it my duty to defend the principles and ideas inculcated from my earliest recollections; and, as I thought, the teachings which were within the strict interpretation of the Bible, correct. I would draw upon my meagre store of scriptural passages in refutation, but as often was I met with other passages which were so plain, and couched in such bold language, that I knew not how to meet them. For the time, I attributed their partial victory to their better knowledge of the word of God, and a happier faculty of bringing to bear upon the points at issue.

Still steadfast in my former belief, I went to searching for more evidence, more enlightenment upon the matter, thinking I would yet have an opportunity of substantiating the teachings of my childhood, taught by both father and mother, who died steadfastly and happily in the faith. But I am free and glad to acknowledge that the more I sought for proof in the defense, the more confounded became my doctrine, and stranger and more beautiful to my sense of equity and justice, became the teachings of your people; and now I believe that yours is the only doctrine which makes the Scriptures, when compared from Alpha to Omega, tend to one common point, which admits of no distinctions, harshness or friction of passages, that would tend to diminish the beneficial effect intended, and all this in such glaring characters that ever 'he who runs may read.'

There are quite a number on this coast who are subscribers to your paper, and who esteem it very highly; some cherish it next to the Bible as a medium to help them secure a seat in the kingdom to come. One good sister remarked that it was to her a draught of pure cold water in a dreary desert, after long abstinence. This is a common-place illustration; but how truthful, when we take it into consideration. Many lack one great and very necessary quality of the working christian; viz., a knowledge of the word of God, and its proper application. They think to solve the meaning of its teachings until their souls become filled with feverish thirst after knowledge and enlightenment; when God, in his mercy, comes to our aid through the medium of the "Crisis," and it, in its thoroughness of explanation, makes all plain, at once allaying all our anxiety, and fear, making the rugged paths smooth, and the intricate within the comprehension of the most common-place intellect. Surely it is like a draught of pure cold water; aye, it is more; it is a well, an overflowing well of water, giving comfort to all who drink thereof. I hope to see the time when it will be as common on the family file as the most popular of the daily journals.

And just here, I would like to draw your attention, as well as that of the church, to the fact that we have but one minister upon this coast, of this denomination. We have a land almost flowing with milk and honey, rich in agriculture and mines. Already our hill-sides and valleys are dotted over with the green blades which bid fair for a plentiful harvest. Our fruit trees are almost budding, and soon they will hang loaded with all the fruit that is pleasant to the eye and taste. In short, this is the country where one can experience the truth of the saying 'We live under our own vine and fig-tree.' But amidst all these luxuries, I am sorry to say, that there is a disposition on the part of Californians to ungodliness, which seems to increase instead of decrease. All other denominations have able pastors who are doing all in their power for the saving of souls; and why cannot we have an able expounder of the doctrine?"

BRO. A. N. SEYMOUR, Reading Mich., writes:—"We desire to say to all the lovers of Jesus scattered abroad, that we are still interested in the great truths that distinguish us from other religionists in the world, and that we are still rejoicing in the same blessed hope that has animated and given good cheer to the church in all ages; and are still publishing, as far as our health and limits will allow, the same to perishing humanity. After having toiled, endured, suffered, and partially confronted the uncongenial influences of this degenerate age, whether professional or otherwise, for twenty-five years and more, we are far, very far indeed from taking any retrograde steps, or in any way relinquishing our most precious hope, that has contributed so largely in buoying up our often tired spirits, and yielding us such unspeakable consolation, while anticipating our everlasting new earthly home. The motive that first arrested our attention and led us out into the extensive field of usefulness, still holds good. And as the necessity of labor multiplies, and is pressing us on every hand, we still purpose with our waning strength and small talents to do the best we can for the salvation of those that surround us. Our love for the salvation of unregenerate men and women abates not, but approximates the end of all things; and it is our constant prayer that we may have grace and wisdom equal to our day. We desire the prayers of all those who commune with God daily."

BRO EZRA DEAN, Auburn, N. Y., March 22d, writes:—"I think the signs multiply every day, signs which the Bible reader ought not to ignore or neglect, clear to me as the shining of the sun at noon-day; and I talk and preach to the people with whom I associate on this subject. I have read many authors, and think I am posted in the signs of the times. The events of each day all over the world, satisfy me the coming of the Lord draweth very nigh. I can say in all sincerity 'Even so, come Lord Jesus.' I am tired of this state of things. My own sins and those of others about me, annoy me very much. If I had the time to spend to-day, I should like to give you some of the reasons for the hope that is in me, that of seeing my Savior coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, very soon. The minds of men in my own denomination (Baptist) are being interested, and some of them are beginning to speak out. One D. D. has said as I am told, 'he did not think time would continue twenty-five years.' I tell them I do not think it will continue five years, I hope less than that.

For this hope of mine, I am called an old fogy, etc., etc.; but none of these things move me. They only convince me that I am right. 'As the days of Noah were, so also shall the coming of the Son of man be.' I say again, the signs multiply, the Scriptures are being fulfilled as fast as one day follows another, and none but the ignorant or wilfully blind can fail to see it."

SR. MARIANN SANBORN, Black Walnut, Va., writes:—"Sister Sarah and I find ourselves many miles remote from home and its privileges, isolated from christian friends of like precious faith; but "with ready mind and active will" have entered upon our work and labor of love, among the poor, ignorant, colored people of Southern Virginia. This is indeed a new and extensive mission field, with harvest great, and laborers few. Prejudice, grown out of southern customs and sentiments, already begins to bend, hindrances to our work to remove, and we gladly improve every available means of usefulness; patiently waiting and praying for the Lord to bless with greater facilities to instruct the many who are hungering after knowledge. Trust some among them will hunger and thirst after righteousness' too; and 'be filled' according to the promise.

This is a country region and sparsely settled with whites, some of whom we have found to be very intelligent. Our peculiar work, however, excludes us from society generally. Several religious denominations are represented in this vicinity. The prevailing sects are Methodists and Baptists. We teach day and evening; have a Sunday School and children's meeting each Lord's day, and the Lord abundantly blesses us in our self-denying efforts. Poverty abounds in some localities, and numerous instances call for help, which we are glad to afford, as means are supplied. Bro. Hastings furnished a large quantity of books, tracts, etc., for the benefit of the schools. Among the many home privileges we miss, not the least is, the weekly perusal of the 'Crisis,' with its religious teachings, so dear to us, and interesting letters from brethren and sisters scattered abroad. We would be very glad and thankful, Bro. Grant, if you would send it to us. [It is sent.—ED.] May wisdom and grace be constantly given you as an editor and a preacher of the 'gospel of the kingdom'; and a glorious reward await you at the end. Pray for us, that we grow in grace, and 'be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.'"

SR. L. B. WEAVER, North Dana, Mass., writes:—"As many of my dear friends in Jesus, are writing to me, asking whether the 'Resuscitator' has done me good, will you please insert this letter in the Crisis, that all may see just how I am, after using it for three months. Some of them think, from what Bro. Munger put into the paper, that it has done a great cure. I will here state, in as few words as possible, the true situation I am now in. I would say to one and all, that I think at first the 'Resuscitator' did me much good, and caused my blood to circulate more freely, and produced more warmth in my system. I think, also, that it has kept me from having fits, although I had a very hard fit some two or three weeks ago. I have used the 'Resuscitator' as faithfully as one could, and I do think that it has done me some good; but it has produced no cure whatever. I could not expect it would in so short a time, if ever, for my body is diseased all through, bloated badly with dropsy, drawn out of shape by convulsions and contraction of the cords; and, as a friend remarked to me, when talking about using the R., 'If I was not dead when I began to use it, it would have helped me more than it has. I never suffered as I have this winter. I am not free from pain one minute of the time. At present I have such a severe hoarseness upon my lungs, that I have not spoken a loud word for a week without the greatest exertion.

I have tried the R. faithfully on my lungs and chest, and they are covered with small blisters now. I have the utmost confidence in the R. as doing great cures, and would recommend it to any of our dear ones who may need help."

BRO. E. COTTON, Lincolnville, Pa., March 20th, writes:—"In my travels in western Pa., I was invited to hold some meetings in the town of Athens. There I fell in company with Father and Mother Ongley, who have been preachers in Canada, western New York, and other places. They have now become so old and infirm that they are not able to travel any more. Father Ongley had a slight shock of the palsy. He is now seventy-five years old, and quite feeble. He was brought to the meeting one evening, and took part in the exercises. His whole heart was in the work; but the effort was too much for him, and he felt quite exhausted. He hopes to live to see Jesus come. I found them quite poor for the comforts of this life. I would say to the brethren, who love to help the Lord's poor, send in your mites. And you who are able, send in your dollars. Direct your letters to William Ongley, Lincolnville, Crawford Co., Pa."

BRO. N. H. BERRY, Farmington, N. H., March 20th, writes:—"We are having two and three evening meetings a week, a Sunday School Sunday, and forenoon and afternoon prayer and conference. Last evening we had a heavenly season. The power of the Holy Ghost was shed on us in answer to prayer. There was a deep feeling in the meeting. One sister, an old Free-Will Baptist, rose and said that she felt the spirit of the Lord, and she thanked the Lord for light. She has been reading the 'Crisis,' and some tracts; one was by Bro. Edwin Burnham. The sister feels to rejoice in the God of her salvation. She says she has almost faith enough to believe that she shall live to see the blessed Lord come in the clouds of heaven.

Bro. Grant, this pays me for all that I can do. God is with us here in Farmington."

BRO. J. H. HARDING, So. Vershire, March 16th, writes:—"I am interested in the great truths for which so many have forsaken house and land, home and ease. In January last, Sister Shimper and daughter came to West Fairlee, and started a prayer-meeting, which has been well sustained; also one here at South Vershire, twice a week, which gives me an opportunity to work for the salvation of my fellow men. When Bro. Carpenter came to visit this place, I took him to Fairlee, and he preached the word with power in the Universalist meeting-house. The meetings were well attended by the first men of that thriving little village. They listened with interest; and the only fault they could find was, that they could not have more of it. Since the close of his labor, two have confessed Christ and are quite happy in the Lord. Others are inquiring the way."

BRO. and SR. D., West Swansey, N. H., Mar. 17th, writes:—"The 'Crisis' has learned us to reconcile many seeming contradictions in the word of God. It seems like a new revelation to fallen man, and more precious than ever it did before. The Lord bless you in your efforts to enlighten the church of Christ and lead its members to come out from the world and be separate. We are trying to make the paper a messenger of good to others, as it has been to us."

BRO. L. C. MCKINSTRY writes:—"We have had a blessed revival in Albany, N. H. It is a new place, and about sixty have been converted and reclaimed from a backslidden state, who were once Freewill Baptists."

Obituaries.

GREENLEAF. Died, at his residence in Galesburg, Mich., March 20th, 1869, after an illness of six days, of inflammation of the lungs and brain, Elder Wm. J. Greenleaf, aged fifty-two years.

To many who will read these lines, he was known personally as an earnest, sincere worker for the gospel, one who had labored faithfully in the vineyard for many years, being one of the early pioneers for the cause in the west. He always seemed striving to live so as to be ready for the Master's call, and expressed himself so in his last moments, repeating to himself many times, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

On Sunday, the 22nd, the large congregation was fitly addressed by his friend and co-laborer, Elder Edgar Cheesbrough, of Leroy, and then we laid the dear form in the quiet village churchyard, to await the day when it shall be raised, which he looked forward to so trustingly. He leaves a wife sadly bereaved, but strong in the faith that has sustained them so long, and which will sustain her when the great Conqueror shall come, and then—

"There will be no more parting there."

BOWLES. Died at Sugar Hill, N. H., March 18th, of consumption, Sr. Emma, daughter of Bro. David and Sr. Mary J. Bowles, aged twenty-two years.

"It is well," she said, "I shall soon awake up in glory." Funeral services were attended at the chapel, Sunday, P.M. We tried to present to the large audience present man's loss by transgression, and his only hope through Christ. N. WHEELER.

BROWN. Died in East Boston, March 20th, Charles A. Brown, formerly of South Elliott, Me., aged thirty-three years and nine months. "My brother is dead." GEO. W. BROWN.

HANSON. Fell asleep in Jesus, March 3d, 1869, our dear Sister Mary, wife of Bro. Edmond Hanson, of Honeoye, N. Y., aged twenty-six years and nine months.

Peacefully, and with an unyielding faith and trust in the Lord, she met that unwelcome foe—consumption. The house of worship was her delight; at the family altar she was ever faithful; and even when too weak to bow, she joined in vocal prayer lying upon her couch.

Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, assisted by Bro. I. Allen. E. S. JENNINGS.

STOKES. Died in Lisbon, Me., Oct. 20th, 1866, Idah H., aged three years and ten months. Also March 21st, 1869, Walter J., aged two months and twenty-one days, only children of John W. and Susan Stokes. E. M. HAGGETT.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, March 30. In the draft of the new Spanish constitution, the reign of the king is not limited to eighteen years, as reported. On the contrary, the possession of the crown remains to the king for life, and descends to his heir, the period of whose majority is fixed at eighteen years of age.

MADRID, March March 31. Hostility to the conscription law continues in the provinces, and fresh outbreaks are apprehended.

ATHENS, March 31. The Greek Chambers have been dissolved. Elections will be held on the 16th of May for a new Legislature, which will assemble on the 5th of June.

The Turkish Ambassador has presented his credentials to the King.

MADRID, April 5. Informal meetings of the members of the majority in the Constitutional Cortes have been held, and have resulted in a resolution to support ex-King Ferdinand of Portugal for the throne of Spain. The Council Ministers have also decided to second the majority of the Cortes in this determination, and a deputation, with Don Solustiano Alozaga at its head, has gone to Lisbon to invite King Ferdinand to accept the candidature.

DOMESTIC.

THE INDIAN WAR.—Gen. Custar's Indian expedition is returning northward through Texas and the Indian Territory. On the 15th of March a village of nearly three hundred Cheyenne lodges was surprised on a branch of Red river, and two white women rescued from captivity. The Indians fled leaving their lodges and much camp property. A large number of Cheyennes are held as hostages for the promised appearance of the tribe to treat for peace.

San Francisco, April 1. The most severe shock of an earthquake we have had since the great shake in October last occurred this evening, at forty-five minutes past five o'clock. As far as ascertained no serious damage has been done to buildings, but the people are somewhat alarmed.

New York, March 31. Advices from Cuba state that Cespedes has replied to Dulce's declaration of war to the knife, by a decree that all persons taken hereafter, except regular Spanish soldiers, are to be immediately put to death.

THE PAPAL SUCCESSION.—The Ecumenical Council, which is to assemble at Rome in December of the present year, will be a very important gathering, and the questions which will then and there be discussed will be of great interest and significance to the Roman Catholic church. One of the questions which is then to come up is in regard to the election of a successor to Pope Pius Ninth during the life time of the latter. The object of such a movement is to obviate the danger which might result to the temporal power of the Pope by having an interregnum of any considerale length in the Papal office. The choice and inauguration of a Pope are divided into three parts, the first of which is the election by the Cardinals, the second is the exaltation, when the pontifical chair and its occupant are carried to St. Peters upon men's shoulders, and the third is the coronation. Only the first part of this programme, of course, could be carried out during the lifetime of the present Pope, but the accomplishment of this would greatly lessen the complications that might otherwise arise at the death of the Pope, and it is understood that the Pope himself has authorized and sanctioned this arrangement. If it is a measure originated or approved by him, there can be little doubt that the Council will give it a most favorable consideration.

The principal purpose of this proposal is to check the aspirations of the Italians for the extension of Italian sovereignty over the present Papal territory. The temporal power which the Pope exercises is a source of perpetual annoyance discomfort and irritation to the Italian Government and people, and they have long hoped that at the death of Pope Pius they would be able to include Rome in the Italian kingdom. They are willing enough to have the Pope retain his spiritual power and position, but they want to make Rome the capital of Italy, and to have the Pope occupy himself with religious matters rather than with the exercise of temporal sovereignty. The present Pope has often and forcibly declared that he would never willingly yield an iota of the temporal power which has been so long associated with the Papal office, and the Italians have been quietly hoping for the realization of their aspirations at his death. It seems from this movement that Pius has been fully alive to the situation of affairs, and that he means to leave no effort untried to perpetuate at Rome the temporal sovereignty of the occupant of the Papal chair. This whole matter will have an important bearing upon European politics, and now that the Papal policy has been announced, the Italians and those who sympathize with them in their wishes to have a separation between the temporal and spiritual power will lose no time in consolidating their forces and preparing to combat the purposes of the Vatican.—Boston Journal.

Passing Events.

☞ Another source of trouble has arisen in Europe. A French company purchased a Belgian railway, but the government refused to allow the company to take possession and run the road, on public grounds. Some think Napoleon will take advantage of this occurrence to go to war with Belgium, and annex that country to France, an object for which he has long aspired. Of course England and Prussia would object to this, and should Napoleon persist, the long threatened war would break out at last. It is stated that all officers and privates belonging to the French army, on leave of absence, are ordered to rejoin their regiments on the first of April, which has a threatening look.—New Bedford Standard.

☞ Holland has abolished the stamp duty on newspapers, and to make up for the deficiency thus occasioned has raised the duty on liquors. By so doing the Dutch place a premium on education and endeavor to discourage intemperance.

☞ Reuth Goshen, the Arabian giant, has settled down at Algonquin, Ill. He is seven and a half feet high, weighs six hundred and fourteen pounds, and is, with one exception, the largest man in the world. He is a native of Jerusalem, and is said to speak twenty languages.

☞ Orders have been received from Washington at the United States Armory at Springfield to begin the manufacture of the new model breech loader, and to turn out 500 per day.

☞ A Japanese scholar protests against the christian religion on two grounds. He considers the doctrine of the Fatherhood of God incompatible with proper reverence for rank. His argument has been printed, and scattered widely through the Empire.

☞ An entire family in Montreal last Wednesday were attacked with trichinosis from eating ham. None of the patients show any signs of recovery.

☞ Public worship is regularly conducted in Chicago in eight languages.

☞ Victor Emmanuel is said to be the best shot of all the European monarchs, and Napoleon the best horseman.

☞ At a recent revival at Ames, Iowa, a lady over one hundred years of age made a profession of religion and joined the church.

☞ The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's income for the last year was $21,175.

☞ The extremes of climate in California are well illustrated by the editor of a paper in Alpine county, who rides to his office in a sleigh, the snow being five feet deep in some places, and writes behind a boquet of flowers plucked in the open air, within sight of his office window.

☞ Brain diseases are said to be on the rapid increase in England. In 1857 the number of deaths from softening of the brain was 766; in 1860 it was 1664, or more than double.

☞ The ladies of Hungary are determined to have their rights. They have asked the Parliament to authorize the beautiful Queen of Hungary (the Empress Elizabeth of Austria) to appoint twenty female members of the Hungarian House of Magnates.

☞ The French Minister of War has made preparations for calling out at any moment the 140,000 men on conge.

Advent Conference.

The Mass. Advent State Conference will hold their annual session, for the choice of officers, at Worcester, Mass. (by vote of their church), commencing Wednesday evening, April 14th, at half-past seven, at the Advent Chapel. This will be an important meeting. The question to settle is, whether the conference shall live, and be a great blessing to the cause of truth and righteousness. It cannot be such unless it have the hearty cooperation of all the faithful in united action.

Now, brethren, what say? Shall we see you at the conference? Will you lay aside "every weight" and be there? Come, brethren, one and all. Preachers, delegates, disciples, make an effort to be there. Come, and by the blessing of God let us see how much good can be done in reviving his people, and saving the impenitent at this meeting. The Worcester church will care for our needs generously. So come to the feast. Friday morning session will be set apart for the choice of officers.

L. BOUTELL, President.

The New Hampshire Tent.

If time rolls on, the time for tent meetings will soon be upon us, and we wish to do all we can to feed the flock, and strengthen any who desire life in the future kingdom, and do all that the Master requires in laboring to bring sinners to Christ, that they may be saved in the day of his wrath. We believe tent-meetings, if rightly conducted, are in these last days a great means, under God, of accomplishing this blessed result. And as we wish to make arrangements in season, so as to do all we can during the time of tent-meetings, will our brethren in New Hampshire (and if we go into the regions beyond, we think that we shall not go beyond the commission), survey the field, and let us know as soon as they can where tent-meetings are desired. We wish to go into new fields what we can, but there are places where there are a few brethren who have no meeting-house, where the tent will give your neighbors and friends a good chance to hear. Our first meeting will be at Farmington Village, N. H. Brethren, will you let your alms and prayers go up before God for this object, that the truth may be carried into new places. Any who wish to help in this good work, can hand it to either of the committee; and while you are doing good in different directions, do not forget Bro. White and the tract committee, so that we may have a good supply of tracts to scatter.

My brethren, if you could see what God has wrought in Rochester, N. H., in raising up a church to wait for his Son from heaven, as the fruit of the first meeting in this tent, you would feel that it paid a thousand times for all the expense and labor. Remember we have but a short time to work, and the blessed reward will be given. As the tent will be pitched in different localities, we hope our preaching brethren will render us all the assistance they can.

T. H. FORD,
JOHN SHOREY, } Tent Committee.
J. G. SMITH,

Notice.

Brethren of Orleans and Niagara Co's, N. Y., the response of those that have answered the question, "Shall we engage evangelists to employ their time in preaching the gospel, having regular appointments within our bounds?" is emphatically, "Yes." You are invited to meet at the church in Knowlesville, Saturday, Apr. 24th, 1869, at 1 o'clock P. M., to confer on the subject. It is desirable that every person in these counties and adjoining territory, that wishes to have the gospel of the kingdom preached in their neighborhood, or will assist in proclaiming the glad tidings, be present at the meeting, or be represented by delegates.

WARREN BURNHAM.
AARON RIGGS.
PHILIP THURTLE.

Notice.

By the request of the brethren at Edenboro, Erie Co., Pa., I will join Bro. J. Wendell in holding a two days' meeting of the church in Edenboro, April 16th, and over Sunday, as Bro. Wendell and the church there may arrange.

Also, by the request of the brethren at Blooming Valley, I will hold a quarterly meeting there, April 22d, and over Sunday, as the church there may appoint. Let there be a general rally at these quarterly meetings. Soon it will be too late to preach and hear the gospel. Then let all awake. C. F. SWEET.

Notice.

By invitation of the church at Collinsville, Ct., the next quarterly session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held in their hall, beginning Wednesday, April 21st, 1869. Preaching first evening. The place is accessible by railroad from New Haven, on the Canal road to Plainville; change cars then for Collinsville. From Hartford, on the Providence and Fishkill road to Plainville; then change cars as above. Come in the Spirit.

L. F. MOORE, Secretary.

Information.

Many have inquired of me, by letter and otherwise, to know whether that wonderful Prussian Instrument, "The Resuscitator," is all that Bro. Munger claims for it in his advertisement. Permit me to reply publicly, I do not know. Dr. Linden has furnished me with the instrument, book, and certificates, to supply the afflicted in Maine who wish to buy. From reading the book and certificates, with a practical consideration of the action of the instrument, the nature of the human structure and its diseases, I have much confidence that this instrument is far superior to medicine. I can fill all cash orders for it in Maine. Price $10.50, delivered free. I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

Notice.

BRO. GRANT:—For the benefit of those sending money to us for the Prussian remedies, we would recommend sending a post-office order, or have the letter registered; for there have been two letters stolen with $10.50 in each; one from Vt., and one from Bondville, Mass. MUNGER & WEAVER.

P. S. We prefer to have you send $10, and you pay the expressage when the instrument comes. If you are at a great distance, they can be sent by mail for 70 cts., safer and cheaper than by express. By mail, $10.70. Direct to Munger and Weaver, Springfield, Mass., Drawer 81.

Notice.

The brethren in Manchester, N. H., are holding meetings at Merrimack Hall, as usual, and are in full fellowship with the "Crisis," "Voice of the West," and the N. H. State Conference. Preaching brethren please correspond with the Committee:—A. J. Mayhew, S. R. Davidson, O. Proctor.

Bristol, Ct.

There will be preaching every Sabbath in Bristol, Ct., at Paradise Hall. Preaching brethren wishing to visit the church in Bristol, will please correspond with Elder B. Hitchcock, Forrestville, Conn. We hope the brethren and sisters in our neighboring towns will come and worship with us. We are having some excellent meetings, characterized by the Spirit of Christ, which is love, joy and peace. B. For the World's Crisis.

"GREET ONE ANOTHER."

Dear brothers and sisters, I greet you once more,
My heart overflowing in love-given song,
When meetings and partings for aye shall be o'er;
I feel, my dear friends, that the time is not long.
O, well may we heed the Apostle's blest word,
As forward we press to the work for the prize,
The high calling of God in Christ Jesus our Lord;
O, think just before us the victory lies.

The crown of bright glory that's laid up for Paul,
On his glorified forehead soon we shall see;
If we are faithful, there are crowns for us all,
Crowns pure, unfading, for you and for me.
O, let us be steadfast, unmovable, friends,
Always abounding in the work of the Lord;
And now when his sweet holy Spirit descends,
Our hearts give him glory in joyful accord.

O, is there some sad heart that's struggling for light,
That longs to be freed from sin's potent control?
Then pray to dear Jesus; he'll open your sight,
And love, peace, and joy, shall illumine your soul.
O, come, I entreat you, to Christ's healing fount;
Come, wash and be clean from all death-blighting sin;
His blood freely flowing on Calvary's mount,
For your life and glory unfading to win.

O listen, I pray you, while Christ doth invite;
Come, lay all your burden on Jesus' dear breast;—
"My yoke it is easy, my burden is light,
Come, heavy-laden, and I will give rest."
Ho! every one thirsting, come ye and buy;
Hear the Lord's invitation, dear sinner, to-day;
Without money and price, oh, why will ye die?
Salvation is yours—take it now while you may.

Moorestown, N. J. ANNA E. MCELLISTER.

For the World's Crisis.

DO YOU PRAY IN YOUR FAMILY?

There are families that call not on the name of the Lord. They have no family altar around which, night and morning, the parents and children gather and offer praise and thanksgiving to God. It is strange indeed that individuals will sometimes make long prayers in public, and proclaim their religion before the world, and at the same time be neglecting the most important religious duties in their own homes. I was once very much surprised, and almost stumbled, too, at the conduct of a certain minister, that I had heard preach, and in whom I had great confidence, to learn that he did not have family worship, nor ever ask a blessing at the table. He could go away Sundays, and preach and pray in the pulpit, and appear to enjoy the love of Christ; but when you entered his home during the week all would be cold, barren and desolate, as if Jesus was a stranger to the household. I have seen and become acquainted with others too, at meetings in different places, who appeared to be very devoted; and you would think that their homes would be almost heaven upon earth; but when you come to go into them, you will be shocked to find no family altar, no reading the blessed Bible, no hymns of praise, no religious service to open and close the day. Now this is strange, especially when such families profess to be looking for the soon coming of Jesus.

We are taught by our Savior, that if we would be his disciples, we must take up our cross daily and follow him. I remember well how this passage rung in my ears, and followed me from day to day. I had made a profession of religion, and was in the habit of praying much in secret, but had never prayed in the family before my parents, and brothers and sisters, none of whom enjoyed religion. I was young, and consequently made many excuses, thinking perhaps I might be justified and serve God acceptably without praying before them; but day after day the impression followed me, "Pray in the family; take up your daily cross; call upon God morning and evening before your friends." At first it seemed as if I could never do it. I tried to be faithful in secret, and in the public meetings, but still I felt as if I had not done my whole duty; I had not prayed at home. Often, while at secret prayer, a voice would seem to be saying to me, "Go home and take up your cross, and pray with your friends and relatives; perhaps you can win them to Christ." Thus I struggled for quite a long time, but no rest could I find to be lasting, until I was willing to obey the voice which said, "Pray at home." When I took up that cross, oh, what a burden was removed. I felt then as if I could look any body in the face without my conscience smiting me, and accusing me of that neglected duty. I could say then, "If you do not believe I am a christian, go to my home and ask those who know me best." From that time onward I kept up the family altar night and morning, singing, reading the Bible, and calling upon God, all alone, among my friends and whoever came in. I know that God's blessing rested upon me in doing it. All the family respected and listened to me, and it had an influence for good. I enjoyed the peace of God.

Not long after I took up that cross, I felt as if I must go and tell sinners of the precious love of Jesus, and the glories of his soon coming kingdom. I praise God for all the way in which he has led me, though I know I have often grieved his Spirit; yet he has been merciful and kind, and has enabled me, I trust, to accomplish some little good. Praise his name. But since I have become acquainted with many christians, and have been around considerably in different places, nothing has astonished and even grieved me more than to find so few families that call upon God. It seems to me that every family that makes a profession of religion ought (if possible) to have an altar around which the family should kneel and offer praise to God for his mercy, and ask him for help day by day. I am fearful that many do not consider this matter as seriously as they should. They are too much taken up about other things, and too neglectful of the religious duties of their own household. There is a great responsibility here, and every one who has a family should consider it. There were some such families in the days of Jeremiah the prophet, and he took notice of them. He prays for them too. It seems as if he was divinely inspired to call down the indignation of the Lord upon them. "Pour out thy fury," he says, "upon the families that call not upon thy name." I should not like to have been a member of one of those families, and much less the head of one of them. It must have been very displeasing to God to see families where he was not acknowledged and worshiped; and if it was displeasing to God then, is it any the less so now? Are not families as much under obligation to God now as they were then? O it seems to me that the people of this generation are under greater responsibility to God than any previous one. The people in this day have the accumulated light of all the past. Does not our responsibility increase with the light? How, then, if we live in the neglect of duties which are made so plain, can we expect to escape the fury of the Almighty? How many are there in th[illegible] to-day, where God's name is honored[illegible] his worship sustained? How many houses [illegible] even among those who profess to be [illegible] for Jesus, where Jesus delights to d[illegible] Thank God there are some. I would that there were more. O how many more children would be converted, if the parents endeavored to bring them up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord." The wise man says, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." How can children be trained aright if they are not taught to pray? and how can parents teach them to pray, if they have no family worship? There are many examples in Scripture which show us how holy men used to live. I suspect Abraham, who was so careful to instruct his household in the way of the Lord, did not neglect to pray with them. And David, I am quite confident, prayed in his family. It is said of him on one occasion that "he returned to bless his household"; and in one of his Psalms he says, "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O Most High; to show forth thy loving-kindness early in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night." No doubt there was both prayer and praise in that family. Again David says, "As for me I will call upon God; and the Lord shall save me. Evening and morning and at noon will I pray and cry aloud, and he shall hear my voice." There certainly must have been praying in the house of Joshua; if not, how could he then have fulfilled his resolution that his house, as well as himself, should serve the Lord? What! resolve to serve God with his family, and not join with them in supplication for the grace to serve him? That is not at all likely.

Now is it not right and proper that every head of a family should adopt the resolution of him who said, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord"? But can there be religion in a family without prayer? Is there not inconsistency in saying, I and my family will serve God, but we will have no family altar or offering? Is not prayer one of the most essential parts of the service of God? Do we not suppose that family prayer is more pleasing to God than the omission of it? I wonder if any one ever omitted it for fear of being guilty of will-worship, or through dread that it might for some reason offend God? I wonder if the practice of family prayer ever distressed any conscience? The omission of it has troubled many; I would that it might more, until there be more praying houses in the land than there are at present.

I do not see how persons can really enjoy the peace of God, and feel that they are ready to begin the new song with the redeemed of all ages in the New Jerusalem, while they are living in such a loose and careless manner here. If we do not delight to pray and worship God in our own homes in this world, do we imagine that it would be the joy of our hearts to enter the pearly gates and engage in the services and participate in the joys and raptures of heaven? Could we enter there to-day, would our hearts be fully in tune for such holy delights? Are we living so near to God from day to day that our longing souls are panting for his immediate presence, where there is fulness of joy? Have we the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts? Do we know the love of Christ, and are we filled with all the fulness of God? Can we sing with the poet in truth—

"I have tasted Canaan's grapes,
And now I long to go
Where the Lord his vineyard keeps,
And where the clusters grow."

Do we take more pleasure in the service of God than in any thing else? If we do, then we are becoming more and more like the heavenly, and the language of our hearts will be, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Prayer and praise will not be a task, but a delight.

If every professed christian lived where it is his privilege to live, and would aim to please God in all the little duties of life, what a heavenly land would ours be. There would be thousands of family altars, where now there are none at all. From thousands of happy hearts and homes the incense of holy prayer and praise would arise continually to the great and living God, who dwells on high, but who condescends to abide by his Spirit in the hearts of the humble and contrite ones. O what a privilege it is to hold communion with God; to draw the light of heaven down into our dark minds; to have God for our sun and shield; to have all the bitter things of life sweetened with his blessing. It is such a privilege to pray, I do not see how any individual who has once tried it can ever leave it off. We should consider how good it is in our heavenly Father to open a way whereby poor sinful worms like us could have the privilege to call upon his great and holy name. Through Jesus we may approach the mercy-seat, without fear of being repulsed; remembering that we have such a compassionate high priest, we are exhorted to "come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." How sweet and precious the language of that beautiful hymn—

"What a friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear;
What a privilege to carry
Every thing to God in prayer.

I have often thought how many trials, perplexities and difficulties in families might be remedied, alleviated, and sometimes avoided, if they would only take every thing to God in prayer.

How much better it is to enter a house where the atmosphere is impregnated with the love of God; where there is singing, praying, reading the Bible, smiling faces, and happy hearts, bounding with holy joy; than it is to go where every thing appears stiff, cold and formal; where there is little or nothing said about Jesus; where there is no singing, praying, or rejoicing in the love of God. How much different a servant of God feels in such a family, than he does in one where there is humility, and freedom to praise the Lord. No wonder that ministers feel downcast, and almost crushed sometimes, when they go round and find so little sympathy, and so little humble, Christ-like religion among those who ought to be willing and always ready to lift and help and encourage the servants of God, by their prayers and words of kindly cheer. Let a minister go into a family where they really enjoy religion and love the appearing of Jesus, and he feels much stronger to preach than he does when he meets with a cold reception, and finds but very little if any Holy Ghost religion. Young ministers are sometimes almost killed by slights and rebuffs from proud, cold-hearted professors. Sometimes, and quite frequently too, in these days, when you enter a house, all the conversation will be about "this great minister," or "that great preacher," and, "I should like to hear such a one," etc.; and by the time they get through, the young preacher feels that he is nobody and they do not care to hear him; and so he goes to the meeting-house all discouraged, and cannot preach half as well as he could if he had not heard the conversation, or if they had talked more about Jesus and salvation, than about some "great man." It seems to me the first questions asked concerning preachers should be, "Is he a good man? Is he full of faith and the Holy Ghost? Is God with him? Does he do good wherever he goes?" instead of, "Is he a great man, or a great preacher?" If those who profess to be looking for the coming of Jesus lived nearer to God, and were more humble, prayerful and devoted, there would not be such pulling and hauling and quarreling about preachers; they would be willing for God to work through and by whom he would; there would be more union and harmony throughout the churches.

I believe we must be right in our own hearts and homes, before we can be right in the church, or in the world. We must commence against our own house, and then watch and pray and work, night and day, as the Israelites did, and then we shall be accomplishing something for God. Religion is an every-day thing. It is not like a garment, to be worn only on special occasions, and then laid aside. True religion has its seat in the heart. Our righteousness is to exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, or we shall never enter the kingdom of heaven. We must have a righteousness in the heart which develops itself in practical conformity to the will of Christ. The true christian is a new creature in Christ Jesus; old things are passed away, and every thing becomes new. He is not his own; he is bought with a price; and his constant endeavor is to glorify God in his spirit and body, which are his. God dwells in his heart by his Spirit, and he is transformed and changed by the renewing of his mind.

If we have religion in the heart, will it not show itself in the household? Can we be christians abroad, and not be christians at home? Can we expect to live eternally in "our Father's house," if we do not invite God into our house? Do we expect to commune with Christ for ever in a world of light and blessedness, if we do not love to commune with him the few short days we tarry here? Are we ready to meet the great change which is so soon to come? Have we been changed from sinners to saints? Have we been changed from a life of carelessness, unbelief, and unholiness, to a life of faith, holiness and prayer? Are we living daily in the favor of God, and carrying the evidence in our hearts that we are the children of God? If so, then we are ready for the great change from mortality to immortality; from this world of sin and misery to the kingdom of holiness and eternal felicity; from this vile, corruptible body, to the beautiful and glorious image of our immortal King. O what a change that will be. No wonder the poet sang—

"We'll gladly exchange a world like this,
Where death triumphant reigns,
For a beautiful home in that land of bliss,
Where all is happiness, joy and peace,
And nothing can enter that pains."

O how many there are to-day who are waiting all the days of their appointed time, until their change come. From how many hearts and homes does there arise the prayer, which Jesus so long ago taught his children to utter, "Thy kingdom come."

O reader, can you breathe this prayer from the depths of your heart? Should it be announced to-day, "Behold he cometh," would your heart leap for joy? Could you say, This is my God; I have waited for him? Are you living all the time in your family, in the church, and in the world, so as to convince all who know you that you are a true christian, and are looking for and loving the appearing of Jesus? O, if there are any doubts, look around you; awake, and call upon your God. Bear every cross, perform every duty, pray in secret, pray in public, pray in your family, pray everywhere; pray without ceasing, pray in faith, pray in the Holy Ghost. Make short prayers in your family, but in secret pray as long as you please, and at last hear the "Well done." J. W. THOMAS.

ABIDING IN CHRIST.

It is the privilege of every christian to abide in Christ, and not only a privilege but a duty; for we as christians represent Christ to the world, and we cannot really honor or be of service to him, unless we are in possession of this blessing, this conscious union to the true vine. The christian who is resting in Christ, is not disturbed by the petty annoyances of this life. To be sure, he will be tried and tempted in various ways; but the power of temptation will be broken, and it is easier to resist its influence with the grace of God in the heart to help in every time of need. This all-sustaining and all-sufficient grace enables him to rejoice, even in the most severe trials; and while dark clouds may hover around him, and everything looks dark and gloomy, he still rejoices, for he knows that beyond the clouds the sun is shining brightly, and in due time unerring wisdom will make all things plain.

But these trials of his faith do not disturb the sweet peace he feels in his heart; it is "like a river, and the righteousness thereof like the waves of the sea." The surface may be ruffled for a season, but the undercurrent remains undisturbed, and it still flows calmly and steadily on, until it is lost in the boundless ocean of God's love. "Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them."

Another reason why we should abide in Christ is, we cannot work successfully for him, unless we have his love as the ruling motive of our lives. It is this power—this burning love for Jesus and a perishing world, that will reach the heart, and have an influence ont he minds of sinners. Many fail of accomplishing the good they desire, because they lack this fullness of Christ's love, this unfailing source of peace and joy.

The Christian who is sweetly resting in Christ will be joyful. We cannot be unhappy when we feel that Jesus loves us. The assurance of his abiding and unchanging love in the heart, dispels every lingering doubt, and casts out every tormenting fear.

It is this love that has followed us through all our wanderings, forgetfulness, and ingratitude, and it is this love that freely pardons, forgives, and restores us again to the favor of God. When we contemplate the eternal and immutable love of God to us, as revealed in Jesus Christ, that love which did not spare the only Son of God, but while we were yet sinners, he died that we might live; that love which restores the soul, and keeps us in sacred nearness to Christ, we can but exclaim, surely this is the love that is "unspeakable and full of glory." May God help us to abide in this love and stand complete in Christ; then we shall glorify him by bringing forth much fruit; and while we feel our weakness and unworthiness, yet knowing that he is love, and we have the assurance that he loves us, we will say,

Would that I were more closely bound
To my Beloved who ever lives!
Would that my soul were always found
Abiding in the peace he gives.

PERDITION LITERATURE.

This new enemy does not wait to be sought out; it refuses to be avoided. It meets us on the street-cars, on the boats, is before us and stares at the passer-by from every news-stall, around which groups of young men and boys may hourly be seen, eagerly feasting their fancies on scenes of debauchery. We may keep our children from the theatre, and so train them that they shall never desire to frequent it; but there is now an educator presented within their reach which may soon undermine all the home lessons of purity, and, by easy steps, lead them to perdition.

The teachings of our schools and our churches must be to a great extent in vain, while these wretched panderers to depravity are undoing the work of the school and the church. One such periodical may do more evil than many pulpits can correct. If this raid of license remains unchecked, preaching, teaching, and warning will be alike in vain.

The demoralizing tendency of a large part of the issues of the press, is positive and widespread. The brains of authors are taxed to their utmost to write and re-write tales of the most extravagant and startling description, to meet the popular taste. Cross-eyed and fevered visions are invoked, the hellish inspiration of the intoxicating beverage is called into play, to furnish sensation stories, and tragic tales of love, seduction, desertion, suicide, and death—murders, elopements, assignations, and crimes of damning hue—all written to order to "sell" the sheet, and to "sell" the purchaser.

The tale being written, immense placards decorate the walls of the city, illustrated with pictures of assassinations, or desperate leaps from mountain cliffs, or midnight plunges into the sea, while the pale moon looks down on the saddening spectacle. And the eye and heart of the young, as they pass along the street, are educated into familiarity with the base and sensual passions of the vicious, the abandoned, and the lost. The reading of these exciting and "thrilling" tales follows, and the serpent winds his snare around the heart, which loses not its hold until thousands are swept into the damning pool whence so few return to the atmosphere of purity or of hope.

It is the duty of every man and woman who loves his country, and its better and nobler social life, to exert a positive influence against this entire class of perdition literature. It is poisoning and corrupting the hearts of hundreds of thousands of the youth of our country to-day. It is leading scores of thousands insensibly, but surely, into the maelstrom where they will be swallowed up forever.

OMENS OF REFORM.

Amid all the confused, strange, uncertain sounds given out from the pulpit in these days, there is occasionally a strain that sounds especially pleasant to a believer's ear. It is a true gospel sound, where we have been accustomed to hear discordant and opposing doctrines. A few evenings since, we attended a meeting in W., with a brother with whom we had put up. A protracted meeting was in session, and an elder from another town preached from Matt. 25: 21,—"And his lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant." Many good things were said upon the text, relating to the talents, our personal duties and responsibilities; then the preacher applied the subject as illustrating the second coming of Christ, and the final judgment; stating that "we must all appear there and receive reward;" that it would "be a personal matter." He then remarked, "We hold many things too lightly; the evangelical churches hold many truths too loosely; we believe important truths, but think too little of them. The judgment is a personal matter, and is at the second coming of Christ. We should all think seriously, and often of it; and the nearer we can bring it to us, the better effect it will have on our lives."

To this discourse, we could have heartily responded, Amen; but thought it not duty so to do, lest the people might think it was heresy if we adopted it. We could but think how often and bitterly the same doctrines had been opposed when preached and taught by our people; and the remarks urged against us, that it made no difference whether the day was near or far off; or that it hindered mission work and crippled our efforts for good. I wished to shake hands with that brother but had no opportunity. May the Lord bless him, and lead him and others of his church to grasp those precious truths connected with the judgment, and following it, more closely, and to urge them upon the church and world more vehemently, that more good may follow.

HEALTH.

BRO. GRANT:—I desire to tell to you and to all my brethren and friends who read the Crisis, the story of God's merciful dealings with me for the past year. There has been a decided improvement in my health, a constant, steady, though slow gain for about twelve months. From my youth, I have been prejudiced against drugs and drug medications. I have believed that health in a great measure depended upon air, exercise, and food. So in my weakness I did not look with confidence to the doctors, but prayed to God that he would send the healing balm in his own good time and way. I believe it was in answer to this constant prayer, that I was directed or lead to read and investigate the views of Dr. J. C. Jackson, of Dansville, N. Y. Never did I before meet with expressions so reasonable, so completely in harmony with my own experience and convictions; and though I was rather slow to enter fully upon the course marked out in the "Laws of Life," and in the "home prescription," freely given to me by Dr. Jackson; yet by degrees I have been entering into, and striving to walk in the highway of health as thus plainly set before me. It may seem to many a "strait and narrow," but like that other "narrow way" of which we read, the end of that way is life and peace.

"Pure air, pure soft water, and wholesome food," seem to be the essential requisites, aided by a firm and hopeful faith, and a cheerful resolution to OBEY all the laws of nature and of God. I fully believe there are thousands who read the Crisis, who would be greatly benefited in body and mind by following this course. I cannot now tell all that might be desirable for you to know on the subject of health; but I may say this with confidence to all invalids: you will never gain a permanent and satisfactory state of health by the use of drugs and mineral medicines. No turn away from these disgusting provisions, and look to God, and follow the laws of health, and life, and purity; and though the change in your symptoms may be slow and almost imperceptible, yet it will be sure, and all the more permanent and complete for being slow, like most of the operations of God and nature. In a future letter, I may, with your permission, give a sketch of the leadings of Providence, during the past year, in regard to spiritual things. Let us all praise the Lord for his goodness.

SOBER THOUGHTS.

There is one place wherein we may talk about our neighbors in safety; that is in the closet. There is but one to whom we can talk with safety; and that is God. There is but one we can talk before in safety, and that is Jesus. He who thus talks, will prove a blessing to his neighbor, rather than an injury. If you have anything good to say of your neighbor, say it behind his back, if any thing evil, say it to his face, and he will not be puffed up in the one case, or fall without opportunity for self-defence in the other.

Evil speaking may be greatly diminished by a refusal to hear it, on the part of those who would not encourage it. Incredulity is only commendable when an evil report of your fellow falls on your ear. If you are compelled to listen to an evil report of your neighbor, avail yourself of the first opportunity to hear an explanation of the matter from the lips of him who is reported, and you may save him from ruin, and yourself much trouble.

Were tale-bearing any part of the law of righteousness, we should, no doubt, have examples of its commendation in the gospel, rather than its condemnation. In other words, if tale-bearing were a blessing, tale-bearers would not be cursed by the Savior.

— A man's reputation has been very aptly compared to a sheet of white paper, which, if it be once blotted, can hardly ever be made to look as spotless as before. Apologists of youthful immoralities should think of this.

— Good sense and christian principle must be in a very languid state, when a disrelish or weariness of life is the predominant feeling.

— When a man dies, people generally inquire what property he has left behind him. The angels will ask, what good deeds he has sent before him.

COMMON POLITENESS.

It is not polite to refuse to accommodate another, when it is in your power, and you can do it without detriment to yourself, and without infringing on the rights of others.

It is not polite to request of another a favor you would not willingly grant under similar circumstances.

It is not polite to invite persons to your house, when you do not desire to see them.

It is not polite to chew tobacco in the presence of those to whom your breath may be offensive,—whether in a dwelling-house, a stage-coach, a car, or a steamboat.

It is not polite to say through another, to a stranger or acquaintance at the door, whom you do not wish to see, that you are engaged, or not at home.

It is not polite to spit on the floor of a church, a dwelling-house, a car, in the cabin of a steamboat or a ferry-boat. The spitting on the floors of our cars and ferry-boats has become so common that ladies have often found it difficult to obtain seats where they could prevent soiling their dresses. A person who uses tobacco, and is obliged to spit, should never enter apartments set apart exclusively for ladies and gentlemen, unless he is willing to swallow the delectable juice.

It is not polite to contradict another, or rudely to question the truth of his remarks. You should speak with moderation, and convince with truthful arguments.

It is not polite, when passing another on the sidewalk, to turn to the left. Always to the right.

It is not polite to hurry through the streets, jarring one person, jostling another, and stepping on the toes of a third.

It is not polite to use perfumery about your person. Nature does not require it in those who keep themselves clean and pure. When a person is highly scented, it appears as if it were done to conceal an offensive breath, or some other disagreeable smell.

It is not polite to borrow money, a book, or any article, and not to return it at the time designated, or to wait until called upon by the owner. Forgetfulness or thoughtlessness is not a justifiable excuse when you retain, a moment longer than the time specified, whatever belongs to another.

It is not polite to use pompous or high-sounding words in conversation. The more simple words the better, in which you can convey your meaning and be understood.

It is not polite to notice the defects of nature in others, or to speak in their presence of their deformity. Cast your eyes on what is perfect, and speak only of what is agreeable.

It is not polite to beg earnestly in public for any charitable object. It is sufficient to lay your case before your hearers, and let them decide how much it is their duty to give. They can judge, without the advice or dictation of another.

THE CHICKEN'S MISTAKE.

A little downy chicken, one day,
Asked leave to go on the water,
Where she saw a duck with her brood at play,
Swimming and splashing about her.

Indeed, she began to fret and cry,
When her mother would'nt let her:
"If the ducks can swim there, why can't I?
Are they any bigger or better?"

Then the old hen answered: "Listen to me,
And hush your foolish talking;
Just look at your feet, and you will see
They were only made for walking."

But chicky wistfully eyed the brook,
And didn't half believe her;
For she seemed to say, by a knowing look:
"Such stories couldn't deceive her."

And, as her mother was scratching the ground,
She muttered lower and lower:
"I know I can go there and not be drowned,
And so I think I'll show her."

Then she made a plunge where the stream was deep,
But saw too late her blunder;
For she had hardly time to peep
Ere her foolish head went under.

And now I hope her fate will show
The child my story reading,
That those who are older sometimes know
What you will do well in heeding.

That each content in his place should dwell,
And envy not his brother;
And any part that is acted well,
Is just as good as another.

For we all have our proper sphere below,
And this is a truth worth knowing:
You will come to grief if you try to go
Where you never was made for going.

NOT WILLING TO LEARN HIS OWN FAULTS.

A FABLE.

Paddle, my lady's lap-dog, and Tom, her favorite cat, had long entertained feelings of jealousy and envy toward each other; but at last they made it up, and agreed to be friends. Instead of snapping at Tom to make him go farther from the fire, that he might have the very front, Paddle would merely nudge him gently along, looking amiably at him at the same time; and Tom, though he wouldn't give way an inch farther than he was obliged, made no warlike demonstrations, such as putting up his back and swelling his tail.

"I think, dear friend," said Paddle one day (not being yet quite satisfied with the deference paid to him by his companion,) "we fail to show the reality of our regard to each other in one respect."

"What is that?" asked Tom.

"We are not candid with each other as to our mutual faults. Don't you think it would greatly improve us both if we acted the part of honest reprovers to each other?"

"I don't know but what it might," said Tom.

"Be assured of it," said Paddle; "and, that we may no longer neglect one of the most sacred duties of friendship, let us begin this very day."

"With all my heart," said Tom; "and, that being the case, do you know Iv'e often thought that when you"—

"Hush!" said Paddle; "every thing in order. You know, dear, I am older than you. I may say I remember you a kitten; so let me give you the benefit of my observations first."

"Very well," said Tom. "I'm ready."

"Well, then, first, dear," said Paddle, "you are too fond of the front of the fire, and sit in such a way before it, that I am obliged to have recourse to many gentle hints before I can induce you to move. In the next place, dear, when we go to dinner, you invariably try to take the nicest, which I look upon as indelicate. In the third place"—

"When will my turn be?" interrupted Tom.

"Stop!" said Paddle; "I haven't done." And he went on to enumerate several other infirmities in Tom's character, the exhibition of which he considered in some way to affect his own comfort.

Tom, with some effort, contrived to wait it all out, and then asked, "Pray, is that all?"

"All I can think of at present," said Paddle.

"Then," said Tom, drawing himself up, "in the first place"—

"Thank you," said Paddle, interrupting him. "You must excuse my staying now. I hope you'll improve upon what I've said to you; but I have an engagement, and can not stop any longer this time."—Child at Home.

FRANK KINGSTON'S RESOLVE.

"Halloo, Frank! where are you bound for?" cried Ned Hillary to his friend Frank Kingston.

"Just going home," said Frank; "they kept us pretty busy at the shop to-night, and we couldn't shut up till late."

"Well, say, don't stay at home and mope all the evening. It's a splendid night; let's have some fun."

"What kind of fun?" asked Frank.

"O, most anything. A game of billiards, perhaps, for variety."

Frank hesitated. He knew very well that his parents did not approve of his going to the billiard-room, but his fondness for the game sometimes overcame his scruples.

"Well, I'll come if I can," he said, as he moved on.

Ned called after him, "Don't fail; that's a good fellow. I'll meet you at the corner."

It had been a busy day, and Frank was tired and hungry. The table was waiting for him when he reached home, and his mother met him at the door with a smile and a pleasant word, but her voice had a weary sound, which Frank's ear could not fail to catch. He did not think of it again, however, till, having finished his supper, he was about to leave the house, his glance fell on her troubled face. She was rocking the baby, who was wakeful and worrying; the table was yet to be cleared, and the girl ran away on a visit to a sick sister. For an instant Frank deliberated, then back went the old straw hat to its nail behind the door, and the next moment he had coaxed baby from mother's arms, and was quieting it as gently as a girl. It was a pretty picture they made in the golden twilight—the curly-headed boy hushing the baby sister to sleep—and the pleased smile on their mother's face told that, to her eye, no painting by any of the masters could be half so sweet.

Eight o'clock came, and baby was sleeping soundly. Mother had seated herself darning stockings, and Frank was wondering whether it was not still early enough to meet Ned, when his father came in with the evening papers.

"Very busy to-night, Frank?" he asked. "My eyes feel badly, and I don't like to use them much. Suppose you read a while to mother and me."

It was something of a disappointment, and Frank began the task reluctantly, but quickly becoming interested, all thoughts of Ned and the evening's amusements vanished. After the reading, there was a pleasant chat over the events of the day, and when Frank kneeled with his father and mother at prayers, he felt that it had been a happy and restful evening.

"Heard the news?" said one of the shop boys, the next morning.

"Ned Hillary had his eye put out last night—got into a quarrel in the billiard saloon."

Frank shuddered when he thought how narrowly he had escaped being mixed up in the same quarrel, and, then and there, he resolved to have nothing more to do with the billiard-room.

At noon he told his mother of Ned Hillary's misfortune.

"Had he been home, making others happy, like my Frank, it would not have happened," she said, with her loving hand on his shoulder.

Frank hung his head; and then, because his sense of honor was too fine to let him take praise that was undeserved, he confessed how many times he had been at the billiard-room, and how near he had come to being one of the party that night. "But I shall never go there again, mother dear," he said, seeing the tears in her eyes.

"My boy has need to pray, 'Lead us not into temptation,'" she said softly. And Frank did pray those words in a way he had never prayed them before, and though he sometimes found it hard to refuse an invitation to play his favorite game, He who gave that prayer to his disciples, gave him strength to resist the temptation.—Alta Grant, in Little Corporal.

HOW TWO CHILDREN WERE SAVED.

Some time ago, in India, two little children were asleep in a bungalow—a bungalow is a house, in India—when a tiger came came out of the jungles—jungles are thick woods—smelling after something to eat. He smelt the children, and broke into the bungalow after them. But the first thing the tiger saw was a looking-glass, and in the looking-glass he saw a tiger. The tiger did not know it was himself, so he growled and grew angry, and the tiger in the looking-glass growled and grew angry. That made him furious, and he sprang at the tiger in the glass, which of course smashed the glass into a thousand pieces, and it frightened the tiger so that he was glad to run off as fast as his legs could carry him.

So the dear little children were saved. This is the way God saved them. Was it not a curious way? God has a great many ways and means of protecting and blessing us which we do not know about, so that we can never thank him enough for his fatherly care of us.

I am glad we do not live in tiger countries. When our grandparents came to this country there was nothing but woods, and the wolves and bears often crept around their log-cabins after something to eat. They would have been very glad of a baby to eat, I dare say.

There are no bears and wolves around now, and the children can go quietly to sleep in their little beds with nothing to harm or make them afraid.

Some children like a light in the room when they go to sleep.

"I do not want a light," said little Bessie, "because I can't see myself when I am fast asleep, and I know God can look down and see me just as well without it."

Wise little Bessie.

PRAYING OVER LESSONS.

"There," said a little boy, "I have learnt my lesssons sooner than ever; I believe that it does good to pray over my books."

He was asked what he meant by so saying.

"Well, when I came home from school, and looked over my lesson, I thought how difficult it was. At first I said it cannot be learnt in so short a time as I have; but then I remembered what my Sunday school teacher had told me about Daniel and his three companions; so I thought, if prayer aided them it might help me. I then prayed over my lesson, asking God to help me to make my memory good, and I learned my lesson in half the time."

This little boy took an excellent method; and if he continues to look to God for a blessing on his studies, he will not look in vain. And why not ask divine aid in one's studies, as well as in anything else? Learning is not easy work, and we need God to help us. Our minds are under his control, and he can make the memory strong, and enable us to do more work in one hour than we could otherwise do in two.—Children's Guest.

ANASTASIS.

I sit and call before me kindred faces,
And rich-toned voices thrill again my ear;
I think of meeting-times and meeting-places,
In pleasant by-gones with the loved and dear.

And now to miss so many brings such sorrow,
I write and weep, falling my tears like rain;
And there would be for me no bright to-morrow,
If these were gone ne'er to return again.

My soul is wedded to the dear departed;
Though many coldly turn from fallen dust,
I cannot, but must fondly cling, true-hearted,
To those long loved and lost, with holy trust;

That He who calmly entered death's dark prison,
Losing his life for sinners to atone,
Will bring his saints all back, as he hath risen,
With life and being, endless as his own.

O, blissful vision o'er my senses stealing!
O, scene all radiant with golden rays!
The bowing, breaking heavens the Christ revealing,
And time of resurrection day of days.

Yes, blessed day; for then I hope to meet them
Beyond the darkness of death's shadowy vale,—
The very same,—and I shall know and greet them,
Not as I left them, cold, and still, and pale;

But every cheek flushed with a lasting luster,
And every eye filled with a living fire,
And, gathered where the singing angels cluster,
The rolling ages swell our praises higher.

THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

DAVID ON THE SOUL OF MAN.

That soul and self and life are truly and strictly identical in many scriptures, needs not much argument to show. A conclusive illustration is furnished in the familiar prophetic prayer, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell," quoted by Peter standing up with the eleven at Pentecost. A two-fold reference to David and Jesus is not permitted, because the apostle expressly says of the Psalmist, that "he is dead and buried," and also that he "is not ascended into the heavens." The limitation to Christ is therefore complete, and so Peter insists by the most lucid representation. That he spake with authority, who would deny? Look at the man fully recovered from the lethargy and gloom that fell on him from the awful scene of the crucifixion, where pale and lifeless, after the bitterest experience of insult and agony, hung the Lord. Now animated, and filled with the Spirit, Peter preaches with wonderful power and effect, and three thousand are baptized. His version of the prophecy of David is therefore valid, as fulfilled in the august son of David and second Adam.

Peter said of David, "he is dead." And to discourage any sophistical perversion or misconstruction of the situation, he pre-advises—"Let me freely speak unto you." Perfect openness marks the man, both in his manner and communication. Why not have said, "David is disembodied," if it were true? Why not have intimated, or set forth by some form of implication, "David has gone home to glory"? Or if such a representation were not exactly adapted to the argument which was the power and glory of that day's preaching, why have we not some usual form of expression in Scripture in regard to the experience and condition of the dead, analogous to modern and popular conception? Let us just think slowly and remember carefully whether we find modern and Bible phraseology concurrent. Compare the necrologies of Christendom and inspiration, and see if "Christendom" be not theologically backslidden. How very common is the remark concerning the deceased saint, "he wears a crown of gold," "he strikes a golden harp," "he stands on the sea of glass," "he bathes in an ocean of bliss," "he has joined the company of the glorified," "he sits on a throne," "he sings the song of Moses and the Lamb." A mistaught faith locates these beatitudes at the instant succeeding death, or nearly, while the word of God comprehends the whole coming coronation and joy in the resurrection.

What says the prophecy? "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell,"—my nephesh in sheol, or my psuche in hades. Where now, then, is the soul of Christ after the terrible struggle is ended, and he lies motionless, at full length, a dead majesty in the heart of the rock? Behold him there, the precious gift of God for man! He sees not, he hears not, he breathes not. May I now, with half-drawn breath, draw softly near, and on my knees contemplate the inconceivable wonder, the only begotten of God, a prisoner here, under the power of death? May I look on that face of purity, rest my eye on that forehead, clear, massive, and noble, and remember that here, in the silence broken by no sound, sleeps in death the appointed King of kings? If I lean my ear toward that side wounded by the spear, shall I hear the faintest heart-beat? If I softly lay my finger on the wrist tinted with a blood-stain from the hand, shall I feel one feeble thrill of life in the pulse? Let me watch to see if the bosom of this dead Nobleman does not just perceptibly rise with an inspiration? Here I stretch out my lamp, in whose light the contour of the face is more fully revealed—(it is the never-to-be-forgotten face of the Captain of our salvation), and I wait to see if one little flutter in the flame does not betoken a motion of air in expiration. No! There is no sign, no sound of life. Jesus is dead. How could he live with that mangled side? I have found it out now; the soul of my Savior is in sheol. The life of my God, nay, the manhood, the humanity, the very being of Jesus is here. The hope and glory of the world is here. Here, on this hewn shelf, here in this niche of rock, sleeps the Son of God, a prisoner. Call sheol and hades the grave, or the state of the dead; here lies the the victim. But this is not Gehenna. Has any part of Jesus gone to Gehenna? Has a soul immortal of the Prince of life gone down to a hell of fire and despair?

For what conceivable reason, after the appalling agony and death of the cross, should Jesus, disembodied, make this visit? What necessity in the covenant of redemption shall impose or require such an ideal of woe? Is it to bring out trophies of grace from the fierce abyss? No one believes that. Is it to suffer a greater expiatory pain than that of crucifixion, or complete an unfinished work of atonement? Does any one believe that? Suppose there are no souls in gehenna; and we know there are none, for the wicked shall be brought forth to the day of wrath, and that is future yet. It is enough to know that the dead Jesus is in sheol, not gehenna. And here now, in this rocky closet, in this noiseless darkness, shut up and barred with a heavy stone, reposes the mighty dead. Every thing of Christ is here but the spiritus vitae, or spirit of life. Be this air oxygen, ozone, or electricity, it is not the Christ. The power of life is in the hand of God, and he will give it presently again.

O, the precious trust committed to this narrow cavern, the sacred flesh and solid bones, the prostrate stature of the mighty. Shall it lie here helpless forever? Shall it decompose and dissolve? No, not a speck of mould will tarnish the heavenly aspect of the dead. Not one point of discoloration shall startle a looker on with a foreboding of wrecked expectation and eternal death. "Thy holy one shall not see corruption." David did; Jesus did not. And here then in this hades reposes my all. I remember that the blood of Christ cleanses from sin, a material current of life, lost, expended, given up, for the life of dying men. If this material blood is so priceless and so potent to wash away the guilt of material, mortal man; so then also the material Jesus, sleeping here (though bloodless, still material,) is my glory. But here he shall not long remain. For at the moment appointed, in the twinkling of an eye, by the power of God, our Lord Jesus is broad awake; and though he last looked down with death-filmed eye, faint and failing, on both foes and friends, from the cross, now he sees the faint dawn of morning stealing into his tomb. He rises, and angels pay obeisance to the conqueror.

TRUTH.

What is truth? "Thy word is truth." What a miserable people we should be, if left to drift among the various doctrines of men, with no other means of finding out the truth than our own degenerate reasons; but God in his goodness has graciously given us his word, that by it we may steer clear of the mere teachings of men, and arrive at the truth. We are aware of the fact that God's word, as revealed in the Bible, has been perverted by men ever since it was given; sometimes intentionally, sometimes by men who have been sincere and conscientious in their interpretations of Scripture. Now we can see the fearful results that have been brought about by such a course. Look, for instance, at the immense loss of life resulting from the mistaken ideas of Constantine, with reference to the propagation of christianity by the sword. Follow it along until seventy millions of the faithful are made to feel the pangs of famine, or the smart of steel; and then consider that all this has arrisen from simply the difference in the opinions of poor fallen man, some of whom have undoubtedly believed (like Paul) that they were doing God service in slaying those who differed from them in point of belief. In their day, Bibles were very scarce indeed, and this, together with the fact that the people were forbidden to read the Bible themselves, may in a degree mitigate their case. But for men in this age of the world, with Bibles as common as newspapers, to begin uncompromised wars of extermination, and revive the same spirit of bitter hatred, exhibited by the Mother of harlots in her palmiest days, against those who differ from them, is really astonishing. But alas, such is the fact. We see men of intelligence who would not like to be considered bigoted, just as firmly tied to some creed as ever a poor ignorant, priest-ridden son of the Emerald Isle could be to his spiritual guides or teachers. Speak one word to such men, found in the word and not in their creed, and your orthodoxy is at once questioned. Undertake to reason with them from the word, and at once they fly to the standard works of their church; and before you are aware, although you love the same Jesus they profess to,—you are reported as an infidel, or an imposter. This is painful, and hard to bear, but when we remember that Jesus said, "If the world hate you; know that it hated me before it hated you," we forget it all, and forgive it all also.

With these few remarks, I wish to offer a few thoughts on what I consider to be truth. The resurrection of the wicked is questioned by some, who are looking for the Lord to return from heaven. To such, let me say, that I have been very free to read all the arguments in favor of the theory that have come within my notice; and in them have failed to discover that the following thoughts have been met at all; viz., God placed Adam in the garden as a neutral, i. e., as a candidate for a living or a dying nature. In the midst of plenty, he transgressed the law that God had established, the penalty of which was, "Dying thou shalt surely die." Consequently he became dying in his nature, or mortal. Question: Would not Adam give to his posterity precisely the same nature that he had? Yes. Then, of course, his posterity must all die regardless of character; but if this is not so, why is it that infants, who are incapable of discerning between right and wrong, die? If it is urged that "A clean thing cannot be brought from an unclean," we again claim this as proof that the thing born is just like the parent; not because it partakes of the parent's sins, but of the parent's nature (mortal.)

Again, in regard to Christ, we read in Heb. 2: 14, 15, that he partook of "flesh and blood," that he might "through death," etc. Now, this to my mind clearly shows that, although "In him was no sin," he must die, because he had taken upon himself a mortal or dying nature. This all goes to prove that men will die whether they sin or not. Very well; we now see that the law given in the garden, which is a divine law, necessarily demands the life of every man, woman and child; and, being founded in justice, will have all it demands.

Now we come to the Mosaic law. There we see men again have the offer of another probation. In fact this is shown where the seed of the woman is promised; and also bear in mind that Christ was as fully slain, to all intents and purposes, at the foundation of the world, as four thousand years after. The law says: "The soul that SINNETH, it shall die." Then we ask the question, What shall the soul die for? Why the law says for its SINS. This is law number two.

Now we have one man and two laws, both divine, founded in justice, and demanding life, or blood. The first asserts its claim on the man, and when he dies the first, or Adamic death, it is satisfied; but the second asserts its claim, and the question is, will it get it? If it is a divine law, which we believe it is, it must; then in order for that law to be satisfied, it is absolutely necessary for the man to live again in order to die for his sins. To say that the second law simply demands a continuation of the condition, or state in which the first law had placed him, is simply to rob the second law of its force and just demands, for it distinctly says that, "The soul that sinneth, it SHALL DIE"; and how could it be said that a man dies for his sins, when, in fact, he never lives?

Again, Paul says in Gal. 3: 13, that "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law." Now this law spoken of is not the law given in the garden, but clearly the Mosaic. That is plain; for, says the apostle, "Christ hath," not will. He hath done it already; bear in mind that Christ is as a "lamb slain from the foundation of the world." The curse of the law in the garden was death. How can it be said, with any degree of truth, that "Christ hath redeemed us," when every Christian from John the Baptist to the present time has suffered the penalty of the first law given in the garden? It is very evident that law number two is referred to, for in the fullest sense of the term it can be said that Christ hath, or has redeemed us from the curse of the (Mosaic) law; therefore, Christians never suffer the penalty of the law for sin, for Christ has redeemed them from it, hence sinners must suffer the penalty of the "second death," in order to pay the debt of the second law. "God knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." The foregoing looks like truth to us. We have tried to present it in the spirit of Christ, with meekness. It will bear examination. Brethren, let us get our hearts right, live for God, not self.

3. I fellowship all Christians and saints of every name,
Believing pure religion is every where the same;
I am not superstitious, nor filled with party zeal,
The love of God is precious, its virtues I do feel.

4. In vain I attempt to describe what I feel,
The language of mortals or angels would fail;
My Jesus is precious, his love I do claim,
I'm raised to a rapture while praising his name.

5. I find him in singing, I find him in prayer,
In sweet meditation, he always is near;
My constant companion, O may we ne'er part,
All glory to Jesus, he dwells in my heart.

6. I love thee my Savior, I love thee my God,
I love thy dear people, thy ways and thy word;
With tender emotion, I love sinners too,
Since Jesus has died to redeem them from woe.

7. My Jesus is precious, I cannot forbear,
Though sinners despise me, his love to declare;
His love overwhelms me, O, soon I shall try
The kingdom of Jesus, when he comes from on high.

8. But while I am preaching, as Jesus gave command,
I meet with opposition and trials on each hand;
Some say that I'm deluded, and filled with heresy,
Because I do not publish the mysterious trinity.

9. Some say that I am humble, some say that I am proud,
Some say that I am sober, some say that I am rude;
Some do not like my preaching, some say it is too plain,
Some say they will not hear me, some say I preach for gain.

10. Altho' the world despise me, and call me poor and mean,
And now do persecute me, and give me cruel names;
I trust the holy Savior will help me now to bear
In meekness, those reproaches which daily I do hear.

For the World's Crisis.

HUMBLENESS OF MIND.

What a sweet and precious passage of Scripture that is recorded in Col. 3: 12. How much better the world would be if it was generally heeded. If all professors, instead of putting on things which God forbids, would "put on humbleness of mind," what an influence it would have to convince unbelievers of the reality, preciousness and value of the religion of Jesus Christ. How much deeper, purer and lasting would be the enjoyment of thousands of professors, if they only lived "down in that lowly valley where grace crowns the meek and the lowly." It is impossible for any one to enjoy the presence of the Holy Spirit, while they are proud and haughty.

We must, like Zacheus, "come down," if we would have the Savior abide at our house, and we "receive him joyfully." Humility is a grace of the first rank and eminence in christianity. It is mentioned in Scripture with peculiar marks of distinction and honor. "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."—Micah 6: 8.

Pride is stigmatized as God's peculiar abhorrence, but humility is honored with the fullest testimonies of his approbation. "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil; pride, arrogancy, and the evil way, and the froward mouth do I hate."—Prov. 8: 13. "Though the Lord be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly; but the proud he knoweth afar off."

When the Son of God condescended in our nature to instruct mankind, he set humility in the front of his beatitudes, and at the head of his excellent sermon on the mount. "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 5: 3. The importance and rank it holds in our religion is still more emphatically described in another place. "Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 18: 4.

He that excels in humility is the greatest and best christian. It is a laudable ambition to aspire after this foremost rank of honor among the disciples of Christ. God's way to greatness and honor is through the valley of humility and meekness. "Whoso exalteth himself shall be abased; but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Be clothed with humility; for "God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble." "Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time."

The most truly distinguishing promises are made to the truly humble. "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place; with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones."—Isa. 57: 15. O what a privilege and blessing it is to have God to dwell with us by his Spirit; how deep and pure is the joy and peace we experience when we have God with us as our upholder and supporter. If God is our portion, what more can we ask for? There is enough in him to satisfy all our wants. His favor is life. "O, taste and see that the Lord is good." "Blessed [or happy] is he that trusteth in him."

How strange it is that so many wander in darkness and live in such an unsatisfied condition, destitute of any real happiness, rather than humble themselves before God, and seek the presence of his blessed Spirit. The true way to be happy is to be humble. Humility is necessary to faith. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." If we do not please God we cannot have the peace of God; consequently we are miserable. They who possess the Spirit of God are the most happy and useful persons in the world. "For the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." The tree which bends the lowest bears the most fruit. So the individual who lives in the valley where the stream of salvation flows, will be the most fruitful. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."

Humility is a grace which adorns every other grace, and recommends religion to the eye of every beholder. One reason why no more sinners are converted, is because there is so much pride among the professed people of God. When the church is adorned and decorated with those things which bespeak pride and vanity, how can we expect the unbelieving to see any beauty in religion? If the church would put on the ornaments of grace—humbleness of mind, meekness and love, then she could prevail with God and men. Then they would be "living epistles, known and read of all men." Humility is the grace which casts a lustre upon all other attainments, even if they are comparatively low; while pride eclipses the beauty of great and distinguishing excellence. Humility makes us feel right, act right, live right, and talk right.

To be christians we must be like Christ. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." He was meek and lowly in heart. He made himself of no reputation, but humbled himself even to the shameful, painful death of the cross. When he was reviled, he reviled not again. Jesus condescended to men of low estate. He labored with the despised and down-trodden. He eat with publicans and sinners.

O, how many there are to-day who might be useful if they would only be humble. How many poor, sorrowing hearts might be comforted, if it were not for pride. Reader, how is it with you? Are you too proud to confess Jesus? Are you too proud to associate with his despised followers? Will you deny the truth to obtain the honor of men? O, be wise, and consider your ways. Remember, God will not dwell in a proud heart. Give up to God. Cast away pride. Be willing to confess Christ any where. Live before the world so as to convince them you are a christian. Walk with God. Pray without ceasing. Love the appearing of Jesus, and then you will walk the golden streets and sing the new song.

J. W. THOMAS.

THE BIBLE reveals the only living and true God, and shows the way to him, and sets aside all other gods, and describes the vanity of them, and all that trust in such; in short, it is a book of laws, to show right and wrong; a book of wisdom, that condemns all folly, and makes the foolish wise; a book of truth, that detects all lies, and confutes all errors. A nation would be truly happy if it were governed by no other laws than those of this blessed book. It is the first book, the best book, and the oldest book in the world.

IMMORTALITY.

(Concluded.)

III. The third proposition sought to be established is, that the language of Scripture bearing on the subject of future punishment can, on the whole be, without violence, interpreted in harmony with the two preceding propositions. We say designedly 'on the whole,' for we maintain that it is only by a full and impartial review of the whole evidence that we can hope to arrive at a true verdict. We must distinctly decline to stake the whole of this tremendous issue, involving as it does not only the eternal destiny of a large proportion of the human race, but the ultimate victory of Divine goodness, upon the definition which may be adopted of any single word, whether Greek or English, or on the interpretation proposed of any two or three selected texts. . . . We cannot believe that divine revelation is thus Janus-faced; or that the voice of the lively oracles is as the dubious utterance of the pythoness; on the contrary, we are persuaded that it only needs the recognition of another truth, plainly revealed in Scripture, to effect a complete and satisfactory reconciliation of all the passages referred to.

This needful truth is, we hesitate not to assert, that which we endeavored to establish above—man by nature mortal, immortal only in Christ. Let this be accepted, and a solid basis is at once laid for the ultimate reconciliation of Scripture testimony. For even if we concede, what is to concede a good deal, that the passages which appear to favor the doctrine of eternal suffering, are of equal value with the passages which appear to favor the doctrine of the ultimate destruction of the lost, yet the recognition of the fact of man's essential mortality at once throws a preponderant weight into the scale with the latter; for, be it observed, it is no longer so many passages on the one side against so many on the other, but so many passages in favor of eternal suffering against so many passages in favor of eternal destruction, plus the fact of man's natural mortality, from which it follows of necessity that man can only suffer eternally on the supposition that he is to be made immortal in order so to suffer; which supposition is morally inadmissable. This is by Dean Sherlock, an able defender of the popular doctrine, distinctly admitted; "Whatever other difficulties there may be in eternal punishments," he observes, "this will be an unanswerable one, that a mortal creature should be made immortal to be punished for ever. For eternal punisments can never be just, if the person who is to suffer them be by nature mortal. For such punishments as exceed the proportion of nature, must exceed the proportion of justice also."

But, more than this. Not only does the fact of man's natural mortality, once recognized, thus clearly indicate which class of passages must necessarily govern our interpretation of the other, but at the same time it gives us the key by means of which the prima facie difficulties attaching to the other class may be easily unlocked. Thus, if we review the passages which apparently affirm the doc of eternal suffering, we must see at once that, with one or two unimportant exceptions, their whole strength lies in the use of the Greek word aionios (lit. 'age-lasting,') the adjective derived from the substantive aion (lit. 'age,') or the intensive form of aion-eis aionas aionon (lit. 'unto ages of ages.' Now, when it is asked, as it is with no small air of triumph, do not these expressions, especially the last denote eternity? we are content to reply, that depends on the subject to which they are applied. In most cases, at least, the adjective, and in all cases the intensive forms, signify a duration coincident with that of the subject spoken of. On this point, we have great pleasure in being able to quote Dr. George Sidney Smith, of Trinity College, Dublin, whose Greek scholarship will hardly be called in question, and whose testimony is all the more valuable as that of an opponent. "There is," he says, "no mystery or ambiguity about the word aionios. Like many other words in the Lexicon, it has several meanings; but this creates no difficulty; the context is always sufficient to decide; the relation and genesis of its different meanings are well ascertained; and as a general definition, it may be safely held that it commonly means a continuous duration as long as the subject is capable of."

One consideration, perhaps the most tremendous of all, which looms like a thundercloud in the mental horizon, we have not touched in the preceding remarks. The dogma of eternal suffering involves nothing less than than the moral character of God. We tremble as we tread this ground, for we feel that it is hallowed. Yet is it as clear as the midday sun that these two propositions: (1) The character of the God of revelation is summed up in one word, LOVE (1 John 4: 8); and (2) A large proportion of the Creator's intelligent creatures are to exist to all eternity in extremest misery, cannot both be true. If the first be true, as most assuredly it is, then the second must be false; if the second be true, then, however appalling the conclusion, the first is not. Men may delude themselves by thinking that they really believe both, but if they could analyze their own minds, they would, we are persuaded, discover that they did so very partially. Many, no doubt, who thoroughly believe the first, accept the second as an article of their creed, but it is not as the conviction of their moral consciousness, and it is to this fact, more than anything else, that we are disposed to trace the strange sensitivness, too often the angry terror rather, with which so many of our christian brethren hear the doctrine called in question. They feel instinctively that if they looked at it steadily, they must cease to believe it. Others there are who, really believing the second proposition, have thereby had their conceptions of the Divine character so darkened and distorted, that it has begotten in them that gloomy fanaticism which in past times burnt the heretic without compunction, and still presents religion to the world under the aspect of a grim and stony-eyed Medusa, rather than that of a beckoning angel at heaven's opening gates.—The Rainbow.

For the World's Crisis.

EXPOSITORY.—1 THESS. 5: 23.

Following light full and clear on "the day of the Lord," the descending of Jesus in connection with the waking echoes of the reverberating trump of God, when dead saints should "hear his voice" and come forth from the death sleep, in like manner as God brought Jesus to life from the dead; the change of the last remnant of the church, and the whole family of the redeemed being caught up to meet the Lord in the air, so ever to be with him; adding, "wherefore, comfort one another with these words," they revealing the only manner and time for saints, apostolic or others, to be with the Lord; in perfect agreement with Christ's solemn parting words, John 14: 1–3, "I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also," with the enforcement of sundry practical duties of universal obligation, as a preparation for the great reward, the apostle Paul prays:—"The very God of peace sanctify you wholly"; that is, every part, property, power or attribute, that man might be by any supposed to possess, and adds, "I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless." What! the body in distinction from the soul, the real responsible man, that never sinned, and is incapable of sinning, as matter cannot think, hear, reason, or judge, can neither do good or evil; be preserved BLAMELESS "unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ? Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it." Well, what does the apostle mean? Does he not teach the double, yea, the triple entity of man? Paul was a consistent, well-informed teacher of the Gentiles "in truth and verity."

What suggestions do the learned make? Let us see: Philip Doddridge—"Sanctify your whole [constitution] spirit, and soul, and body." Macknight, still better, "Your whole (person) 'spirit,'" etc. "It is," says Doddridge, "very evident that the apostle refers to a notion which prevailed among the Rabbis, as well as the philosophers (Pythagoreans, Platonists, and Stoics), that the person of man was constituted of three distinct substances, the rational spirit, the animal soul, and the visible body."—Cottage Bible. See Paul to the Hebrews, 4: 12. "Piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit." Adam Clarke gives from Doddridge's collections the following: "The word of God penetrates deeper into a man than any sword; it enters into the soul and spirit; into all our sensations, passions, appetites; nay, to our very thoughts; and sits as judge of the most secret intentions, contrivances, and sentiments of the heart. "Piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit." "When the soul is thus distinguished from the spirit, by the former is meant that inferior faculty by which we think of, and desire, what concerns our present being and welfare. By spirit is meant a superior power, by which we prefer future things to present; by which we are directed to pursue truth and right above all things."

Faculties of the one man are meant, so the Doctors say. See note in Cottage Bible on this text. It is rich. "Dividing asunder," etc., "that is, of things the most intimately and inseparably connected. See our note on 1 Thess. 5: 23. Here we have distinguished the rational soul from the animal; but whether the latter (which is common to brutes), be matter or an inferior kind of spirit, or a middle substance between both, we presume not to decide. Most certain it is, that many animals are intelligent, that they feel, that they recollect, and that they dream; and, therefore, that they think."

Indeed! is it so? and have they immortal souls? Dr. Clarke taught their future existence by a resurrection. See notes on Ps. 104, last part. It may come to be admitted that God can so organize matter as to give it the power of thought, will, etc. This comes pretty near it; it verges fearfully near to cold, base Materialism. See another passage, the words of the Virgin Mary. Luke 1: 46, 47. "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior." Dr. Clarke says, "These words are uncommonly emphatical. They show that Mary's whole soul was filled with the divine influence, and wrapt up in God." Why not say her whole being, all her powers and faculties were so. So with the text at the head of this article. "Sanctify wholly," entirely, "soul, body and spirit," the entire being. No proof in these texts of a superadded entity, called the soul, distinct from "the first man," who "was of the earth earthy," and so material, that was formed of the dust. Paul represents God as saying (Heb. 10: 38:—"Now the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Is the language not equivalent to saying, "I will have no pleasure in him"? This is very plain.

What absurdities men will contend for to save a darling theory. Let us "search the Scriptures." I will close this detail of thoughts for the thoughtful by giving an extract from J. Wesley's Journal, in six vols., printed in 1825. In vol. 5, p. 10, he writes: "Wednesday, 7th. I read and abridged an old treatise on the origin of the soul. I never before saw any thing on the subject so satisfactory. I think he proves to a demonstration that God has enabled man, as all other creatures, to propagate his whole species, consisting of soul and body." C. P. DOW.

THE SUPPLANTER.

Spiritualism proposes to supplant and uproot Christianity, and substitute in its place the worship of demons. Among other questions put to the spirits at the Banner of Light office, in Boston, and their answer, as published in the Banner for April 10th, 1869, is the following:

"QUES.—Is Spiritualism, as a religion, to supplant Christianity?

ANS.—Spiritualism, as a religion, I believe is to supplant Christianity. The era of the Christian religion is passing away, changing. It will lose nothing of its life, nothing of that which the world of mind has need of, but it will part with its dross and become absorbed in the newer and more perfect."

The spirits, through their mediums, are making a most persistent effort to destroy the influence of the Bible and the Christian religion.

We are aware that some of our readers think we magnify the present and coming influence of Spiritualism; but we are sure if they knew all we know about its workings, they would think us quite moderate in what we say about it. The final conflict of principles and doctrines,—truth and error, Christ and Belial,—we are satisfied will be between all of the true followers of Christ, from every denomination, on one side; while their antagonists will comprise the Spiritualists, embracing the great mass of the people, including a host of mere nominal professors of religion on the other side. It will be a conflict—already begun—between the true and the false, light and darkness, God and the Devil. Activity is seen every where in the ranks of Satan, while the most of Christ's professed children appear to be asleep. Is it not time to heed the warning to "watch"? Are not the "perils" sufficient to keep us awake? Christian soldier, gird on thine armor for the conflict. This is a time when every christian should be able to give a Bible reason for his hope; and if he has things in his creed which he can not sustain by a harmonious teaching of the Bible, like the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and the eternal torment of the wicked, let him abandon such views at once; and he will find himself in possession of weapons with which he can withstand all the attacks of the enemy through Spiritualism and all other false systems of religion.

The Bible informs us that "the spirits of devils [demons] working miracles" are to "go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."—Rev. 16: 14. The next event, in connection with this work of demons, when they may seem to be successful in their plans, is the coming of Christ. At the time when the people generally will have given up the idea that Christ is ever coming personally, he says, "Behold I come as a thief."—Rev. 16: 15. Though warned, as in the days of Noah and Lot, the most of the people will have no more expectation of the personal advent of Jesus, than had the antediluvians of the coming flood, or the Sodomites of their destruction when they gathered about the house of Lot, the night before they were destroyed by fire and brimstone.

Again we say, Dear Brn. and Srs., awake, and gird on your armor, and be ready to meet the great foe under all circumstances. Let cowards flee, but let every true child of Jesus be bravely bold for the right, if he stands alone in the conflict. Victory is sure to all true christian soldiers. But lovers of the world, and those who conform to it, and seek its friendship and honers, and chase after its silly, ungodly fashions, must not expect to stand when the hour of trial comes. He who will bow and submit to what is wrong, to secure popularity, is unworthy of eternal life with the pure and the holy, who have denied themselves of "ungodliness and worldly lusts." He who will not bear the cross has no reason to hope for the crown. Said Jesus: "Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, he cannot be my disciple." Luke 14: 27.

THEATRES.

Public amusements in theatres, and elsewhere, are becoming more and more unchristian, disgusting, licentious, and Sodom-like. Those who think the world is growing better, must be asleep or dreaming of some 'summer-land.' The more disgusting these scenes of amusement become to a good, christian taste, the more they are patronized. The New York correspondent of the Buffalo Courier says performances that "would have been stopped by the police three years ago," now attract the largest audiences, on "account of the conduct and gestures" of the girls, who exhibit their persons in a very immodest manner. He remarks:

"It is a most damning proof of the evil times upon which we have fallen. That men, (and, let me whisper, a few women,) can be found in such numbers to gaze upon so naked indecency, and listen to, or sit over against, twaddle so vapid, is a fact which bears such testimony to the moral and intellectual degradation of the American people as should rouse every American man and every American woman, to enter his or her protest by tongue or pen against the avalanche of filth with which we have been and are to be flooded."

MUSIC.—The heading to the music in this week's paper was accidentally omitted. It is called IMANDRA, from the Missouri Harmony. The metre is 11's. The music and hymn were furnished by Bro. P. S. W. Deyo.

PRAYER-MEETINGS.

During the National Christian Convention in New York, last autumn, H. W. Beecher was requested to make some remarks on the best method of conducting prayer-meetings. His remarks were excellent; we never heard better. At the close of the meeting, quite a number gathered around him to ask questions, and get further information on the subject. Bro. D. L. Moody, of Chicago, was the principal questioner. In the Chicago Advance, we find the following report of the conversation:

"Mr. Beecher, what do you do with bores in your prayer-meeting?"

"Well, I try to be patient with them. Christ when he was living was troubled with bores, and I say to myself, Why should I not be? I try to educate them, and make something out of them. The man who is a bore now may become an effective worker if one is only patient."

"Well, but Mr. Beecher"—it was Mr. Moody that interrupted, as one might almost know from the character of the question—"there are some that are confirmed bores, and if you let them go on they will smash a prayer-meeting all to pieces—what do you do with them?"

"I never have and never will allow any one to 'smash,' a prayer meeting. If I cannot bring about a reformation by privately talking to him,—if no other means will answer, I can say to such a man, sit down. But then, there are many ways to be tried first. If I see that a man is apt to talk in set phrase and continually repeat, I interrupt him with a question. A question is an obstruction in his track. He will have to get over it, or go around it, or come to a standstill. I ask him about his own experience in relation to what he is talking about, and in such a conversation there is no chance to be formal. I question the timid ones also. When I see that one that is deserving of aid is halting and stumbling, I can help him with a question. There are a good many that cannot make a speech in prayer meeting that can answer questions."

"Do you make special preparation for a prayer meeting?"

"Yes. That is, I always have a subject in my mind that that I want to present. Sometimes it is adhered to by others, and sometimes it is not. When it is not, I never try to bring it back, but I try to develop the thought that comes out the most prominently. I try to find out as quick as possible the leadings of the Holy Spirit, and then follow them."

"Did you ever have to exercise any authority in prayer meeting of the nature you alluded to?"

"I had one man once that used to trouble me a great deal. He used,"—and here Mr. Beecher impersonated him to the life, "he used to drag his words in the most tediously slow process that you can imagine. One evening he commenced as usual: 'I—hope—that—my—young—friends—will—not—like me—put—off—their consideration—of the interests—of eternity,' and just then I interrupted him, by saying, 'Mr——, if you go on that way much longer, eternity will be here and half through before you finish?'"

"What are your theories for developing those that attend your prayer meeting, and managing men?"

"I have no theories. One is to be developed in one way, and another in another. One man lacks in this and another in that. It must be a minister's constant study to cultivate that which is feeble in men and to prune the overgrowth. As to managing men; I never see a man unless I think, Now, how could I manage this man? I am like an engineer that can never pass a fort without thinking, How could I take that fort?"

It should be remarked that Mr. Beecher has such interesting prayer-meetings, that some seven or eight hundred attend. He has a most thorough knowledge of human nature, which is a great help to him in conducting public meetings. He is also noted for his happy art of illustrating everything in a very clear manner.

TEA.

In the Boston Journal March 27th, are some interesting remarks from "Carleton," in his "Round the World Sketches," No. 13. He visited China, and paid special attention to the manufacture of tea. He say:—

"If those four hundred millions with pig-tails who live on the under side of the globe were to stop cultivating a small shrub which thrives in their country, teapots the world over would be useless lumber in the closet, or thrown out into the ditch as old crockery."

What a blessing it would be to the human family if such an event should take place. What a vast amount of head-aches, tooth-aches, and all-goneness in the stomach, loss of appetite, nervousness, and many other bad feelings, would pass away if no more tea was used; and what an amount of money might be saved for benevolent purposes, if all the tea money was given to the poor, or used to scatter the truth.

"Carleton" goes on to say:—

"The consumption of tea in the United States amounts to more than 30,000,000 pounds per annum, or nearly one pound each for every man, woman and child in the country.

We must state it as a fact that does not commend our good taste, that Americans use an unduly large proportion of green tea. No Chinaman would think of drinking this variety which we so highly prize, for they know that the greenness which gives it such value in our estimation is not a natural condition of the leaf in its dried state, but is obtained by the admixture of foreign substances, and poisonous ones at that. Tumeric and Prussian blue, with other less harmful substances, are used in the preparation of green tea, and quite a lare share of this variety comes into the American market."

When describing the tea shrub, he says:—

"The tea shrub is an evergreen, and may be propagated either by seeds or slips. Though it sometimes attains a growth that would seem to give it a right to be ranked among trees, yet as cultivated by the Chinese it is not often more than seven feet in hight. The root is not unlike that of the peach, and the plant is very tenacious of life. It blossoms in the winter, giving out a flower somewhat like the wild rose, and the seed, when ripe, contains considerable oleaginous matter, and a commodity called 'tea oil' is extracted from them.

It bears leaves in great profusion, and for these it is chiefly valuable. These go to the ends of the earth, making all nations pay tribute to the Celestials. The shrub is hardy and thrives well on poor, gravelly soil. It is very desirable to have a southern aspect, since plenty of sunshine not only promotes the thrift of the plant but greatly improves the quality of the leaves.

When grown from the seeds the plants are ready for setting in a little more than a year from the time of planting, and in two or three years more the leaves are first plucked. The finest teas are those gathered from young stocks. As the shrub grows older the quality is not good. At about seven years the tree is usually replaced by new settings, or if it is still cultivated is cut back or "headed in" as willow trees are sometimes treated in America, the branches being cut away and only the stumps left. On the following year a new and more leafy set of branches will shoot out, and the old tree, thus rejuvenated, will live as it were, a second life, and yield successive crops. The leaves are gathered three times a year. They are picked by hand—labor is cheap in China—and one man will gather from five to twenty pounds per day, according to circumstances."

"Carleton" informs us that after the Chinese have used their tea, and got out most of the strength, they throw the "grounds" into jars, after which it is "taken out doors, spread on cloths, dried, doctored, repacked, and sent over to us." The average cost of teas in China is from fifteen to twenty cents a pound.

POLITICAL CORRUPTION.

We think but few of our readers are aware of the amount of "political corruption" practiced in the American government; which, it is claimed, is the model for the whole world.

The following from one of our exchanges, will give some idea of what is going on in high places:—

"Are our politics corrupt? It has so been decided. They are abominably corrupt, stinking in the nostrils. None, we believe, not even the participants in the dirty work, lay any claim to honesty or decency in our American politics. Occasionally, frequently, the rogues fall out, and in their haste and wrath, 'blow' on each other. And when the cup of filth runs so full as to overflow, honest portions of the political press make a clean sweep, and tell what they would at other times not dare do. For instance, a few days ago, the Chicago Tribune the most popular Republican organ in the West, thus pitches into our politics and politicians:

'From primary meetings to national elections is an unbroken chain of bargains, of buying votes, and selling of legislatures. Laws are made not the public welfare, but to subserve private interests and are bought by the purchase of members of legislatures at so much a head in money or office. Office is sought and accepted, whether legislative or executive—not with any purpose of faithfully discharging its duties at a fixed emolument, but for what can be made out of it by wholesale theft or plundering the public. Never before in this country has there been such destitution of public morality, or any such well-grounded reason for fearing that we may not be able to get back to a healthy state without serious convulsions.'

And as to Washington city and the characters who there most do congregate, let the following few items clipped from the correspondence of our leading papers serve to describe:

Senator Saulsbury has broken his leg. Well, that will keep the drunken democrat out of the Senate for a while. So the country will be the gainer. Prostitutes mingle with the wives and daughters of members on the floor of the House of Congress.—Cor. N. Y. Times.

The reception-room of the Senate—an elegantly furnished apartment—is 'notoriously the greatest assignation place in Washington.' —Cor. Chicago Republican.

Every afternoon, after three o'clock, some twelve or fifteen United States Senators are so drunk that they are unable to attend to business.—Boston Commonwealth.

Almost daily are similar paragraphs to be found in the columns of the daily press, and they are true."

THE UNQUENCHABLE FIRE.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to make an inquiry in the columns of "our paper" concerning the Greek words, found in the 9th chap. of Mark, 43d and 45th verses, where are two words of the same import. The passage in the connection has reference to the final end of the wicked. The pur asbeston, as I understand it, has reference to the fire that is to consume the object and to complete total destruction; if so, how does Bro. L. claim that it means forever burning, and never consuming? How does he claim it as an irrefutable argument in favor of everlasting conscious misery?

D. N. CHADSEY.

We can not tell how Bro. L. or any one else, can see proof that an unquenchable [pur to asbeston] fire will not burn at all; and hence the wicked who are to be burnt "up" (Matt. 3: 12) by this fire will live eternally in it, and never be burnt in the least. We confess that we have no skill in solving such metaphysical problems.

The temple at Jerusalem was burnt with an unquenchable fire. Jer. 17: 27. The fact that the fire is unquenchable is positive proof that the wicked must of necessity be burnt up, and "be no more."

DIARY PAGES.

Have been to-day to help build the chimney of our new school-house; and a curious way they have here for such a piece of work. It is built like the house, only with smaller logs, and framed in from the outside, till the fire-place is completed, and then turn up with smaller sticks. A kind of reddish clay is found anywhere beneath the soil, of which we made our mortar, and we would "tote" it to black Calvin, the mason, who with his hands would plaster the inside as fast as some half dozen of us could tend him. The colored boys would "tote" it on their heads, but I preferred to take mine on a spade. Now we will have a house that we can turn around in, if fifty scholars do come. I guess I have helped build the first plantation school-house in S. C., if not in all the South.

To-day I have been to attend to a burial service for an old white woman. Walking out three miles, I found in a shattered cabin, stretched upon its only door, which they had taken off for a table, the one who for eighty-eight years had battled with misfortune, along life's roughest pathway. Death came to her suddenly, and easily, as if the poor soul had seen already enough of hardship. She was laid in her coffin, and we bore her away some fifty rods, followed afar off by a grand-daughter (an only relative), and a few others, both white and colored, who came not like mourners, but as a drove of sheep. They gathered around, and we waited until the grave was dug, and the coffin lowered to its resting-place; when I read a hymn, and some in the Bible, and then invoked God's blessing for those who stood around, asking him to remember them in their ignorance, to pity them in their poverty, and to make them thoughtful and ready for the same event, which might come to some of them at any time. I noticed, as I opened my eyes upon the little group, their indifference was gone, and I saw tears starting from poverty-burthened eyes. I felt glad that one among them could be blessed with christian burial. I knew by their looks the ceremony was something unusual, and was told that it was. Our service was offered, or it had not been. Poor old lady, she came a few weeks ago to the Mission House for bread, and perhaps since then may have suffered again. "Heaps of these old people are obliged to die," said a colored man, whom I overtook on my way down, "because they are gone past helping themselves." "There," said the colored man who buried her, as he lifted her into the grave, "she has gone to get her best part, if she was only right for it." And so let her rest, and wait. The Lord will do right by all.

A little new business for me to-day, this cutting and making pants; but then 'tis a splendid fit I've got. I measured the boy on my cane, when he came to beg, and taking an old pair of men's pants (as my mother used to do for me), I have made him a nice good pair. Then I pulled him out of his rags, and taking a little West Poland shirt, I made him look as tidy as "Tom Thumb"; and then his brother I dressed up clean, and sent them along, telling them I guessed their mother would hardly know them. More anon, perhaps. J. ALBERT LIBBY.

WHAT A COMFORT IS JESUS.

What a comfort to the heart do we find in Jesus. How often is this exemplified in every christian's life. When the dark and gloomy clouds of sorrow overshadow the human heart, what immediate and untold comfort, peace, and light, are obtained in flying to the mediatorial throne of Jesus. There he binds up the wounded heart, and, by the outpouring of the spiritual Comforter, he wipes all tears away. O blessed and inestimable privilege.

What a comfort Jesus was to the world while wandering here. He fed the hungry multitudes, who followed him, by working miracles. The sick were healed, the lame made to walk, the dead raised, words of life preached to the poor, and he mingled his tears with those who wept. Peace, love and light were dispensed in majestic splendor around his pathway.

What a comfort he is to sinners. His ear is turned anxiously to hear the first feeble cry for mercy, that he may whisper the comforting words of pardon into their hearts. By night and by day he pleads with the wandering to return to Father's house, where "there is enough and to spare." The flowing fountain of life runs free to all; and with inexhaustible love Jesus entreats them to "come," and wash their guilty stains away. He will clothe them in royal robes of righteousness, give to each an immortal crown of glory to wear, and bring them into eternal association with God and the heavenly hosts.

"Oh that the world might taste and see
The riches of his grace;
The arm of love that compasses me,
Would all mankind embrace."

What a comfort he was to his disciples during his forty days sojourn with them after his resurrection from the dead. Their hearts often burned with joy as he unfolded glorious visions of the kingdom to come. And at last, when by shining angels he was borne to the courts of heaven, he would not leave them comfortless, but dispatched heavenly messengers to cheer their hearts with the glad news that "this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." O blessed promise. How it has cheered the hearts of all his saints down the whole course of time. Jesus will come again. Those who have longed and prayed his glorious face to behold, will see him in all his royal majesty, and that very soon.

"Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

Through eighteen hundred years he has comforted the church by his spiritual presence; yet throughout an eternity of blessedness in his kingdom, he will comfort his people by his literal presence. Oh, sublime thought, that he shall "lead us unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe all tears away." Then shall we begin to realize "the eternal weight of glory" that God has in store for those that love him.

"There shall I bathe my weary soul
In seas of heavenly rest;
And not a wave of trouble roll
Across my peaceful breast."

ROCHESTER.

Months had rolled away since Eliza and Clara Lord had given their hearts to God. The heavy gold rings which had shone upon their fingers were removed, and with joyous hearts and cheerful hands were given up, to be converted or changed for the golden promises in the word of life. Time rolled on. Clara married and moved to Rochester. Eliza came and attended school, and they were still joyous in each other's love. City life had its influence. She felt an indifference to worship coming over her, and often said, "Bro. Pratt, I want to be a christian." Friday evening, the 12th of March, she requested prayers. A few days after, at three o'clock in the morning, I was called to go to her sick bed. I said, Eliza, you are sick. "Yes, and I wanted to see you. My teachers and the scholars were all against me in my religious views, and I have yielded to their influence, and laid down my watch; do you think I shall get well?"

Eliza, I don't want to talk about that, said I. Do you feel that Jesus loves you, and that you love him?

"Bro. Pratt, I have not been as faithful as I ought, but I shall do better if I get well."

But you must not wait till you get well. Come right to him now. We talked, we prayed, and ere we left she could say, "Lord, thy will be done."

Again we sat by her bedside. Her godly mother was there. She said, "Mother, you told me something dreadful would come upon me if I was not more faithful in the service of God; and now it has come."

She then desired a dear schoolmate to come to the bed, and summoning all her strength, she placed her death-like arms around her neck, saying in a strong, full voice, "Clara, I love you. Clara, I love you dearly Clara, I want you to meet me in the kingdom."

The sobs and sighs of Clara told that the words had reached the heart. "Will you, Clara, will you? promise me," said the dying Eliza. Clara's heart was too full for utterance. "Tell me," she cried again in the earnestness of a dying conflict, "will you meet me in the kingdom, Clara?"

"Yes, yes, dear Eliza," cried the heart-broken innocent; "I'll meet you there."

The pale arms relaxed, she sank back upon her pillows all exhausted. A heavenly calm lit up her features, and in a soft, sweet accent she said, "Jesus accepts me now, Jesus accepts me now." The conflict was ended, and like the sobbing infant upon a mother's breast, she sweetly slept in Christ. H. PRATT.

GRATEFUL NOTES.

I seldom "cackle." A hen that never gets off or on her roost without "cackling" is certainly an annoyance, and to such an one it might be wisely said, "Give us more eggs and less cackle." Eggs are wholesome and valuable, and a "cackle" to acknowledge their deposit is very grateful to a farmer's family; so a word acknowledging the blessing and mercy of God is grateful to the children of the Most High.

I have just returned home from a tour of five weeks into Vermont, during which the blessings of God have been so rich, I must briefly confess them. On my way, an evening was spent pleasantly at Bro. Jennings, in Wilsonville, Ct., where quite a number gathered to worship God. Two evenings at So. Ashburnham, Mass.; the most precious I ever enjoyed with that church. Sabbath, Feb. 21st, at Keene, N. H., trying to "strengthen the things that remain." Tuesday, Feb. 23d, we reached Dinsmore Hill, Vt., in a snow-storm. Here, in spite of driving snow and blustering cold, we held two meetings, and the peace of God was upon us.

Thursday, 25th, we reached Bridgewater, Vt. The divine blessing rested upon the first meeting. The snow was deep, and came still deeper every day with driving fury, till it seemed impossible almost for a team to venture out; yet such was the interest that each night the house was well occupied by attentive hearers; and Sabbath evening three came forward for prayers. It was hard to leave such a prospect for good, but duty called to another appointment.

West Fairlee, Vt. This is one of the neatest of Vermont villages, beautifully located in a quiet valley, among hills, of which this State is proud. It is the home of Lieut. Governor Gen. Thomas. The only church of which it can boast is Universalist. Until recently, I was informed, only two praying souls were known in the village. Yet, in morals, it is by no means worse than other villages. We were cheerfully granted the use of the Universalist house. The interest to hear the truth of God increased every evening, till the house was filled. If we may judge from expressions which reached my heart, the cloud of blessing was just ready to burst when our week of happy labor closed. To say the least, much prejudice was removed, convictions of truth left not soon to be lost, and the study of the Bible greatly promoted. I learn that a weekly prayer-meeting is now well sustained, and that two have come out since I left. They call loudly for a renewal of the meetings.

Pomfret, Vt. March 9th and 10th were spent with this church. Brethren came from Bridgewater and Dinsmore Hill. Shall I ever forget the sweetness of these two days?

North Springfield, Vt. Having only two evening appointments for this place, I had resolved to abandon them, and return to the interest in Bridgewater. But God would not have it so. He troubled me until I was willing to go. After a hard ride of thirty-five miles, over soft snow drifts, I reached the place about dark; found no one expecting me, as my way had been hedged up from them several times before. There was no appointment out, no fire in the chapel; Bro. Cook and family were gone; and all others were strangers. I was tried. What did all this mean? Went into the Baptist (close communion) prayer-meeting. They asked me to preach. They had no pastor, no preacher; I tried to do so, and God blessed again. The next evening, our chapel was packed full,—Methodists, Baptists, Herald Adventists, and Crisis Adventists,—all sorts. The blessing settled; eight or ten came forward for prayers. The chapel getting too strait for us, the Baptist deacon kindly asked us to occupy their house. Sabbath, March 14th, we entered the Baptist church, and that evening about twenty-five came forward for prayers. We could not get away. Instead of two evenings, we stayed twelve days, the interest increasing all the while, and from twenty-five to forty forward for prayers every night. The appeals of children to parents, and of parents to children, were truly affecting. Such love and unity; such complete letting down of sectarian bars, I never saw before. I was free to preach as God bade me. I shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God. Every feature of Bible truth was presented boldly and freely in love, and received in love, and no check given to the revival power, but rather strength. The two Advent churches felt no more like being twain, but one body. Wrongs were confessed, and forgiveness granted. May God bless them, and cement the bond. We formed a young people's prayer-meeting of about forty members. Some of these young converts were born of God in the old-fashioned way—with a mouth of praise. May they never become silent in the love and worship of God.

Having preached forty-five discourses in thirty-five days, beside conducting afternoon prayer-meetings, duty bade me rest awhile. I found a true yokefellow and an efficient helper in Eld. Chedle (Adventist) of No. Springfield. We were also cheered both Sabbaths by the presence of Bro. Salmon Cook, whose faithful ministry has done much for the church in this place. We regretted that the distance of his new home, in Andover, denied us the benefit of his constant attendance.

March 23d, we took an early train for home, where we found all kept in health and blessing, by the mercy of God. The joy of this tour I know, and hereby gratefully acknowledge. The fruits unto eternal life the kingdom of Christ alone can tell.

PILGRIM DOTTINGS.

Since it is always interesting to me to read of the state of religious prosperity, and the progress of the truth, I expect it is so with others who feel a true interest in Christ. I therefore pen a short sketch of such matters for the Crisis. During January, I visited Augusta, Me., and spent two days visiting several families, who wait the return of our blessed Lord. The society, which, a few years ago, was an active body of workers, is now broken down by perverse elements, and united effort has given place to discouragement and slumber. May the Lord arouse the few faithful ones to see and feel their obligation to do all they can for perishing souls, and give them help Visited Webster, and preached once in company with Bro. Walker, to an interested audience. The Lord has lately converted a number among them, and opened the eyes of several christians to see the glorious truths we preach, and set them to work in earnest. Visited Bowdoin. There the Lord has lately converted several and awakened quite an interest to hear the glorious truth of Jesus coming, to give immortality to his church. The truth has taken root and is progressing in these towns, under the labors of Elders H. D. Reed, and A. H. Walker.

Visited Bath, and preached one Sabbath. The flock is increasing steadily amid trials and apostasies. This is a working, faithful church. Attended our annual ministerial conference at Richmond. It was a good and interesting meeting in many respects. It was pleasant to see so many faithful ministers of the cross, who have stood up in defence of the last message of the gospel, amidst all the privations, trials, and persecutions of these times, and determined to go through by the Lord's help. It was interesting to hear the reports of the conversion of many in the various parts of the State; the progress of the truth, the awakening of many of other churches to a deep interest to occupy a watching and waiting position for the return of our dear Redeemer; yet our hearts were saddened by trials and want of union on measures and systematic work. But our hearts rejoice in the Lord for what he has done for us in Maine, even in this matter, in approximating so rapidly toward perfect union. There has been a great improvement in twenty years. Praise the Lord.

Feb. Visited Topsham. There are a few humble veterans of the cross, and with them a few younger believers, who are striving to overcome the opposition of sectarian bigotry, and the temptations surrounding them. They need prompt and decided action to build up a fortification that shall deter the enemy. Visited several families in Litchfield, where I was kindly cared for through the greatest snow storm of the winter. They love and cherish the "blessed hope" of Jesus' soon return, but have no regular meetings. Some interest has recently been awakened by the occasional labors of Bro. Walker, and several reclaimed and others converted. Visited Stark. I found much difficulty in getting there through the deep snow. Preached and visited one week. There are a few of the faithful, self-denying, self-sacrificing ones, who wait for the Lord. Our meetings were good; and those who attended enjoyed "the word." The mass are given up to politics, sings, levees, sociables and other pleasures, such as lead souls to perdition. Called on several families in New Sharon, Wilton, and Jay. Found them in "the faith," and enjoying the hope. These are inviting fields for a faithful minister. May the Lord direct some one into that region with the word.

Called on Bro. H. B. Seavy, who had just returned from Woodstock, and Peru with a good report. He left a blessed revival interest. Souls had been converted, and the mass stirred. Praise the Lord By invitation, I accompanied him to Belgrade to hold a protracted meeting. A few waiting ones reside there but have no regular meetings. The people came out well to hear, and the prospect was bright; but Bro. S. and myself were so afflicted with influenza, we closed our batteries and raised the seige, hoping the Lord will bless the effort we made the three days we worked.

March. Attended our quarterly meeting in So. Gardiner, which was a precious season in the Lord; then to No. Whitefield, and preached to a few who had gathered for their weekly evening meeting. Spent one evening and preached in Windsor, where I found a protracted effort and revival interest. Brn. Rines and Weeks were laboring to good effect. Several had been converted. Next visited Winthrop, and Monmouth, where I found the few believers looking for redemption soon. Next to Greene, with the Brn. Parker. Met Bro. Haggett, and with him preached and visited several days, sowing good seed. At Auburn one eve with the Baptists. Had a good hearing. Next at Lisbon, preached one Sabbath with signs of good. Found ears to hear. I. C. WELLCOME.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I would say to my friends, and the friends of our blessed cause, that I propose to publish on the first of July next, the initial number of a new periodical, to be called The Advent-Christian Quarterly; to be issued thereafter on the first of each October, January, April, and July. It is designed to fill a vacancy in our literature too long unoccupied; and I anticipate for it a hearty welcome. We hope to make it just what the Advent-Christian body would desire in such a periodical.

Each number will contain eighty large octavo pages; though if sufficient encouragement is given, the number of pages will be increased to one hundred. The subscription price will be one dollar a volume of four numbers.

We hope for the hearty co-operation of all workers in and friends of our blessed cause, to make this important enterprise a success from the start. Further particulars hereafter.

Meanwhile, communications with words of sympathy, advice, subscriptions, or other aid, will be welcomed, and may be addressed to

SHALL WE HAVE A CAMPMEETING IN MINNESOTA THIS YEAR?

The church in Ottawa to the churches and brethren of Minnesota—Greeting:

DEAR BRETHREN:—Grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied unto you. Our hearts have rejoiced as we have learned the progress which the truth has made in different parts of the State; and for the furtherance of this work we propose that a General Campmeeting be held in connection with the annual conference, to convene in this place in June next, at which time all interested be invited to meet with us in convention, and adopt such measures as shall more effectually unite and concentrate all our forces, for the spreading of light among the people concerning the speedy coming of our Savior, and kindred Bible truths.

A pleasant grove on the bank of the Minnesota river can be obtained in this place, with plenty of good water, and near the railroad, on which we think a reduction of fare can be secured for those attending the meeting. Arrangements can also be made to secure board on the camp-ground at reasonable rates, and provisions for those who may chose to board themselves. We are confident that all the necessities of a well regulated campmeeting can be met here, and as soon as the meeting shall be determined upon, we will arrange the ground. Will not our preaching brethren throughout the State take this matter in hand, and present its importance to the people, and also the necessity of an early preparation of tents by those intending to come? Will Brn. Reed and Bursell bring their tents? and shall we not hear, in a few words through the Voice and Crisis immediately, from those who are favorable to this proposition? In behalf of the church. J. J. ANDROSS, Clerk.

"THE FIRST-DAY SABBATH."

The above is the title of a valuable book from the pen of Eld. T. M. Preble. This work has not received the notice and patronage it deserves. While "Both Sides," by Urial Smith, "History of the Sabbath," by J. N. Andrews, "Testimony," by E. G. White, and various other works teaching that is duty to observe the "Seventh-day" as "the Sabbath," have been, and are being extensively circulated among our people, very many have been misled and deeply impressed by their erroneous statements and claims, and have asked, "Are these facts? If not, why are they not refuted by our writers?" And while they have not seen this fully done, have often concluded the subject was dark, and difficult to determine, and have tried to dismiss it from the mind as of little importance. But the subject is neither dark nor difficult, only as it has been loaded down and burdened by the great blunders, erroneous claims, badly quoted history, and misapplications of Scripture, in the works above mentioned.

Its chief points have been refuted in several tracts; but books containing hundreds of assertions without foundation, partial and erroneous quotations of history and scripture, can not be noticed and properly met in a tract. Eld. Preble has undertaken it in a larger form, and in the second part of his book, has given time and space for masterly arguments and incontrovertable testimony from history,—history not garbled—which shows that the above named works are totally unreliable, and in many points untruthful. Although we do not endorse Bro. P.'s use of the word "Sabbath," yet we can heartily commend his book as the best and most reliable work to be found, touching the whole subject of the "Seventh day" arrangements. It is a subject which should be well understood.

I. C. WELLCOME.

NEW YORK STATE MISSION TENT.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just returned home from Pittsburg, Pa.; found letters of invitation to hold Tent meetings this season; and now I want to urge upon the brethren of the State, to see to it that the Tent is paid for at once. You have doubtless seen the action of the Conference held at Springwater; a collection was taken up for this purpose. This was right; let every church throughout the State do likewise, and send the amount to Bro. D. Cogswell, Dansville, N. Y., and then no one will be burdened; and if there should be more than enough to pay for the Tent and repairs, let the same be invested in books and tracts.

Now, my brother, do not allow the spirit of covetousness to control you, by saying to yourself, "The money will be raised without my help. Those who pay can afford it." But can you? Remember that "covetousness is idolatry," and is named the first in the catalogue of the many sins that prevail in the last day. J. WENDELL.

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. Tandy.

To the Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad: Dear friends in Christ, it is a long time since I have written anything for the Crisis; not because I did not want to, nor because I did not feel it my duty or privilege; but because I had not time to do so; or my time was occupied, as I supposed, in other necessary duties. And that is not all; I felt that the columns of the blessed Crisis were weekly filled with far better matter than anything I could produce from my pen. So I have been trying to excuse myself on these grounds. But my conscience is not still or quiet. Duty is duty; and no one can do my duty for me; not even God or angels. If God says speak, we ought to speak. If he says to us pray, we ought to pray. If he says to any of us preach, male or female, we ought to obey him. If he says to you or me write, we should try to perform the duty according to the ability he has given us. None, who has named the name of Christ, has less than one talent; and we are just as accountable for the faithful improvement of that one talent, as though we had five, or ten talents; why not? The word of the Lord informs us, that it is required of a man according to what he hath.—Where little is given, little is required; and where much is given, much is required. We believe it is especially incumbent, or binding, upon us to give the "gospel of the kingdom" to the world; from the solemn fact that no others will do it. In fact, they have no heart or mind to do it. We believe this has been faithfully done already; and this is one great, primary evidence that makes us believe, without a doubt, that the end is near.

And now, dear brethren and sisters, as we profess to take the "perfect law of liberty" as our unerring guide, how holily and unblamably we ought to live. Yes, we should let our light shine before the world, that they seeing our good works, may be lead to glorify God. Father requires that we come out, and keep out, from the world; and touch not the unclean thing. The apostle James informs us that "Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father, is this; to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself UNSPOTTED from the world." Are we doing this, as God requires of us? May the Lord help us to come up to his help against the mighty. The world, the flesh, and the devil are allied enemies to the christian; and they will prove fatal snares to us, unless we do reject them by faith, and humble, believing prayer. May God help his ministers to "study to show" themselves "approved unto God;" workmen that "needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." And may the God of peace sanctify you wholly, body, soul and spirit. May you be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Yours, in the faith of his SOON coming, P. TANDY.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. L. BOUTELL, Chelsea, April 7th, writes: "Saturday last, I took the boat for the Elm City, to answer the call of Bro. York to be with the church looking for the advent of their long absent Lord. I had a cordial reception in the morning, and a little time to rest before meeting. At the ringing of the bells, we went to their old hall, on Congress Street, which was well filled with old friends and familiar faces, with new accessions, whose attention to the word spoken gave the best evidence of their relish for the living bread; and in others a strong desire to hear upon the way of life and salvation.

In the afternoon more were out. The large hall was well filled, and all seemed interested to hear that there was a better day soon coming. Tears of joy and heartfelt rejoicing told plainly that we were preaching to those that were lovers of the Lord and his glorious appearing. The evening meeting was well attended, and it was a precious one. The Lord, by his Spirit, was present. Indications for good were manifest, and I could but hope, amid all their trials, perils, and discouragements, truth and righteousness might prevail, and a revival of pure religion be experienced, and the people flock to the standard, and be loyal to the government of King Jesus. O how important to be in love and favor of the government that is soon to be established over the whole earth, and stand forever. Thine for this peaceable, healthful, deathless reign."

BRO. GEO. STREETER, North Dana, Mass., writes: "I have just attended a discussion between Bro. J. Hemenway and Mr. Gibson Smith, of Groton. It was an interesting one. Mr. Smith was understood to say that he had held a discussion with you, and that you said he was the best man for perverting Scripture you ever saw. I think so too. In describing the inner man, he said that it filled the material body, and had hands, fingers and nails, feet, toes and nails, looked like the material body; and this is an immaterial body and an immortal soul. He said death does not change the natural mind; hence, if a man dies, and is a rough, coarse, vile creature, he will be so in the spirit-land. What a place that must be. He came out boldly and denied the Bible, and then wished his friend H. believed as much of it as he did. He said that Jesus Christ was no more the Son of God than we were. We were all the sons of God. This scouring up of the good old book, only makes it look brighter and brighter. I love it, I love it, and who shall dare to chide me for loving the good old Bible?

Bro. H. sustained his ground well, by the help of God; and the truth did look bright, when held up by the side of error. Many were convinced of the truth. 'Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith.' 2 Tim. 3: 8. If the class of men called 'Spiritists' do not fill this picture, pray tell me what does? Are they not deceived concerning the faith of God's book? I am sure they are creeping into almost every house. Many who will say they do not believe it, dare not stand up against this hideous monster, but cry out, Keep still, let them alone. Shall we let alone the very thing that is sapping the vitality of the Christian religion? Never, no, never. I feel as Bro. Paul said once, 'I am set for the defense of the gospel'; then, by the help of the good Lord, I will defend this noble cause; and God calls upon every one that names his name thus to do. O for living, active faith in his word. The apostle adds further (verse 9th), 'But they shall proceed no further; for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was.'

'But they shall proceed no further.' Further than what? To the end. How long did they withstand Moses? Until God wrought a mighty deliverance of his people. How was their folly manifested unto all men? God destroyed them all."

BRO. P. H. LAWRENCE, Lawrenceville, P. Q., Canada, March 20th, writes:—"I cannot lose sight of the storms through which some of us have passed, in our endeavors to advance the glorious cause of our Redeemer. The tide has been stemmed in afflictions oft, in perils by sea and upon land, and among our own countrymen. Also the privations of the poor preachers' families, while from valley to hill-top we have wended our lonesome way, in seeking to help some poor human beings to become the sons of God by faith in Christ Jesus. O brethren, this know ye, there is a heart away up here in Canada, that has not only heard of these things, but by experience has tasted some of the bitter dregs of this cup. Yet, to poor me, God has been very good, and how precious to-day is the love of Jesus my Lord. While I look over the many names of our dear brothers who now rest from their labors, I can but bless God for their respite; but oh, the pangs of those smitten hearts of widows, and wails of orphans' woes. My heart is full, and I am consoled only in the assurance that these things will soon end in the everlasting triumph of the faithful.

How the great truths, we love so well, have spread and are now spreading. Some of the most eminent men of the age, in all parts of the world, are proclaiming the glad tidings that Jesus is soon coming to set up his kingdom upon the earth. We stand upon an elevation of solid rock, from whose summits we look down, not upon here and there a solitary camp-fire of a lonely stranger, but the mighty hosts of the Lord, dwelling in cities, and towns, and country, and a great army passing hither and thither, bearing the precious seed; while from the Eastern Archipelago is heard, 'Watchman, what of the night?' and the response from the western isles of the great Pacific, and its coasts,—'The morning cometh!' is wafted upon our ears in tones of solemn joy. Let us all cheer up, for soon the day will dawn, and the shadows flee away."

BRO. A. DAMON, Fall River, Mass., writes: "It has been mentioned of late, in a neighboring paper, that I do not preach doctrines which are in accordance with popular opinion. To such I am compelled to say, that if they call the theology of men, which is commonly preached from the pulpit at the present day, the 'popular opinions' referred to, that they may as well despair of there ever being any change in me in that direction; for the good old hope of the gospel has got too deep a root in my heart to be given up at this late hour, for an old rotten ship at sea, which has nothing for its sails but popular opinions; whose pilot has become drunken with the love of pleasures, and takes on board Spiritualism among its passengers.

Who, that has a sound mind, wishes to ride in such a craft, upon the sea of time, only to be dashed at last upon the rock of ruin? Who, for a little worldly honor and a great name, dares risk his eternal welfare on such a frail bark? Our ship is sound, sails all hoisted, and under full sail. Her flag is fluttering in the breeze. The ship is known by its banner, for on it is inscribed, in glowing letters, 'Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be.' Rev. 22: 12. Praise the Lord God of Israel, we stand on the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Christ himself being the chief cornerstone. O what a fortress, what a battery! It has no mask, it needs none. It recommends itself as being safe for all to use in time of battle; so let us not be ashamed of our hope. O glory to God, let earth rejoice and receive her king. Let the mountains quake before him, and the islands flee at his presence, when he shall come down the burning pathway of heaven to fill the earth with his glory. O, ye weak ones of his flock, be strong, for behold your King cometh. And you, sinner, flee from the wrath to come. O haste thee, and seek for the unfading crown of glory. It is by declaring such sentiments as these that I seek for honor, but not the honor of this world.

Brethren, I am still in the war, fighting for our King, using the weapons which he has provided for that purpose. But after I have done the will of my Master, I find that I am an unprofitable servant. O Lord, keep me ever in the way of life, is my prayer. Amen.

I would say, for the benefit of those who would like to know my address, that it will be Fall River, Mass., until further notice."

BRO. P. M. BAKER, Clarke's Mills, March 22d, writes:—"I take this opportunity to say that the good Lord has revived his work among the Narragansett tribe of Indians, in Charlestown, R. I. A good work of grace has been in progress in their tribe church for some time past. Some twenty or more have been converted and reclaimed from a backsliding state. They have had but little labor from the ministry. They are an intelligent people. I am preaching for them Sabbaths, and have baptized twelve happy converts. Fourteen have been added to the church, and others will unite soon. Five of those I baptized were members of our Sunday school last summer, at Clarke's Hall, Richmond, R. I. Four were from one family. We bless God that the work still goes on. Meetings are held every evening. There is a thorough reformation. I hope our ministering brethren who come this way will not forget to give them a call, and preach the word to them. Call at their homes. They will find a very hearty reception. The latch-string to their homes is always on the outside. Brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified, even as it is with you."

BRO. WM. HOLSINGER, Emporia, Kansas, March 25th, writes:—"I want the Crisis, it helps me so much to understand the great apostasy with which I am surrounded. Dear Crisis, do keep your readers posted in the dreadful deceptions of modern Spiritualism, and also in the affairs of the nations of the earth, and their changes as they are developing for the great battle of Gog and Magog. We are in the very last times of this world's history. We are certainly far advanced in 'the time of the end,' hence we should 'cry aloud,' and also rejoice with exceeding joy. We may have to wait a little longer than some anticipate, yet we know that at the time appointed, he will come."

BRO. N. E. SYMONDS, Lowell, Mass., writes: "I wish to write a few lines for your worthy paper. 'Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage.'—Matt. 22: 9. While reading the above, I have been thinking it is a great thing to be called by God to preach the gospel. Many do not realize how much our brethren in the ministry have to contend with. I feel as though we ought to do more for them, especially our younger ones. They need to be cheered and sustained both by our prayers and alms."

BRO. B. KNEPPER, Wellersburg, Pa., writes: "The doctrine of life and death, as the reward of the righteous and the wicked, and with it the time doctrine of the Bible, is gaining ground almost daily in my charge; although opposed by some few of the Lutherans and Methodists."

For the World's Crisis.

THE GREAT SHAKING.

We are certainly admonished by the very frequent tremblings of this terrestrial ball, that the great shaking, spoken of by the holy men of God, is not far distant. Yes, all things that can be shaken, will be shaken; "that those things that cannot be shaken may remain."—Heb. 12: 27. All the kingdoms of this world, with all their pride and pomp, will be carried away "like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors." "Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitants of the earth. . . . And it shall come to pass, that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare; for the windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake."—Isa. 24: 17, 18. Many other portions of Scripture bring to view the same grand subject. Job 38: 13, says the wicked shall be shaken out of the earth. That awful day is very near, and the great question to all minds, at that time, will be, how shall I escape? but there will be no way of escape for those who had not chosen the Lord for their hiding place. Some are convinced of these solemn truths, and who, like the devils, believe and tremble, but are not willing to submit to be governed in all things by the word of the Lord; so they go on, and neglect the great salvation.

How is it with you, dear friends, who have felt alarmed for your safety, and profess to love the Lord? What seems to be the most important, your own pleasure, or the glory of God? Who knows that you have chosen the Savior for your friend, and that you believe that he is soon coming to judgment? If you are the true children of God, all your former friends, who hate this doctrine, will despise and persecute you; for thus have all christians been treated ever since Cain slew his brother, because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous. 1 John 3: 12. Peter tells us not to think strange of these fiery trials; but we are to look beyond to the glory that shall be revealed.—1 Pet. 4: 12, 13.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

MADRID, April 6. The Government has granted permission for the introduction into Spain of Protestant books printed in foreign languages.

Fears are entertained that the Carlists will soon make another general rising. The government is taking every precaution to prevent it.

It is reported that King Ferdinand of Portugal positively declines the crown of Spain.

April 9. Much political excitement exists in this city, and apprehensions are entertained that the exasperation of party feeling will result in an outbreak of violence. The police and military are taking every precaution to prevent disorder.

The Madrid Government is about to send a Naval Commission to New York to purchase monitors or service in Cuban waters.

The proposition to establish a triumvirate has been abandoned. It met with many practical objections, the most formidable of which was that any immediate change in the form of the administration would tend to delay the settlement of the financial difficulties of the country.

The refusal of King Ferdinand of Portugal to accept the Spanish throne is confirmed.

DOMESTIC.

Havana, April 9. Francisco Leon and Augustin Medina were garroted to-day in the presence of a vast crowd of Spectators. They both maintained their composure and firmness to the last. Leon, in mounting the scaffold, shouted "Viva Independencia." There was great excitement among the spectators. Some parties uttered seditious cries, and the volunteers who guarded the scaffold, faced about and fired about twenty shots into the crowd with disastrous effect. Six men were killed and many wounded.

Passing Events.

☞ The Princess De La Tour D'Auvergne, a member of one of the four princely families of France, has bought the Mount of Olives, which so many crusaders died to gain for Christendom. The Princess is erecting at Jerusalem a campo santo, or cemetery, to be called the "Pater-Noster." All around the walls of this cemetery, Our Lord's Prayer will be inscribed in letters fifteen centimeters long, on plates of bronze and in all known languages. The Princess has also given a sum of money to maintain a priest for the special service of this sanctuary, which will be completed in May, and taken possession of at that time by the French Consul in the name of France.

☞ The forthcoming Council at Rome is to be called, it seems, the "First Council of the Vatican," and is to be held in the right transept of St. Peter's. The stalls, etc., will cost some £10,000, and for this and the other large expenses to be incurred, subscriptions are collecting. It is thought six months will scarcely give the Council time enough in which to do its work.

☞ The colonies of Victoria and New South Wales are both suffering terribly from the want of rain. The drouth is universal. From Melbourne in the south to Queensland in the north sheep are perishing by thousands from want of water. On one "run" 30,000 have been lost in this way. Horses are offered at eight and ten shillings each, and sheep can find no purchasers at seven pence a head.

☞ Severe weather prevails in the south of Europe. Hail storms and cold winds have destroyed the almond crop of Provence, injured the grape crop of Languedoc, and despoiled the fruit trees of their blossoms. The sea has been greatly agitated, and shipwrecks are reported on all the coasts of the Mediterranean.

☞ A Jewish alliance in France has nearly ten thousand members. It is looking forward to the occupancy of Palestine by the Jews. They have an agricultural school and colony near Jaffa. The eighth anniversary was held January 14th, in Paris, and was a brilliant gathering.

☞ The Pope is said to entertain the intention of conferring on the Prince Imperial of France the title of Roman Patrice, which was once destined for the Emperor himself, and which was last borne by Charlemagne.

☞ The Emperor Napoleon, with the Empress, the Prince Imperial, Prince Napoleon, and all the Imperial family, will pay a visit in August next to Corsica, to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Napoleon I.

☞ The Prussian journals state that a Protestant jubilee is to be held next autumn at Berlin, to form a counterpoise to the council to assemble at Rome. A preparatory meeting is to take place at Worms after Whitsuntide.

☞ The Emperor Napoleon is about to purchase the property of Saint Point, belonging to the estate of the late M. de Lamartine, for the purpose of establishing a model farm.

☞ Russia has ordered 700,000 needle guns to be delivered as soon as possible.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

Advent Conference.

The Mass. Advent State Conference will hold their annual session, for the choice of officers, at Worcester, Mass. (by vote of their church), commencing Wednesday evening, April 14th, at half-past seven, at the Advent Chapel. This will be an important meeting. The question to settle is, whether the conference shall live, and be a great blessing to the cause of truth and righteousness. It cannot be such unless it have the hearty cooperation of all the faithful in united action.

Now, brethren, what say? Shall we see you at the conference? Will you lay aside "every weight" and be there? Come, brethren, one and all. Preachers, delegates, disciples, make an effort to be there. Come, and by the blessing of God let us see how much good can be done in reviving his people, and saving the impenitent at this meeting. The Worcester church will care for our needs generously. So come to the feast. Friday morning session will be set apart for the choice of officers.

L. BOUTELL, President.

The New Hampshire Tent.

If time rolls on, the time for tent meetings will soon be upon us, and we wish to do all we can to feed the flock, and strengthen any who desire life in the future kingdom, and do all that the Master requires in laboring to bring sinners to Christ, that they may be saved in the day of his wrath. We believe tent-meetings, if rightly conducted, are in these last days a great means, under God, of accomplishing this blessed result. And as we wish to make arrangements in season, so as to do all we can during the time of tent-meetings, will our brethren in New Hampshire (and if we go into the regions beyond, we think that we shall not go beyond the commission), survey the field, and let us know as soon as they can where tent-meetings are desired. We wish to go into new fields what we can, but there are places where there are a few brethren who have no meeting-house, where the tent will give your neighbors and friends a good chance to hear. Our first meeting will be at Farmington Village, N. H. Brethren, will you let your alms and prayers go up before God for this object, that the truth may be carried into new places. Any who wish to help in this good work, can hand it to either of the committee; and while you are doing good in different directions, do not forget Bro. White and the tract committee, so that we may have a good supply of tracts to scatter.

My brethren, if you could see what God has wrought in Rochester, N. H., in raising up a church to wait for his Son from heaven, as the fruit of the first meeting in this tent, you would feel that it paid a thousand times for all the expense and labor. Remember we have but a short time to work, and the blessed reward will be given. As the tent will be pitched in different localities, we hope our preaching brethren will render us all the assistance they can.

T. H. FORD,
JOHN SHOREY, } Tent Committee.
J. G. SMITH,

Notice.

Brethren of Orleans and Niagara Co's, N. Y., the response of those that have answered the question, "Shall we engage evangelists to employ their time in preaching the gospel, having regular appointments within our bounds?" is emphatically, "Yes." You are invited to meet at the church in Knowlesville, Saturday, Apr. 24th, 1869, at 1 o'clock P. M., to confer on the subject. It is desirable that every person in these counties and adjoining territory, that wishes to have the gospel of the kingdom preached in their neighborhood, or will assist in proclaiming the glad tidings, be present at the meeting, or be represented by delegates.

WARREN BURNHAM.
AARON RIGGS.
PHILIP THURTLE.

Notice.

By the request of the brethren at Edenboro, Erie Co., Pa., I will join Bro. J. Wendell in holding a two days' meeting of the church in Edenboro, April 16th, and over Sunday, as Bro. Wendell and the church there may arrange.

Also, by the request of the brethren at Blooming Valley, I will hold a quarterly meeting there, April 22d, and over Sunday, as the church there may appoint. Let there be a general rally at these quarterly meetings. Soon it will be too late to preach and hear the gospel. Then let all awake. C. F. SWEET.

Notice.

By invitation of the church at Collinsville, Ct., the next quarterly session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held in their hall, beginning Wednesday, April 21st, 1869. Preaching first evening. The place is accessible by railroad from New Haven, on the Canal road to Plainville; change cars then for Collinsville. From Hartford, on the Providence and Fishkill road to Plainville; then change cars as above. Come in the Spirit.

L. F. MOORE, Secretary.

3. THE SLAYING OF THE WITNESSES. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. 4. A TREATISE ON REVELATION XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.
5. THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND SIGNS OF THE TIMES. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.
6. THE LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Showing that God invariably has made known his judgments to his prophets, and by them to the doomed nations. Fifty positive and incidental instances are brought to view in this little work. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.
7. LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" History of False Christs, Earthquakes, Famines, Pestilences, arranged in chronological order; Abounding of Iniquity, Immorality of the Age, Great Spiritual Dearth, Spiritualism—its immoral and degrading tendencies, A Spiritualist's Invocation to Satan, Progression, The Gospel preached in all the world as a witness. "OUR FATHER."

O, what sweet, glad thoughts the Christians have now,
As they think of the crown that will deck their brow,
And in perfect trust and confidence bow
Before "our Father."

And what happy thoughts can our work beguile,
When we have our Savior's approving smile—
Ever busy, yet silently all the while Praying "our Father."

When chilling winds come, and poverty sore
Checks every glad emotion; and the door
Of hope seems closed; then from the heart let pour,
"Help, oh, 'our Father'!"

Our cry he hears, and forgets not our need;
And more—in the heavens our Savior pleads,
And every good thought and every good deed
Is known to "our Father."

In meditation, in work or in despair,
When the winds blow chill, and everywhere
Distress and alarm is borne on the air,
Then pray "our Father."

PENCILINGS OF A PILGRIM.

BOSTON.

Do not ask me to give a description of this crowded city of 250,000 inhabitants. It is ancient, awkward, and interesting. If not the "hub" of the universe, it is at least the metropolis of New England, and ranks among the influential cities of the civilized world. There are many magnificent buildings of brick and massive granite, in various parts of the city, though the architectural average of the whole place is not of a high order. Some of the public buildings will compare favorably with any that can be found in this or other lands. But what shall be said of the streets? Narrow, crooked, roughly paved, and running in every conceivable direction, a stranger needs a keen eye and a large bump of locality to travel these winding pathways and find his way back to the starting point. It is no wonder that the "cow-paths" of the original settlers have been thought of as a philosophical key to the city plan. The historic associations of Boston and its suburbs are full of interest. Learning, war, and religion have played their respective parts, and left their monuments behind.

I have just spent two Sabbaths here, in trying to preach Jesus, the world's Redeemer. I found an interested audience at the Lowell Street Chapel, and delivered such messages as I was enabled to do by the grace of God. We had four meetings during the intervening week, with some tokens of good. Two or three professed to find pardon, and some others acknowledged their coldness, and promised to get right with God. I see no reason why the brethren should not look for large results. The field is white, and many precious sheaves are waiting to be gathered. Let the friends of Jesus rally for a united and persistent encounter with the Prince of darkness. O that clouds of mercy may break in blessings on their heads!

"THE CRISIS."

Not the least important item to be mentioned, is the fact that there is a certain paper published in this city of Puritans, called "The Worl's Crisis," edited by Miles Grant, having a weekly circulation of over eight thousand copies, and exerting an influence upon the religious world that is not to be despised. May thy columns reflect the bright rays of truth divine, and burn with living fire borrowed from God's own altar.

"THE CHRISTIAN."

This is a sweet-spirited sheet, free from puffs, pills, and sectarianism, and calculated to promote an earnest, practical religion. Though young in years, it has reached a circulation of over twenty thousand. It is published monthly by H. L. Hastings, with whom I formed a short and pleasing acquaintance. He is a fine writer and a hard worker. So far from being an apo or a fool, I should call him a christian philosopher. He has written quite largely on the signs of the times, the destruction of the wicked, etc. I have nothing but good wishes for him and everybody else whose chief desire is to fan the flame of vital christianity.

FREE RELIGION.

This is a fast age. Many are rising up in in these days—including some men of letters—who are determined to rob Jesus of his divinity, and christianity of its power and glory. Meetings are being held in one of the halls of Boston, on Sunday afternoons, by those who esteem the cross of Christ foolishness and advocate what they term a "free religion." Men of talent lend their influence to its promotion. Their utterances are strongly tinged with infidelity, and their operations are fulfilling the signs of the last days. I subjoin a few extracts from one of their recent lectures:

"Wickliffe, Huss, Luther, Calvin, and their compeers, were the first apostles of Free Religion, while Socinus, Priestly, Channing, carried on the work of disintegration still further, and gave birth to the deafening demand of humanity for spiritual freedom. Liberal christianity, that is, 'christianity as liberal as it can be,' has reduced the Messianic idea to its minimum power. The next step is outside of christianity altogether. Christianity, gradual in its growth and gradual in its decay, coming to its prime in the Romish church and lying at death's door in the Unitarian church, has reached the highest possibilities of the Messianic faith, and is destined to wane before a faith deeper and broader still."

Christianity wane and die! Never! Its triumphs shall be sung by glorified millions, when its revilers shall have been swept away by the fires of a sin-avenging God. Listen to another blast from this silver trumpet of infidelity:

"There is a greater ambition than that of Christ, who aspired to reign by serving, and that is to serve without aspiring to reign. This is a loftier ideal than Christ's, and Socrates lived and died to make it real. There is no spiritual freedom but in supreme reverence for the still small voice within the private soul, which made the greatness of Jesus himself, but which he did not foster in his disciples. This was his great mistake."

If this theological adventurer can see nothing in Jesus Christ that entitles him to a higher place than was occupied by a heathen philosopher, he needs a special application of gospel eye-salve. There are those that see the loveliness of Jesus, and feel the power of his atoning blood. Another extract from the same lecture, by F. E. Abbott, draws a striking contrast between christianity and "free religion" in the following words:

"The supreme object of the Christian church is to bring all men within its fold under the scepter of its Lord; but the supreme object of Free Religion is to humanize the world, to educate, to spiritualize, to develop the race, to bring out of man the best that is in him. While the social idea of the Christian church is that of a 'Kingdom of God,' with Christ for its king, that of Free Religion is that of a Commonwealth of God, in which there is neither king nor Lord, but all are free and equal citizens. The highest possible exhortation of christianity is to say 'Be like Christ,' the highest eulogy, 'He is like Christ;' but the highest exhortation of Free Religion is, 'Be thyself,' its highest possible praise, 'He was true to himself, and therefore true to humanity and God.' It sees that a single absolute ideal for all mankind would be a most appalling curse. It would extinguish individuality, make character impossible, and destroy the very root of all civilization. But the spirit of christianity has always been that of self-abnegation, self-distrust, self-contempt, on the one hand, and on the other that of utter spiritual prostration before Christ and utter submission to his perfect will. This has always, if carried out, produced the suppression of self, the humiliation of the private will in order that the will of the Master may be done in heart and life: the soul is surrendered to a will outside itself. But the spirit of free religion produces in the free soul self-poise, self-respect. God in Christ is God outside of self, and devotion to him must be self-suppression; but God in humanity is God in every soul, and devotion to him becomes supreme self-reverence and self-trust."

It is true, indeed, that denial of self is indispensable to christian discipleship. The spirit of the age is for self-indulgence—not self-denial; and the spirit of "free religion" lavishes upon sinful self the glory which belongs to Christ alone. Our great danger lies in exalting humanity. A religion with no Christ and no cross in it, is demanded by many who are trying to climb up some other way. But this eager craving for a christless religion only proves the dreadful degeneracy of the times. Thank God, there is a better way. Others may cry up free religion, free love, free thinking, and Free Masonry, but we will run up the standard of a Savior crucified, and wave the glorious banner of free salvation!

PERVERTING THE SCRIPTURES.

We were a little amused, as well as tried, a few days since, while listening to a sermon by one of our Orthodox brethren, from these words: "Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us; and let us run with patience the race set before us." Previous to taking his text, he read the preceding chapter (Heb. 11th), which treats expressly on the faith of Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and numerous others of the patriarchs and prophets. After reading the chapter, he remarked that this cloud of witnesses were the glorified spirits of these departed ones, witnessing around the throne of God for us. Now we would like to ask any Bible student, if there is an intimation in the whole chapter that this numerous company are glorified spirits? On the contrary, Paul declares that notwithstanding they all "obtained a good report through faith," yet they "all died in faith, not having received the promises"; "that they without us should not be made perfect."

Again in speaking of the "weights," he confounded them with "the sin which doth so easily beset us." For instance, he went on to say that indulging in intemperance, pride, avarice, covetousness, envy, evil speaking, slander, etc., were the weights, or in other words the sins (plural) which are such a hindrance in the race set before us. Now we believe all of these things, and many more we might mention, are "weights," and are constantly impeding the Christian's progress in the divine life; but "the sin" here alluded to by the apostle we believe to be the sin of unbelief; and we find it originated as far back as when our first parents were placed in the garden of Eden, and has been more or less prevalent from that time until the present.

In the Old and New Testament Scriptures, we have some striking illustrations of this sin of unbelief, and the apostle in the third chapter of Heb., in referring to the captivity of the children of Israel, and so many of them perishing in the wilderness on account of their unbelief, exhorts his brethren to take heed, lest an evil heart of unbelief be found in them, and so they, too, fail of entering into that rest which remaineth for the people of God. As we contemplate the past and the present, and see to what an alarming extent this sin is pervading our land and nation, we are led to cry out from the depths of our heart, as one did anciently, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

"THE TIMES."

As our age is acknowledged to be a progressive one, the following culled items will show wherein we are progressive—not in righteousness, but backward, to eternal perdition.

RELIGIOUS AFFAIRS, etc. Boston Journal, of Feb. 11th, 1869, speaking of Manchester, N. H., "Correspondent" says:—"I am safe in saying that less than half of this people, who are of suitable age to attend church, ever enter a religious meeting of any kind. . . . . Churches are thinly attended, compared with thirty years ago. . . . . One reason why some of the churches in the larger towns have lost their hold on the affections of a large portion of the people, is because they have become the temples of fashion and display, instead of the sanctuary. . . . Another cause of the diminution is the dullness and monotonous duration of the sermons. . . . For a series of years 'tis the same trite phraseology, both in preaching and prayer; the same threadbare arguments and stale illustrations."

Father Ignatius, lecturing in London, said, "There were (900,000,000) nine hundred millions who do not believe in Christ at all"; and that it was "a pity the few believers in Christ should quarrel among themselves."—New York Rural, of Jan. 2nd, 1869.

Dr. Holland in Springfield Republican says, on "Religion at home and abroad, in Switzerland," "We see everywhere the Sabbath desecrated. . . . They forget that there is a world to be converted. . . . Religion is a thing apparently unknown here."

Herald of July 11th, 1868, states, that at Lyons (France), the "clergy have Sunday services earlier, so that the people could attend the races."

Post of Dec. 4th, 1868, says:—"Rev. Mr. Denton, the Bible Agent, to give Bibles to every family in the county, canvassed Warren, Mass. Out of four hundred and sixty-seven families, three hundred and sixty-eight claim to attend church, eighty of which had no Bibles; eighteen refused to accept of one, even as a gift."

Publisher's Circular of Dec. 15th, 1868, says: "Charles Read, of London, has to have $50,000 by the publishers of the New York Galaxy for writing a novel for that paper."

Putnam, for January, 1869, says:—Of the writing of many novels in England there is not only no end, but a fresh beginning."

INCREASE OF CRIMES. Round Table, of Dec. 19th, 1868, on "Chapter of Horrors," says:—"Dismal as has been the long catalogue of crimes and casualties during the last ten years, have shocked the most refined centres of the world."

DAY'S DOINGS, of Dec. 12th, 1868. The Leader on "The Blood Carnival,—the Reign of Terror,—the Plague Murder," etc., says:—"Every paper throughout the country was compelled to devote its columns to the detail of deeds of self-destruction. Men, women and children seemed to be taken suddenly weary of life and earth, and rushed to death and the unknown. Every possible variety of self-extinction was successfully practiced. Some resorted to the rope, others to the knife, others again to the water, and not a few to the cup of poison. Even the young lad, or budding maiden, who from their youth knew nothing of the world, seemed to have become tired of it, before they had learned anything about it, and rid themselves of existence as they would of a burden; and now, at the present date, even while we write these lines, a carnival of blood is holding revel in our midst. The plague of murder is upon us. North, South, East and West, we read of women and men killed by women and men. We cannot suffer our eyes to rest upon a stray paragraph, without the well-grounded fear that it may contain the account of some recent tragedy. The very demon of crime seems to be stalking in earth night and day, seeking whom it may devour. The plague of murder appears to be confined to no particular locality.

'No pent-up Utica confines its powers,
But the whole boundless universe is'— blood and death. In the country, amid rural sights and sounds, amid all the breezy freedom of the fields, the fiend is active. . . . But in the corrupt and corrupting city, the plague of murder is especially virulent. It affects with its foul influence both high and low, rich and poor. The knife, the gun, and even the poker are used to fulfill the mad dictates of hate, avarice, and drink."

POLICE NEWS of New York says:—"It is impossible to account for the gradual increase of crime in the various cities of the Union. . . . . Crime is on the increase in every city and town in the United States. Many of the crimes comprehend some of the most frightful in the calendar, and a number of them are really nameless. Who will explain the cause of this steady expansion?"

Portland Transcript, of January 9th, 1869, thinks that "Lewiston (Maine) rivals Sodom and Gomorrah in wickedness, if one is to believe the Lewiston Journal, which makes the startling revelation that three hundred cases of abortion occur there annually."

The Last Sensation, of January 18th, says: In France there were 139,000 convictions; in England there were 339,000 convictions for crimes committed. Such news from the London Times is astounding, when we consider that England is the greatest missionary place or country on the globe. But all these things prove conclusively the Scriptures true, that wickedness shall increase, seducers waxing worse and worse, and people having only a form of godliness.

The New York Herald, June 13th, 1868, says:—"There are five millions and a quarter dollars spent for prostitution in New York; and 172,000 people affected with disease." The same paper states that "tobacco is used by eight hundred millions of people."

The Congregationalist & Recorder, of Oct. 29th, 1868, quoting from the Christian Mirror an article on "Pre-infanticide," says:—"On investigation and proof from high medical authority, the proof is all on one side. Let the imagination draw the darkest picture that reason could allow, and it would fail to set forth the shocking details of this horrid home of crime. . . . Full one third of the population of our land fall by the hands of violence. . . . 'Tis more destructive than war, slavery, and intemperance put together. A blood stain upon Christianity, forcing a hundred times more hands to heaven red with blood, for the curse of God, than all other murders in our land put together. . . . The crime itself has become a fashion."

The Herald says that "it took two days to burn the obscene books of a London publisher." What would the aggregate of missionary London be? The same paper calls the present state of things the "Reign of the knife," and adds that "there are four hundred and nine arrests in New York city every twenty-four hours."

The Alto Californian urges that San Franciscans, who have babies they want to get rid of, may "have the decency to throw them into the bay, and not leave so many about the streets, as it has become disagreeable."

After reading these things, who can say that the world is progressing in Christianity? I would that man would pay more attention to the word of God, than to the fables of these last days.

Harpers' Magazine for last May, page 809, on amusements, says: "That the ballet should enchant the public for more than a year, is declared to be another proof of our demoralized condition; another of those horrible portents in which we seem to behold the advent of the disastrous end of things."

Can we expect other than a sad state of things to exist, when boys have become demons in crime? Says the Boston Herald:—"A party of boys broke into the family tomb of the Putnam family, at Danvers, Mass., stole the silver plate from the coffins, sold the bones of the bodies to peddlers; and when arrested were playing foot-ball with the skulls." This was last May.

A FEW WAR ITEMS. Rouher, the French minister, said:—"All nations must ever be prepared for war; for no confidence could be placed in the fraternity of nations."

The Tribune says: "The great war will at last be unavoidable." Yes, the last great battle of God Almighty will come, and will not tarry long.

"Very large purchases of hay have been made in New York for the French government, also heavy purchases of horses for the same party; and the enormous accumulation of bullion in the Bank of France, equal to $250,000,000 (two hundred and fifty millions of dollars), is looked upon by not a few of the longest heads in financial and business circles as indicating a coming war."

The Paris Presse states that the French Minister of War is establishing in the Hotel Des Invalides two magazines to receive all the necessary material for an army of two hundred thousand men, entering on a campaign. The first magazine already contains the field ovens, machines for making biscuits, boxes of bandages, surgical instruments, ambulances, etc.

Says the New York Post of Sept. 15th, 1868:—"The Rome correspondent to Pall Mall Gazette says:—Nothing is now talked of but the new Saint Maria Taigi, who died in 1837. A great sensation has been created by her prophecies, which were confided to her by her confessor, Father Natali, now ninety years old; who has faithfully related them as the events successively happened. The other day the confessor was asked whether Maria Taigi prophesied any further danger from the Garibaldians? Yes, he answered; and in those days we shall see the Tiber as full of corpses as it is now of fish. At this moment fish are so abundant in the Tiber, owing to the floods from the Umbria, that the Romans pick them out of the water with their hands."

May we not neglect the signs of the times, as they are beacons of the coming future.

RATIONALISM.

Rationalism is a word now used to designate that philosophy, which denies that there is anything supernatural in the universe; and which seeks to explain the origin and phenomena of material and spiritual existence, on principles that may be cognized and comprehended by the human reason. The history of Rationalism shows, that at the first, this word was used in no bad signification. At first it was used in a dialectical sense; then, in the time of Bacon, in a philosophical sense, as opposed to the empirical; afterward, as equivalent to naturalism, or a belief in the natural in religion; and, lastly, as the bold assaialnt of all revealed religion. If we may credit the writers of a book entitled "Essays and Reviews," the tone of English theological writing during the eighteenth century was eminently rationalistic in the sense of the word then current. It expressed no antichristian spirit or antagonism to revealed religion, but simply a habit of thought that underlaid all controversies, and was common to all parties.

At the beginning of the present century there were two classes of Rationalists; (1) those who like Bretschneider were called Supernatural Rationalists, and who on the evidence of reason held to the necessity of a revelation; and (2) those who were called pure Rationalists, who regarded religion as altogether natural, having in it no element of the Supernatural.

In its present use, Rationalism has a still more enlarged signification. It is now a sweeping denial of the supernatural in every department of the universe. It holds that the supernatural is impossible, and also that the facts of the universe are against it. It will scarcely admit the existence of the divine Being, and generally does deny a divine Personality.

In its positive aspects, it is an affirmation of the universality and invariability of natural law. According to this law, all things, material and spiritual, have their origin, and by it all the differentiations of species and individuals are brought to pass. A personal creation, God gives place to, or invariably expresses himself through an impersonal law, a plastic force, devoid of feeling, sympathy, or power of condescension. Like the ancient mythology, in which even Jove was bound fast by the irreversible fates; so Rationalism, in the present day, teaches an invariable sequence in the order of events, constraining God and man alike. Hence it affirms with amazing audacity, what God can or cannot do in a given case; and it degrades man to the condition of slavery to circumstances, from which no emancipation is possible.—Home Circle.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT.

7. God knows the hearts of men.—"Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of men."—Acts 1: 24. "Thou knowest my down-sitting and mine up-rising; thou understandesth my thoughts afar off. Thou compassest my path and my lying down, and thou art acquainted with all my ways."—Psa. 139: 2, 3.

God tries men to find out what is in their hearts.—"The Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul."—Deut. 13: 3. "The Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thy heart."—Deut. 8: 2. "For now I know that thou fearest God, seeing that thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me."—Gen. 22: 12.

This proposition does not indicate a contradiction, neither has the infidel compiler so stated it as to make it appear incongruous. For God may know the hearts of all men, which is the truth, and he may wish to try them, not indeed to satisfy himself, but to make examples of his people in order to prove to the world the certainty of truth, and to show his faithfulness in all his promises; we shall, therefore, dismiss this with out further notice.

8. God is all-powerful.—"Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh; is there anything too hard for me?"—Jer. 32: 27. "With God all things are possible."—Matt. 19: 26.

God is not all-powerful.—"And the Lord was with Judah, and he drove out the inhabitants of the mountain; but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron."—Judg. 1: 19.

That God is omnipotent, we most heartily believe, and that he is able to fulfill all he has spoken, we claim as the basis of all true faith. But the skeptic brings forward Judges 1: 19, to prove that God was so deficient in power that he could not drive out the inhabitan's of the valley because they had "iron chariots;" but a grammatical examination of the text will show that the antecedent of the pronoun "he," is not Jehovah, but Judah. It does not follow that because the Lord assisted Judah under many circumstances, that therefore he would be with Judah in all his undertakings. It was therefore Judah, not Jehovah, who could not drive them out of the valley in consequence of their iron chariots. The Douay Bible translates it much plainer than King James' version. It reads as follows: "And the Lord was with Judah, and he [Judah] possessed the hill country, but was not able to destroy the inhabitants of the valley, because they had many chariots armed with scythes."

The above leaves no room for doubt, for the same one who possessed the hill country was the one who failed to obtain the valley, and it is clear that this was Judah.

9. God is unchangeable.—"With whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."—Jam. 1: 17. "For I am the Lord, I change not."—Mal. 3: 6. "I, the Lord, have spoken it; it shall come to pass and I will do it. I will not go back, neither will I spare, neither will I repent."—Ezek. 24: 14. "God is not a man that he should lie, neither the son of man that he should repent."—Num. 23: 19.

God is changeable. "And it repented the Lord that he had made man on earth, and it grieved him at his heart."—Gen. 6: 6. "And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil that he said he would do unto them, and he did it not."—Jonah 3: 10. "Wherefore the Lord God of Israel saith, I said, indeed, that thy house, and the house of thy father, should walk before me forever; but now the Lord saith, Be it far from me. . . . Behold, the days come that I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy father's house." 1 Sam. 2: 30, 31. "In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And the prophet Isaiah, the son of Amos, came unto him, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, set thy house in order; for thou shalt die and not live. . . . . And it came to pass afore Isaiah was gone out into the middle court, that the word of the Lord came unto him, saying, Turn again and tell Hezekiah, the captain of my people, thus saith the Lord, ... I have heard thy prayer, ... and I will add unto thy days, fifteen years."—2 Kings 20: 1, 4–6. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Depart and go up hence, thou and the people. . . . For I will not go up in the midst of thee. . . . And the Lord said, I will do this thing, also, that thou hast spoken. . . . My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."—Ex. 33: 1, 3, 14, 17.

God has stated in the Scriptures his purpose in regard to some things, concerning which he will never repent or change his course of action, among these we may mention Num. 23: 19. Balak tried to get Balaam to curse Israel, but the prophet each time blessed Jacob instead of cursing him, and at last he assured Balak that God would not repent, or turn from blessing Israel. Hence Balak failed in his endeavor to have the Lord turn from and act in opposition to his word.

On the other hand, there are things of which God promises to repent, if the people confess their sins and turn to him. For he declared by the mouth of his prophet Jeremiah, that "If that nation against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil way, I will repent of, or turn from the evil I thought to do unto them."—Jer. 18; 8. And this was fulfilled when the people of Nineveh turned from their sins, for God then repented of the evil he had pronounced against them and did it not. But this by no means proves that the Bible contradicts itself. God repented that he had made man, that is, he turned from preserving him upon the earth and destroyed him by the flood of waters. We might notice other points in the above proposition, but we trust the reader will at once see the principle by which they all harmonize. God or man may make promises which they will not repent of, or turn from, and again they may promise certain things on conditions, and yet no one would accuse them of inconsistency in this respect. If the reader will examine the above texts in their connection, he will see that the compiler of this little work before us, has totally ignored the principles of reason and justice.

SPIRITUAL HEALTH.

BRO. GRANT:—In my last, I gave a brief sketch of my experience in seeking after health of body. In this letter, I wish to say something about spiritual health. Some of the remedies prescribed for the "sin-sick soul" are as unfit and ill-adapted to heal the disease as the vile and poisonous compounds of the druggist. There seems to be an analogy between the mineral medicines of an M. D., and the unscriptural doctrines of a D. D. And it is often the case that those who hold to the one, swallow the other. And the result can never be good and permanent health in either case. In seeking for bodily health, we must obey the laws of nature. And in seeking for spiritual health, we must obey the laws of God. We must be led by the Spirit. And the Spirit will lead you into all truth. This is the testimony of the inspired apostle, and it is in harmony with the experience of thousands who have been raised up from the gates of death, and made to sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and a new song put into their mouth, even praise unto our God and the Lamb forever.

There is no other physician who can give you life and health, but Jesus. And the way for us to learn his mind and will concerning us, is to study his word, and follw the leadings of his Spirit, which is freely given to all who truly desire it. I do not profess to have attained to perfect health, but I am striving to follow on in this way, the King's highway, being assured that there is no other way where-by any can be saved.

Webster, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

COMMON POLITENESS.

It is not polite to smoke a cigar or a pipe in the streets, where are constantly passing those to whom the smoke is offensive.

It is not polite to betray confidence reposed in you, or to obtain the secrets of others with the intention of using them to their disadvantage.

It is not polite to spit from the window of a dwelling-house, or the door of a shop, where people are constantly passing.

It is not polite to request another to do an act, which, if it not positively wrong, it may be disagreeable to perform.

It is not polite to interrupt another, by attempting to speak before he has finished his sentence.

It is not polite for three or four men to rise, and leave their pews in church, to give room for a lady at the foot. If she comes in last, she should occupy the first vacant seat.

It is not polite in public assemblies, to crowd above others, with the intention of getting the best view of the speaker.

It is not polite to beg of others for the use of yourself or friends, while you have the means to purchase what is necessary.

It is not polite to drink intoxicating beverages with another, or resort to questionable places, when your inclinations and principles lead you to another course.

It is not polite to put shop-keepers to unnecessary trouble in looking over their goods, when you have no intention of purchasing, or coolly remark, as you leave, "We only came to examine goods to-day."

It is not polite to preach up charity and good will towards men, while you indulge in unchristian feelings towards your fellow creatures.

It is not polite to attend church with a long face, and be punctilious in the observance of the Sabbath, while, during the week, you pay but little regard to the common duties of christianity.

It is not polite to borrow a book, or any article your neighbor has just bought, when you are as well able as he to purchase for yourself.

It is not polite to recommend yourself for any office of trust, honor, or emolument.

It is not polite to pay for puffs or advertisements where your own deeds are proclaimed, or your own articles are extolled.

It is not polite to praise a man at his face.

— Reap ideas and house them well, but leave the words high stubble.

— Life is half spent before we know what it is.

— No man has a right to do as he pleases, except when he pleases to do right.

— Multitudes express opinions; few form them.

— Civil, obliging words cost but little and do a great deal of good.

— Wisdom is the olive which springs from the heart, blooms on the tongue and bears fruit in the actions.

— Be always at leisure to do good; never make business an excuse to decline the offices of humanity.

— Visit the sick, the widow and the fatherless; this is one part of that religion that is "pure and undefiled."

— Think little of yourself, and you will not feel injured when others think little of you.

— A thousand parties of pleasure do not leave a recollection worth that of one good action.

— The charitable man gives trifles which he could not keep, to receive treasures which he cannot loose.

— Scandal is a bit of false money, and he who passes it is frequently as bad as he who originally uttered it.

— Divine love is like a rod of myrtle, which, as Pliny reports, makes the traveler who carries it in his hand so lively and cheerful, that he never faints nor grows weary.

— Knowledge is not wisdom; it is only the raw material from which the beautiful fabric of wisdom is produced. Therefore, let us not spend our days in gathering material, and live and die without a shelter.

— A christian sailor, when asked why he remained so calm in a fearful storm, said, "Though I sink, I shall but drop into the hollow of my Father's hand; for he holds all these waters there."

— It is a good thing to obey the law of God, but it is a better thing to love it. The former is to live a new life, the latter is to have a new heart. A slave may obey a master whom he fears and hates, but the child loves the law of a father.

— Pope wrote to Swift: "I am now rich enough, and can afford to give away five hundred dollars a year. I would not crawl upon the earth without doing a little for truth. I will enjoy the pleasure of what I give by giving it alive, and seeing another enjoy it. When I die, I should be ashamed to leave enough for a monument, if there was a wanting friend above ground."

A GOOD RESOLUTION.

At the late Methodist Conference, held at Fall River, Mass., presided over by Bishop D. W. Clark, it was voted to receive no members into the conference who used tobacco. It is time that all christians were awake to the evil effects of tobacco, in all its forms, upon the human constitution. It weakens the physical, mental and moral powers. Its whole tendency is downward. Any amount of facts can be produced to prove this statement. It is a sad sight to see a professed minister of the gospel with a pipe, cigar, or quid of tobacco in his mouth, or snuffing the powdered weed into his head. If the reader is one of this class, do quit it at once, and promise the Lord on your knees never to use it again, live or die. Such a noble resolution, by the help of the Lord, will kill the appetite for it at once; and in about three days your constitution will begin to improve, and soon you will be rejoicing in the fact that you are free from a filthy, tormenting habit, that was destroying your best vitality, hastening you to the grave, and opening avenues for Satan to get an easy access to your heart by means of evil imaginations, awakened by the tobacco stimulus upon the brain. In the strength of the Lord, quit it, quit it forever, and let no more tobacco-chewing and cigar-smoking boys hide behind your bad example.—EDITOR.

FASHIONABLE SUFFERERS.

In these cold, blowy, snowy days, I am pained to see the efforts of foolish parents to freeze their little girls. It is an outrage. Girls should be dressed as comfortably as boys. On the contrary, the poor little shivering things are sent out in the streets, with their heads comfortably protected, thick shawls round their shoulders, which comparatively need no protection, their skirts standing out an angle of forty-five degrees, and their poor little drum-stick legs as unprotected from the blasts as the legs of a turkey hanging in a meat stall. And thus we pack off these little girls to school, with their big heads to be crammed full of learning, at the expense of their legs, which, at a tender age, are of more importance than their heads.

As a general rule, parents should devote their entire attention to their little girl's legs, and let their heads alone. The heads will take care of themselves in due time. The legs are helpless, and need looking after. By taking care of the heads, little girls acquire a knowledge, such as it is, of music, drawing, all modern languages, botany, the use of the globe, embroidery, poetry, and in general a little of nothing; and, by neglecting at the same time their legs, they acquire colds, coughs, headaches, weak backs, pipe-stem legs, hollow chests, neuralgia, and other complaints, which either send them to the grave before they ought to go, or, if they grow up, to make them drag through a miserable, unhappy, and unhealthy life. And all this time you take your great, strapping, tough hulks of boys, who are never cold, and twice as strong and hardy as your girls, and wrap them up, and fit them out in thick woolen trowsers and drawers, and heavy top boots. The result is they grow up to be tough, strong men, and these little wretched, artificial feminine creatures do not grow up at all, or, if they do, they develop into a sort of human curiosity, far better for preservation in a case of butterflies than for contact with the sharp edges of the world.—Ex.

POSITION IN SLEEP.

It is better to go to sleep on the right side, for then the stomach is very much in the position of a bottle turned upside down, and the contents of it are aided in passing out by gravitation. If one goes to sleep on the left side, the operation of emptying the stomach of its contents is more like drawing water from a well. After going to sleep let the body take its own position. If you sleep on your back, especially soon after a hearty meal, the weight of the digestive organs and that of the food, resting on the great vein of the body, near its backbone, compresses it, and arrests the flow of blood more or less. If the arrest is partial the sleep is disturbed, and there are unpleasant dreams. If the meal has been recent and hearty, the arrest is more decided; and the various sensations, such as falling over a precipice, or the pursuit of a wild beast, or impending dangers, and the desperate effort to get rid of it, arouses us, and sends on the stagnating blood; and we wake in a fright, or trembling, or in a perspiration, or feeling exhausted, according to the degree of stagnation, and the length and strength of the efforts made to escape the danger. But when we do fall over the precipice, when the trembling building crushes us, what then? That is death. That is the death of those of whom it is said, when found lifeless in the morning, That they were as well as ever they were the day before; and often it is added, "and ate heartier than common!"

This last, as a frequent cause of death to those who have gone to bed to wake no more, we give merely as a private opinion. The possibility of its truth is enough to deter any rational man from a hearty meal. This we do know with certainty, that waking up in the night with painful diarrhea, or billious colic, ending in death in a very short time, is probably traceable to a late large meal. The truly wise will take the safe side. For persons who eat three times a day, it is amply sufficient to make the last meal of cold bread and butter, and a cup of some warm drink. No one can starve on it; while a perseverance soon begets a vigorous appetite for breakfast, so promising of a day of comfort.

SIMPLE CURE FOR DEAFNESS.

A gentleman, who for some years was so deaf as to be utterly unable to hear conversation in an ordinary tone of voice, called upon us the other day, and requested us to publish the method by which his cure was effected, for the benefit of all who may be afflicted with this infirmity, whether arising from catarrh or other cause.

After trying the remedies prescribed by his physicians, this gentleman—now over sixty years of age—was recommended to inject into the ear a mixture of castile soap and tepid water; or, it may be made as hot as the part will bear. By this simple and entirely innocent preparation, used daily for about two weeks, the hearing of the gentleman who recommends it was completely restored.

The addition of a few drops of pure oil or glycerine is also of advantage, as it softens the wax of the ear when it has become hardened; or if the deafness is accompanied with the sense of uneasiness or pain, the addition of a few drops of laudanum will be of advantage in relieving the pain. A very large number of people are afflicted with partial deafness, and it can, we trust, do no harm to try so simple a remedy—a remedy which, our informant assures us, is a certain cure in many cases.—Atlanta Baptist.

SMALL POX.

From extended and close observation, the following general deductions seem to be warranted:

1. Infantile vaccination is an almost perfect safeguard till the fourteenth year.

2. At the beginning of fourteen the system gradually loses its capability of resistance till about twenty-one, when many persons become almost as liable to small pox as if they had not been vaccinated.

3. This liability remains in full force till about forty-two, when the susceptibility begins to decline, and continues for seven years to grow less and less, becoming extinct at about fifty—the period of life when the general revolution of the body begins to take place, during which the system yields to decay, or takes a new lease of life.

4. The great practical use to be made of these statements is, let every youth be revaccinated on entering fourteen. Let several attempts be made, so as to be certain of safety. As the malady is more liable to prevail in cities during winter, special attention is invited to the subject at this time.—Hall's Journal of Health.

WORRIED TO DEATH.

This is a very common expression, with a metaphorical meaning; but many a time, alas! it is literally true—especially so with the over-sensitive, the too high-strung. But it is often an unnecessary result, arising from idleness, giving time to brood over trifles, or from the wicked and weak minded habit of getting into a worry about trifling things. I once knew a lady to cry because it rained before she could have some work finished around her splendid mansion. All of us should accustom ourselves to take things by their smooth handle, remembering that it has been wisely said, "The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex one, and prudently cultivating an overgrowth of small pleasures, since very great ones are let on long leases.—Ibid.

CHASTENING.

O God, my heart is sad and faint,
For waves of trouble round me roar;
Trembling I come with my complaint,
And at thy feet my sorrows pour.

When with rebukes thou dost chastise,
And bring'st to light my inbred sin;
All vain-conceited goodness dies,
And, loathing self, I cry "unclean"!

But oh, some hopeful rays appear,
Some little beams of comfort shine;
These gracious words I seem to hear,—
"I love, rebuke, and chasten mine."

Father, is it thy Son who speaks,
Thy Son who groaned upon the cross?
Thy Son who bruises me, and breaks
My heart to separate its dross?

Savior, amen, thy Dove shall rest
With me, according to thy word;
And, freed from every rival guest,
My heart shall magnify the Lord.

Whom God hath freely justified,
Let no accusing foe condemn;
Who shall lay charges? Jesus died;
For me he died and rose again.

Let tempests rage, he'll lead me through,
Faultless before his face I'll stand;
And when he doth the earth renew,
I shall behold Immanuel's land.

COMING EVENTS.

Readers of the Crisis:—Brethren and Sisters, will you be grieved or displeased with me for citing your attention once more to a subject to which I have frequently adverted? Will a single subscriber to your own cherished paper, the Crisis, be offended, or revolve a thought of directing its discontinuance, because I suggest once more a few words touching this discredited, or seeming incredible "Napoleonism"? I trust not. I have seen this feature of prophetic evolution very earnestly objected to, and seen it with grief, well assured that every such objection would be overcome by the invincible, the unanswerable logic of events. Now it is not "Napoleonism," but the coming of Christ, which is the glorious hope of the church, and the grand object of humble and ardent expectation. But truth is precious. Whatever God has declared must come to pass, and I rejoice in God's word. I rejoice in his power, his wisdom, his majesty; and I earnestly desire to see his purposes accomplished, and his declarations fulfiled. Let his word be vindicated and his name glorified. And it is because this stupendous evolution is so near, and so certain, and so wonderful, that I realize also the interposition and coming of the Son of God to be so near and certain also.

Brethren, believe me or not, but I do most earnestly insist that this vast and awful confederation of evil is at hand. How can I describe to you the varied and solemn emotions which I experience in view of the rapidity, and I may say the fearful momentum, with which the forces of evil are gathering for their brief but terrible hour? Is there no escape for watching and waiting saints? Blessed be God, there is a door of early and glorious escape. What saith Christ? "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from that hour," etc. Jesus openeth, and no man shutteth; shutteth, and no man openeth.

Now what is the obvious and startling fact in regard to the progress of events towards a Napoleonic development of power and dominion? It is simply this, that in an exceedingly short period of time, the cousin of Louis Napoleon, I mean Lucien Bonaparte, a member of the college of cardinals, will be chosen the next Pope, and accordingly ecclesiastical head of the whole Catholic world. At all events, the probability is so great, that to my mind it amounts to almost a mathematical certainty. Some of the most able and intelligent journals begin to realize the prodigious meaning and amazing results of such an eventuality. Who is so dull or blind as not to see at a glance how much is comprehended in this elevation of a Bonaparte to the so-called chair of St. Peter? Who is so loth or slow to read the language of events, in harmony with the word of God, as not to recognize the tremendous accession of power that is gained to Louis Napoleon, the Emperor of the French? I am almost astonished at the hesitation of those looking for the coming of Christ to credit and understand this portentous evolution. Be assured, my brethren, a great and almost boundless surprise awaits the sleeping church, when they awake suddenly to discern what they had previously decried and discarded; to wit, the truth and magnitude of the gathering tide of evil, and the cunning device of Satan in bringing a snare of unprecedented depth and danger upon the world. Yes, a great and even speechless surprise. And it is because of previous incredulity that the wonder will be so great, when it is brought to pass according to the word of God—"And all the world wondered after the beast."

Just think calmly and attentively what will be the result when the French Emperor, frequently and justly called the dictator of Europe, with his political and military strength, and the alliance of the kingdoms of Europe (or many of them), has also at his command the vast resources involved in a universal homage of the catholic world to the name of Bonaparte, when a Bonaparte is elected Pope. Think of it calmly and well, and then hesitate before rejecting the view of this swiftly approaching hour of trial. Pause a little before excluding this coming crisis of the world from every system of prophetic interpretation. Be not reluctant to receive the truth, even though it involve a modification of previous ideas.

The facts are, as I am most earnestly persuaded, that Romanism, Spiritualism, and Judaism in particular, will very speedily be compacted in a pledge of fealty to Louis Napoleon. It is impossible to doubt it on any rational ground. And I beseech brethren to seek very earnestly to be divested of every possible prejudice or prepossession in the way of a perfectly clear observation of facts.

Finally, I beg to suggest interrogatively, why is the decisive and determining argument of the name, "the number of a man," so very greatly neglected? Why, it is a species of literature by itself. And literature according to God's plan. "Here is wisdom." How many really know or have inquired in how many ways the name of Napoleon fits to the arithmetical mould of the number 666?

Brethren and sisters, I write earnestly, for I feel in earnest; and I am really sorry to hear that antipathy should exist to this species and sphere of inquiry. I am sorry, but I feel sure you will accede to the general and substantial correctness of the outline, and its great and imminent aspect of menace. But as a relief to the picture, the glory of a redeeming and coming Christ rises to the mind. That glory is the brighter by the contrast. A ready people will escape. "Therefore, be ye also ready." None can tell what tremendous events are yet lurking in the womb of this very year, 1869. Who knows but an ereption of saints may occur? At any rate it is near, I am sure.

Now, brethren and sisters, whenever I could be assured of a general and welcome hearing, I should be glad to enlarge upon this topic. But, otherwise, it may be best for me to keep silent, for the most part in your hearing. But if I should hear that one subscriber to the Crisis had desired the paper discontinued on account of this letter, I should still take a compensating consolation from the irrefutable argument and language of most speedily coming events. Such logic is hard to overcome. I am contented to wait. May God bless all the waiting saints, each with a clear head and a warm heart, and crown the glorious hope with a swift accomplishment. Eagerly watching, your unworthy and humble servant,

THE TIME OF OUR LORD'S BIRTH.

Bro. Grant:—As there are such efforts made to ascertain the time of the birth of Christ, I wish to offer the following, which settles it with me: E. Robinson says, "The birth of Christ cannot be fixed later in any case than the autumn of B. C. 5"; and, if we adhere strictly to Scripture, we can get the year, month, and day, when our Lord was born. The Babylonish captivity commenced on the tenth day of the fifth month, B. C. 558; and the Lord said, "After seventy years be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place."—Jer. 29 : 10. The word of God being fulfilled to a day, the commandment went forth to restore and build Jerusalem on the tenth day of the fifth month, B. C. 488. From this, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, threescore and two weeks, which end on the tenth of the fifth month, B. C. 5; and that year, the tenth of the fifth month fell on Aug. 14th.

Again, the sheep were out feeding, which was not before April, nor later than September, before the fall rains. See History of the Jews.

Again, Paul has reference to this time, which he calls the fullness of time, i. e., Daniel's sixty-nine weeks, as there is no other connected with this subject under consideration. Josephus says there was an eclipse of the moon at Jerusalem. This was on March 13th, Herod's death being fixed by Josephus A. D. 4. In A. D. 11, the first year of Tiberius Cæsar, on Aug. 28th, Augustus associated Tiberius with himself in the full government of the empire. See Adam Clarke. In Aug. 19th, A. D. 14, third year of Tiberius, Augustus died; from which time Tiberius became sole emperor; and according to Josephus, he reigned twenty-two years, five months, and three days. The total eclipse of the moon Sept. 27th, A. D. 14, was one month and eight days after the death of Augustus. This eclipse beginning the reign of Tiberius, reckoning from the death of Augustus, Aug. 19th, A. D. 14, indisputably fixes the date to be Aug. 14th for true Christmas-day, instead of Dec. or Feb., as some claim. See Hale.

Again, Christ was baptized in the 15th year of the reign of Tiberius (Luke 3 : 1), he being thirty years old. See Luke 3 : 23. If he was just thirty, it makes his baptism Aug. 12th, A. D. 26, which was the fifteenth year of Tiberius' reign, which commenced Aug. 28th, A. D. 11. Christ began his ministry, according to the law, which was at 30 years, at the feast of tabernacles, A. D. 26, on Oct. 15th.

Perhaps this is enough to settle the point to all, that about the middle of August is the Christmas of christians. The heathenish idea of its being in December is exploded; also the Popish, that adopted that of the heathen, which is as far from the truth as their doctrines. I can see no evidence of its being in February, or any other time but Aug. 19th, which is fixed by Cæsar's death and by the eclipse, which must be true. I wish our brethren could be wrought upon to publicly denounce the old heathenish day of Christmas, and make a mark in this generation for truth, which would be felt in this direction, and set the world looking at the truth which is the result of searching the Scriptures.

DAN. 11 : 40.

THE SEPTUAGINT RENDERING OF DAN. 11 : 40.

Kai en kairou perati sungkeratisthesetai meta tou basileos tou notou, kai sunachthesetai ep auton basileus tou borrha. "And in the time of the end shall smite horns together with the king of the south, and shall gather together upon him the king of the north." Now since sungkeratisthesetai signifies "to smite together with the horns," the word here signifies a close combat between two distinct powers; and as one of them is the king of the south, the other must be the immediate antecedent subject of the prophecy; namely, the willful king, described in verses 36-39; and so he, instead of the king of the south, is the aggressor in this warfare. And he being the leading subject of the first member of the sentence, must be so regarded in the second member; for, otherwise, it would be letting him drop out of sight too unceremoniously, to be consistent with the importance assigned to him in the prophecy. Hence, the second member of the sentence denotes the agency of the willful king, in gathering together with the king of the north against the king of the south. The willful king is the leading character, while the king of the north, at the time spoken of, is subordinate to him. Therefore, when it is said, "And he shall enter into the countries, and shall overflow and pass over," it denotes the progress made by the willful king against the king of the south, in conjunction with the king of the north, with his force of chariots, and horsemen, and many ships.

That this interpretation is correct, seems evident from the 44th verse, which reads thus:—"But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him; therefore shall he go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many." If this was not the willful king, instead of saying, "he shall go forth," it should read, he shall return with great fury, etc. If it was the king of the north, the tidings out of the north indicate that he was to be in some other place than in the north, when bad tidings came to him from there, and so would have to return, instead of going forth in that direction.

It is not the object of the writer to make an historic application of this part of the prophecy, but to point out the willful king as one distinct from the kings of the north and south, and the final and principal subject of the vision of chapter eight, and of the explanation thereof in chapter eleven. As a power, according to the vision, it was to come out of one of the four divisions of the Grecian empire, and so not to be confounded as either of the four. As a power, according to the vision, it must be "broken without hand"; or, as in the explanation, "he shall come to his end, and none shall help him." As a power, it was to "practice and prosper," and "do according to his will, and shall prosper till the indignation be accomplished"; hence, not to be superseded or eclipsed by the king of the north. The king of the north, spoken of in Dan. 11 : 20, cannot mean Augustus Cæsar, for he reigned fifty-seven years, six months, and two days, according to Josephus; while the subject of verse 20 was to be destroyed "in a few days," and so his reign was to be short, instead of a long one, like that of Cæsar. Truth is harmonious.

HOME.

Home, when life's rough voyage is o'er
Home, where sorrow comes no more;
Home, beyond death's swelling tide,
Forever by the Savior's side.

Home, where trials ne'er can come,
Where grief and anguish find no room;
But where with joy the raptured throng
Swell loud and clear redemption's song.

The parted ones shall gather there,
Eternal bliss forever share;
Sickness and death be known no more,
Nor feared at all on that blest shore.

O glorious prospect, heavenly rest,
With all the ransomed and the blest;
Soon will that blessed morning come,
When all the saints shall rest at home.

For the World's Crisis.

NATIONS BEFORE THEY ARE BORN—NATIONS AFTER THEY ARE DEAD.

That nations are spoken of after they are passed away in death, is shown by Rev. 5 : 9, which speaks of the saints being "redeemed" to God by Christ's blood, "out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." All nations are to be "blessed" in "Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham." In Gen. 18 : 17, 18, the Lord said, "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do; seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him?" And again in Gal. 3 : 8, 9, we read: "And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." This blessing which is to be bestowed upon some "out of" every nation, cannot be confined to this mortal life; for those who have the promise of salvation, are not saved until they are "redeemed" from death, as the following texts will show:—"But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." Psa. 49 : 15. "Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head; they shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away." Isa. 51 : 11. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death; O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction." Hosea 13 : 14.

"Waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body" (Rom. 8 : 23). This glorious redemption, brought to view in the foregoing passages, is spoken of by the apostle, in Heb. 9 : 12, as being an eternal "redemption." This will be when the saints shall have been "redeemed" "out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." Now if the "soul," according to David, and the "body," according to Paul, as above quoted, are to be redeemed, then none can be said to be fully redeemed until they are redeemed from death. And hence, all those nations, out of which any are to be redeemed, must be taken into the account when the redemption shall take place, whether these nations are in a living or in a dead state. Yes, all the nations out of which Christ will redeem any by his blood, must be classed in the number of these nations. For if none can be called nations except such as shall be living on the earth when God's people shall be redeemed from death; then none can be redeemed except such as shall be found among the living nations at the time of their redemption.

Nations are made up of individuals; and why do not the nations exist with God, as well as individuals, after they have passed away in death? But again, if "two nations," or "two manner of people," could be in the "womb" of Rebekah before they were born (Gen. 25 : 23), cannot nations exist with God after they are dead? All nations, dead or alive, will appear before Christ for judgment, as set forth in Matt. 25 : 31, 32; for he will "judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. 4 : 1.

Now the day of judgment must find people, or nations, living upon the earth, who are spoken of as "the quick," or as the living. Such, therefore, must either be judged in the flesh, while still living in their natural life, or they must pass through some miraculous change equivalent to the resurrection; and if the latter, then they would lose the distinctive character of "the quick." What, then, would become of the judgment of "the quick," as distinguished from the judgment of "the dead"? In this case, there would be no such judgment as of "the quick." Hence, the distinction made by the Scriptures between the judgment of "the quick" and the judgment of "the dead" would be entirely lost. But if there is any meaning in words, then "quick" does not mean "dead," and "dead" does not mean "quick"; and, therefore, the judgment of the one cannot be the judgment of the other. And if the natural life of "the quick" ends before they are judged, then there can be no such judgment as of "the quick." And if "the dead" are made alive before they are judged, then there can be no such judgment as of "the dead." Hence, it is clear that God speaks of the nations who are dead, as well as nations who are alive. And, as above stated, there can be no more impropriety in speaking of nations after they are dead, than there is in speaking of nations before they are born (Gen. 25 : 23.) When God speaks, he knows what he is talking about; and he says what he means, and he means what he says. And although nations do not exist with men only while they are in a living state, yet with God they exist before they are born, and also after they are dead. And hence, in Rom. 4 : 16, 17, the apostle could say: "Abraham . . . is the father of us all, as it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations." Therefore, the apostle could with propriety add, "God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not AS THOUGH THEY WERE." Hence we see that the nations which have passed away in death do not exist with us, but they do exist with God. And so we have proved that nations do exist with God before they are born, and after they are dead.

When this subject of the nations, and the proper time of their judgment, is rightly understood, it will greatly assist in a correct understanding of many other things which stand connected with events to take place when Christ comes at the end of this age. For the want of more study and more reflection upon this great and important question, much strife and serious divisions have been made among the people of God. O that men would study to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not "to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

For the World's Crisis.

CONTRADICTIONS AND INCONSISTENCIES IN MODERN THEOLOGY.

Among all the various doctrines of men, and of different organizations of religious bodies, there are none but what are considered as "sound doctrine" by those holding them, and are supposed to be fully substantiated by the word of the Lord; yet many of them appear to have a very shaky foundation when closely compared with the certain portions of Scripture, which it is said are fully able to sustain them. And it matters not how much these doctrines may conflict with each other, it is always claimed that "our views" are right, according to the Bible; and if passage after passage is quoted in direct contradiction to a peculiar view that is set forth as being the right one, the immediate answer given is, "Well, that is your way of explaining the Bible," when the passage explains itself. But the greatest stumbling-block in the way of many who have been brought up to believe in certain false doctrines, seems to be, the quotation of a plain, simple, "Thus saith the Lord."

People who are generally willing to tell you what "we believe," or what "our church believes," or what "our creed is," can seldom tell you but little of what the Bible teaches, unless it be in a spiritual, or greatly mystified way. They admit that the Bible is a great and wonderful book, but say that it contains but very little that we can understand; and that "little" is to be understood in such a "spiritual" sense, that we are obliged to look to the men of greatest education for a full understanding of it. And what do they tell us it means? Just the opposite of what God tells us. For instance, the penalty for breaking the first law ever given to man by the Lord God, in whom we profess to believe, was this: "Thou shalt SURELY die."—Gen. 2 : 17. But theology contradicts this plain statement, and takes up on the side of the serpent, who was bold to say in defiance of the One who created heaven and earth, "Thou shalt not SURELY die." (Gen. 3 : 4.) And we know that the serpent told an untruth, for in Gen. 5 : 5, we read: "And all the days that ADAM lived, were nine hundred and thirty years; and HE died." Thus we find that God's penalty was fully executed; for ADAM did "SURELY die." How are we in any way whatever to understand this passage to mean as popular theology interprets it, "Adam did not die; only his body died?" The very assertion is contradictory in itself; the word says that "HE [Adam] DIED"; not Adam's body alone, for that did not become a "living soul" until the "breath of life" was breathed into its nostrils, and hence could not die when there was no life in it of itself.

Thus we can plainly see the inconsistency of believing the popular theology of the day, which teaches us that "what we see of man is not the real man, but only the house in which the man lives; that which is of the dust, and unto the dust returns, is of no account what ever. The real man, being a part of God, of course cannot die; that is invisible, without any form, and is the spirit, which returns to God who gave it." Now this is in direct opposition to the history of the creation of man given in Gen. 2 : 7, where we read that "the Lord God formed MAN of the dust of the ground." We know that "dust" is a visible substance; and we know too, that MAN does "return unto the dust from whence he was taken." And in this account of the creation of "man," we cannot find the least intimation that he became possessed of an "immortal soul" at that time; neither do we find that there was more than one "breath of life" which was all that was necessary to cause "man" to become a "living soul;" hence, all that can possibly leave "man" and "return to God who gave it," is this "breath of life." Yet, notwithstanding the great plainness of the Scriptures, men take the liberty of asserting that "the breath of life" is, or means, the same thing as an "immortal entity," which is a part of God, because nothing can come from God but what is immortal. But does not every living thing upon the earth live by breathing this same "breath of life" which God breathed into "man's" nostrils at his creation? And can it be inferred in any way any more than in the beast? And does not "man" die as the beast dieth? What saith the Preacher? (Eccl. 3 : 19.) "For that which befalleth the son of man, befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath: . . . . so that a MAN hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity."

"Oh," says one, "I cannot believe any such doctrine as that; I cannot believe that my soul will die, and that I shall not know anything when I am dead, any more than a dog." But you can certainly believe no other way, if you believe the Scripture just quoted; also if you believe Eccl. 9 : 5; "For the living know that they shall die; but the DEAD know not anything." And further, Ezek. 18 : 4, 20; "The soul that sinneth, it shall DIE." Although people may read these plain declarations over and over again, yet they are so blinded by the traditions of men that they continually sing of "a never-dying soul to save," which if it was "never-dying" would be already saved. "But," say they, "we mean that it is to be saved from the eternal torment that awaits the wicked." Then you contradict this view of the case when you sing the last verse of the same hymn, which reads thus:

"Help me to watch and pray,
And on thyself rely;
Assured if I my trust betray,
I shall forever DIE."

According to this idea, if we "betray our trust," "eternal death" awaits us, which is in harmony with Rom. 6 : 23. "For the wages of sin is DEATH." "But," says the objector, "we do no believe this death to mean annihilation; it means the death that never dies." That is just no death at all; but the wicked have eternal life, and are preserved just as much as the righteous, which is contrary to Psa. 145 : 20. "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy." Now "destroy" and "preserveth" cannot mean one and the same thing. But these terms when applied by men to the perishable things of this earth, always mean just the opposite of each other. Then why can we not take God to mean just what he says, and not so attempt to explain his word as to make it hard to be understood? Eternal life is a gift, which is only to be obtained by "patient continuance in well doing." And if there are some who believe that God will save them at last, let them disobey him as much as they will, they must count his law as without power, and the gift of his dear Son as a Savior of sinner, as utter uselessness. But our Savior has pointed out to us a "broad way that leadeth to destruction," and a "strait and narrow way that leadeth unto life."—Matt. 7 : 13, 14. Here are two opposites,—"life" and "destruction." Let us all seek to walk in the "narrow way," that we may be sure of "eternal life," which our Savior will give "at his appearing and kingdom," unto all those that "endure unto the end."

Brimfield, Mass. Geo. E. Lee.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT.

10. God is just and impartial.—"The Lord is upright, and there is no unrighteousness in him." Ps. 92 : 15. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" Gen. 18 : 25. "A God of truth, and without iniquity, just and right is he." Deut. 32 : 4. "There is no respect of persons with God." Rom. 2 : 11. "Ye say the way of the Lord is not equal. Hear now, O house of Israel; is not my way equal?"—Ezek. 18 : 25.

God is unjust and partial. "Cursed be Canaan; a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren." Gen. 9 : 25. "For I, the Lord thy God, am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generations." Ex. 20 : 5. "For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God, according to election, might stand, . . it was said unto her, The elder shall serve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated." Rom. 11 : 12, 13. "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath." Matt. 13 : 12.

It is true that God is upright and holy, and that he is just and righteous. It is also true that with him "there is no respect of persons," but he has respect for character and goodness. As to the curse which fell upon Canaan, it was a prophecy of the woe which would follow the sinful conduct of the Canaanites as a nation, for the curse never fell on Canaan personally. This prophecy did not create the servitude of the nation, but simply foretold what would come to pass in the future, and it was literally fulfilled. Ex. 20 : 5, shows that God is jealous for the welfare of his people, and also that fathers and children who practice iniquity, will alike meet with judgments from the hand of God. The text does not teach that the fathers do all the sinning and escape judgment, while the children do not sin and still receive the punishment due their fathers. The idea of the text is, that fathers and children would all be punished for practicing iniquity. The reference to Jacob and Esau is purely national, meaning the two people, or their descendants—one doing the will of God, and the other disobeying his word. In proof that the reference is national, and not individual, please read Gen. 25 : 22-23.

We now ask the reader in the light of the foregoing facts, if the skeptic has sustained his proposition that God is unjust or unrighteous? We think there is no way of making the Bible appear at variance with itself, except by thus wresting a few sentences from their proper connection, and a few words of explanation will at all times expose the infidel's hatred for God's word.

SHALL IT BE DONE?

DEAR BROTHER OR SISTER.—There is, it may be, this moment burning in your heart a desire to honor the Lord Jesus, and to do good. We affectionately beg leave to say, let us try and spread the truth,—glorious, mighty, amazing,—that our Lord is coming quickly! We have a great message. With it are linked illustrious, kindred truths. O how short the time is in which to work! There is scarcely the shadow of a doubt that most wonderful and important events are before us. We look for them this very year.

We are looking constantly, and with intense expectation. In Europe, in America, everywhere, are great commotions, and vast changes are impending. We are deeply impressed with this truth. We feel exceedingly confident that you will realize the truth of these words in a very short space. Now, will you not help to prepare a people for the Lord? Among other things, can you not get one more subscriber to the Crisis,—at least one? May you not thus do a special good, at a time of special interest? Is not the truth special and precious? There ought to be a million copies of papers in America sounding aloud the tidings of the tremendous crisis of the world, now arriving. We humbly and kindly ask you, therefore, to aid in doing something. And do it quickly, we entreat you, for there is no time to lose. Can not the least and feeblest reader do something? Let us not stop short of the great aim to double the circulation of the Crisis. We dislike special appeals, but a special exigency justifies and demands a special effort. Let our motto be, By the grace of God, and to the glory of God.

ST. LOUIS MISSION.

The friends of Missions, especially that of St. Louis, will find an interesting and important article in this paper from Dr. H. Beadle. Bro. and Sr. Beadle embraced the "blessed hope" during our tent-meeting in Washington, in 1867, and afterwards moved to St. Louis, where they have done what they could to advance the cause of Christ.

The facts set forth in his article demand a candid and immediate consideration by those who have the charge of the missions, and all who are interested in their welfare; for what is true of St. Louis, is to a large extent of all others: if the missionary goes exclusively to the colored people, he can reach but few of the whites; and vice versa. It is a well-known fact that the white people at the South are now specially anxious to hear the great truths presented that we love so well. They listen with an interest similar to that manifested at the North twenty-six years ago. Shall they have a chance to hear? When they have received the truth, the colored people can be reached much easier in the same neighborhood; and much will be accomplished towards breaking down the wall of partition between them. Let us act wisely, and preach the gospel to every creature.

PERSONAL.

Bro. Wm. Sheldon has been in poor health for about a year, and has suffered much. Those who know him need nothing said in his favor to convince them of his true christian character or his ability and faithfulness as a minister of Christ. He deserves the sympathies of all the friends of Jesus.

The following information concerning his present condition is from the Voice:—

"I am recovering slowly from my attack of lung fever after being confined to my house for two weeks. Have walked out once or twice, and have about concluded to try a 'water cure' in my own county, as soon as I am a little better, though it is not a first-class establishment. I shall thereby save traveling fees, and exorbitant prices, and perhaps fail to get help; but better do that than to grasp what I can never pay for; and it is easier for ministers to get into debt, than to get out again. I may get great benefit from this institution. I intend to test it for a while, as the only available facility within my financial power."

The church in Lowell is to be favored with the labors of Bro. J. W. Thomas, commencing May 2nd. The heavy snows in Canada prevented him from visiting that country as proposed some weeks since.

IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

Next week we purpose to commence publishing another very able and interesting article from the April number of the Rainbow, relative to the origin and progress of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. It appears that some very able and devoted men in Europe are now defending the doctrine that man, in this life, is wholly mortal; and after death can never have a future life without a literal resurrection of the dead. The writer in the Rainbow shows that all the Apostolical Fathers, who were Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, believed that the wicked would be destroyed, and not live eternally in misery. They did not believe in the immortality of the soul. Polycarp, the last of the Apostolic Fathers, was martyred in A. D. 147.

The writer in the Rainbow shows that the first appearance in the Christian church of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and the eternal misery of the wicked, was not earlier than A. D. 164. We rejoice to see the truth spreading on the other continent. The Rainbow is an able monthly, published in London, 9 Paternoster Row, and edited by Dr. W. Leask.

LOWELL.

We commenced meetings in Lowell Saturday evening, April 10th. We had a precious meeting that evening. We found the church in a healthy condition, ready to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, and to make efforts to save sinners. A large number took part in the meeting, and their testimonies and prayers were truly edifying. They were short, earnest, and effective. Three rose for prayers.

Our meetings Sabbath day, April 11th, were held in Huntington Hall, which is said to hold three thousand. About one thousand were out in the morning, some hundreds more in the afternoon, and in the evening the hall was crowded to hear on the evidence that Jesus is soon coming. Notwithstanding extra seats were brought in, about a hundred were obliged to stand, and many went away. Good order prevailed. The people, even the first class, and those occupying high official relations, seem more anxious to hear on the prophetic Scriptures, and the other great truths of the Bible, than we have ever seen them since 1844. The time seems to have come, when people who wish to be saved must take a decided stand for the truth, regardless of all consequences. The impression is deep on many minds, which have not been moved till of late, that "the end of of all things is at hand," and that what is done, must be done quickly. Satan is doing all in his power to blind the people with the idea that a good time is coming, and that they need have no fears about the future. Many have settled down at ease in his destructive snare; while others are waking up to the perils of the times in which we live.

THINGS IN EUROPE.

The foreign correspondent of the Boston Journal writing from Paris, March 4th, 1869, when speaking of Napoleon's opinion of Gen. Grant, says:—

"No one who has access to the Emperor, who has any means of knowing anything about Gen. Grant, can doubt the Emperor's interest in the distinguished gentleman now at the head of the United States Government. He places Gen. Grant in the fore front of great soldiers. He regards him as one of the ablest men of the day. Those who have the best opportunities to judge, say that the Emperor regrets the position he took in regard to our civil war. He will be among the first to put himself right with the incoming administration, and restore, if it may be, the ancient cordiality. One of the most eminent of the Emperor's ministers said to Mr. Burlingame the other day: 'I am astonished at your new President; his ability to keep his own secrets is wonderful. He is the most remarkable specimen of American production in a nation of speakers. Gen. Grant is the silent man of the world.' Lord Lyons, the British Minister, expressed himself in very much the same terms. As never before, all Europe waits for the dawn of to-morrow, when the vibrations of the Atlantic cable will bring us the Inaugural and the Cabinet."

When speaking of the city of Turin, he says:—

"This is without dispute, the most beautiful city in Italy. It lies on a plain between two rivers, with a long line of the Alps on one side and fertile mountains clothed with fruit on the other. The station is the most elegant in the world. The public buildings, palaces, garrisons, galleries, museums occupy a large part of the place. The public buildings are mostly on grand squares, the entrance of which is under arches; and the whole city is arcaded and is said to be the only complete city in Italy. The palaces of the King and the national galleries are open to every one. I have been through Buckingham Palace, Windsor Castle, St. James and the Tuileries. Neither of them equal in splendor or extent the vacated Palace of Victor Emanuel. When he vacated Turin and made Florence his capital, it is difficult to see what he took with him, seeing he left so much behind. So near is Turin to the French boundary that a large army is stationed here. Soldiers of every grade, wearing every conceivable kind of uniform, and priests in uniform meet one everywhere, not as single spies, but in battalions. The priests and the nuns do not walk with the quiet downcast look of America, but with a stately step and head up, as if they were at home.

SOULS IN PARADISE.

The belief is quite common, that at death the souls of good men go to Paradise, where they remain as in a kind of half-way house, in a conscious state, waiting for the time when Christ shall come and raise the dead bodies and let these souls from paradise go into them again. The greatest objection to this view is, that we do not know of a single passage of Scripture that teaches such a doctrine; but many that teach the opposite.

At a terrible collision of two steamers on the Ohio river, last December, two ministers were killed. At a meeting of ministers for the purpose of expressing their sympathy with the bereaved friends, a letter was read from the Bishop, in which we find the following:—

"'God's judgments are a great deep.' His ways are far above out of sight. It pleased him, whose faithful servant he was, to translate him almost as by a chariot of fire. He is not, because God took him."

"Dear brethren, we cannot mourn for our beloved brother, as those who have no hope, for we have every confidence that his ransomed soul rests in the Paradise of God. But that dreadful midnight scene sends its warning voice to us. Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." "Let us each one as in the sight of God trim our lamps, gird up our loins, watch unto prayer, so that when death shall whisper to us, 'Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to to meet him,' we may be ready to obey the summons."

Is it not strange that any Bible reader should believe that "the Son of man" came when those steamers came in collision and killed those ministers? We do not find in the whole Bible any intimation that Christ came at death. If he does, then he must have come millions of times before the first advent.

WELL DONE.

The following decision of the young ladies in Dover is worthy of the consideration of all who wish to improve society, and prevent crime and misery:—

"The young ladies of Dover, Ind., have formed a Society for the redemption of young men from bad habits. Each of the members has pledged herself not to receive the attentions of any young man who uses liquor, tobacco, or profane language."

But few are aware of the moral, social, and intellectual evils arising from the use of tobacco and liquor. They blunt the moral, social and intellectual faculties, and at the same time lead the victim to think he is actually improving himself by their use. They are among the choice instruments of Satan to fit men for his service. Let every young lady come to the same decision as those in Dover, and happy results would follow.

INFORMATION.

As many are sending for our Discussion with Dr. Litch on the punishment of the wicked, we would inform them that it is out of print. We have the discussion between Grant and Clayton on the same subject.

"THE IMPERIALIST."—Our readers will find in this week's Crisis a most significant prospectus of a new paper, the first number of which is just issued. It is ominous of coming events.

"CHURCH NAMES."—We commend to our readers Bro. G. W. Turner's article on church names.

THE PRERIDENT'S POWER.

It is very evident that the President is receiving almost unlimited power. He may yet have abundant reason for its exercise. Some important changes in political matters appear to be near at hand. When speaking of the power given to the President, the Boston Journal of April 12th, says:—

"Congress has voluntarily committed to the hands of the President the whole governmental control of the still outstanding question of reconstruction, and has besides put at his disposal $2,000,000 to be used at his discretion in dealing with the Indian tribes of the West. Neither President Washington, in the meridian of his popularity, nor President Jackson, when his word was law with the then invincible Democratic party, was ever clothed with such a degree of responsibility as this."

NO GOD.

In answer to a question concerning the nature of our heavenly Father, a spirit says, as recorded in the Banner of Light, Jan. 23d, 1869:—

"God, the universal spirit, is indeed without any special form. Having all forms, it can claim none as a speciality. Living and acting through every different degree of matter, it can claim no one degree more than another."

It will be noticed that the Spirit uses the neuter pronoun "it" to represent the God of the Spiritualists. When they speak of God, they do not mean the God of the Bible, but one conjured up by the demons.

QUERIES.

BRO. GRANT:—We read in Dan. 2: 44, as follows:—"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." Is the kingdom spoken of here yet in the future, or is it already "set up"? (1) If it is yet to come, what is the meaning of the expression, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom"? (2) If the term "these kings" means the rulers of the four kingdoms that were to arise on the earth, does it not refute the idea that the kingdom is yet to be set up? (3) Is it not evident that in the days of these kings does not mean after? (4) And still further, it was to break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms. How could this be done except it (the kingdom) was first set up? (5) Please let us have your opinion on this subject and greatly oblige the writer, if no one else. Yours, Bridgton, Me. JOHN C. BOWERS.

(1.) We have no doubts but that the kingdom is yet future. We shall not have the kingdom set up before the King is present himself. Satan is ruling in the kingdoms now in the world, and they are very properly symbolized by the wild beasts in Daniel's prophecy. The Savior will not engage in a copartnership with the Devil, for a joint reign over the kingdoms of the world.

(2.) We understand the expression, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom," to mean that before the last remnants of the old Roman empire are gone, "the God of heaven" will begin the work of setting up his everlasting kingdom. We do not understand that the whole work will be accomplished in a moment; but a certain time will be allotted for this purpose. The work will commence before the Roman power is blotted out; but it will be when it is in a weak condition, as compared with its former greatness. When we get down the stream of time to the last part of the history of the divided state of the Roman empire, we may know that we are near the time when "the God of heaven" will "set up a kingdom." It will be "in the days of these kings," but not in copartnership with them. They will be destroyed in the process of setting up the kingdom of God.

(3.) We do not believe that "'these kings' means the rulers of the four kingdoms that were to arise on the earth," but the kings connected with the last divisions of the fourth kingdom. The language is very plain on this point. After speaking of the rise of the "fourth kingdom," the prophet says, "the kingdom shall be divided." Then, "in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom"; i. e., before their kingdoms come to an end, the Lord will appear to set up his kingdom.

(4.) "In the days of these kings" must mean that while they are in existence, Christ comes to put an end to them, by dashing "them in pieces like a potter's vessel."

(5.) The breaking in pieces and consumption of "all these kingdoms" does not take place till after the coming of Christ, when he appears to set up the everlasting kingdom; but he does not allow the corrupt kingdoms of this world to stand as his rivals long after he comes.

THE BEST SOAP.

It is quite an object in a family to have good soap. Having tried various kinds, which were highly recommended, we have become fully satisfied, after using it for several years, that the "Excelsior Soap," manufactured by Bro. E. G. Kingsbury, Chelsea, Mass., is the best for washing, and all other household purposes, of any we have ever tried; and take pleasure in recommending it to all our friends.

☞ We learn that Bro. Hook is still pressing the battle at the Theatre Comique, with good success.

GERMAN TRACTS.

We have received from Bro. L. Reimer, of Philadelphia, the following German tracts, viz:—

1. "The Hope of the Dead in Christ."
2. "The Future Doom of the Ungodly."
3. "What is Man?"
4. "Answer to the Charge of Heresy."
5. "Rich Man and Lazarus."

Some of our brethren have inquired where they could get these little pointers, ☞ for book marks to stick on the leaves of their Bibles, to point to the passages they want to refer to. For the accomodation of all such, we have some for sale at the office. Price, a card of twelve for 25 cts. AG'T.

For the World's Crisis

DAYS OF SORROW.

"Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not."—JOB 14: 1-2.

Among all the writings of the Scriptures, there is no truer saying than the one above quoted. From the cradle to old age, there is something to mar the peace of all. The child has its trials in youth, and when we arrive to manhood they increase, and in middle life we are not exempt. Look to the East, and it is trouble. Cast the eye to the West; it is there also. To the North and South, and behold it is there. In childhood we are apt to think that riper years are going to bring better days, and with them much comfort; but who has found it? Where is the man or woman that has had their anticipations met? So far as my experience goes, I must say I never have had, or found, what I have anticipated. Some say they would like to know what their fortune is to be beforehand. I can not say that I do. I am well satisfied that there is but one way for man to be happy in this world, and that is to be just and good. If you have enjoyment, it must be to-day. To-morrow will not bring it.

True happiness is not found in nature's garden. It is true there are pleasures in the world; there are pleasures in sin; but they last but a moment, and they vanish. True happiness is only found in Christ. In him alone can we find rest and comfort. In the world we have tribulation; in Christ peace. Glory to God for the peace there is in believing, and the joy there is in the Holy Ghost.

Job was a man of faith. He was not ashamed to let the world know what he believed. He did not believe that he was going to heaven at death. He said that man would lie down and rise not until the heavens should be no more, and then he would come forth. He said that he knew that his Redeemer lived, and that he would stand on the earth in the latter day, and in his flesh he should see him.

Well, brethren, that is just as I understand it. I believe what the Lord says, and if it was not for this hope, I should sink; but glory to God, we shall get through soon. Your brother in Christ, J. A. CLEAVELAND.

For the World's Crisis.

"DIDN'T YOU THINK?"

During the revival at S——, a little girl of some eight or ten summers went to the anxious seats unobserved by her mother. That mother rose, and amid loud tears interceded for several older children than the one referred to, but made no mention of this one, nor expressed one anxious thought for her. The meeting closed, but this little girl could not forget that her mother made no request for her, and running to her parent's arms she said, "Mother, didn't you think of me?"

This little incident is too suggestive to pass by in silence. How many parents wait till their children are fully grown before they become anxious for them. The feeling is too general that children cannot be christians. Hence parents leave the most important years of a child's mind to be sown with tares, till too late they wake to their mistake. Children can feel sinful. They can feel their need of Christ, as this one did. They can know and love Jesus too.

Parents, have you any little child, which you have neglected in your prayers, in your anxieties, in your exhortations, in your religious instructions, who may come to you saying, "Mother, didn't you think of me?"

BRO. WADSWORTH.

I have this day received a letter from Bro. Wadsworth. He is in Mississippi, on his way here; but is sick, and cannot get here until he is better. He thinks he may arrive here in twelve days.

I wish to say to the brethren and sisters that this faithful and indefatigable servant of Christ needs help. He is deserving of our sympathy and aid. Anything sent to him here will be received by him. I subjoin his letter. I. I. LESLIE.

Memphis, April 14th, 1669.

"BY THE WAYSIDE.

Dear Bro. Leslie:—I think I shall be with you in about twelve days. I would be glad to see Bro. Jackson. I shall not have time to go where he lives, for I want to hurry on to Carolina. I am very sick to-day. Yesterday I could not walk twenty yards, but bless God, his grace is sufficient. I have had many ups and downs since I was with you. My trials become more every day. The colored people seem to be my best friends. I would like to add more, but I am so weak I must close. Pray for me. Yours in much love, J. B. WADSWORTH.

For the World's Crisis.

CHURCH NAMES.

Does an unscriptural name tend to divide God's flock? We answer, Yes, as well as an unscriptural position, in regard to any point, tends to distract, mystify and bewilder the mind. The church of God is one, and so are her interests. Says Jesus, "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." One reason why the church of God has lost her power over the world, is because it is so divided.

But I commenced to say a few words in reference to the name, as one cause for divisions and sectarian parties. To illustrate: Suppose we ask one who by his godly walk and holy conversation we believe to be a disciple of Jesus, Are you a Methodist, or a Baptist, or a Presbyterian, or an Adventist, or an Episcopalian, or any other man-made name? he might in all good conscience answer, No. But ask him, Are you a Christian? "I hope I am." Are you a disciple of Christ? "I am trying to live so as to be a true disciple of Jesus." Do you belong to the church of God? "I trust I do, and that my name is in the book of life." And thus would be the answer of all true christians the world over. Then why take any other than a Bible name to designate a child of God? "The church of God" is the most prominent Bible name, and the most appropriate. Paul addresses his letter (1 Cor. 1: 1-2), "Unto the church of God which is at Corinth"; which you will see, by reading the connection, embraced not only all christians at Corinth, but all everywhere. Again, 1 Cor. 10: 32, we read, "Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God." "Or despise ye the church of God." 1 Cor. 11: 22. "Because I persecuted the church of God."—1 Cor. 15: 9. "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth."—2 Cor. 1: 1. "How that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God."—Gal. 1: 13. "But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth."—1 Tim. 3: 15. "How shall he take care of the church of God?"—1 Tim. 3: 5. "Feed the church of God."—Acts 20: 28.

We have now referred to nine passages of Scripture, where the body of believers is called the "church of God"; and I ask, Where can any one get a more appropriate name for God's people? Though we search the universe through, it can not be found. It is in God we live, move, and have our being. "For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people; wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." God the Father has undertaken through Jesus Christ his Son, in accordance with the blessed truths of the gospel, to gather out of the fallen sons and daughters of Adam a people to praise him through all eternity; and when the work is all done, Jesus, as the head of the church, will say, Here, Father, are those whom thou hast given me; and God will be all in all throughout eternity.

I will not lengthen these remarks at present, only to say that we profess to be a Bible people, and we feel to rejoice in view of what we have gained by contending earnestly for the word; but in taking the name of "Advent church," or any other, beside the true and most prominent Bible name, are we not so far departing from the "old paths," and taking the first step to cause divisions among that people for whom Jesus prayed that they might be one? From your Bro. in Christ, trying to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Jesus, GEO. W. TURNER.

For the World's Crisis.

WAIFS FROM THE STAR-OF-HOPE MISSION.

It was a cold, bleak night; the wind howled fiercely as the missionaries started out with their basket of beans and meal, and bag of crackers, to relieve the destitute and suffering family of a poor dying woman. It had been a long, hard day at the Mission. Beside our many other duties, we had dispensed food and clothing, more or less, from the time we first seated ourselves for breakfast, till late in the evening. Then, too, those missionaries had gone up and down garrets and cellars, till it seemed every bone in their bodies ached. But new demands were made upon their already over-taxed energies, and however optional or conditional it may be with the dear ones, who enjoy home comforts, the duties of missionaries are imperative. When a call comes to visit the sick and dying, the destitute and starving, we dare not pray to be excused. So having drawn a few shillings from private purses, bonnets and cloaks were donned, and off started the mission sister in haste to relieve the suffering ones; also to return in season for our meeting. As the work before us is great, it is necessary that every one be at her post. And that night in particular, there was great need of earnestness, for there were but two souls at the altar, and there was conviction enough resting upon the people for more than a score to flock to its holy retreat. But the people here will resist any amount of conviction. Yet not willing that any should be lost, if by becoming all things to all men, we could by any means save some, we carried the altar to them in the rear of the house, where they knelt in humility, and tears of penitence flowed freely. We lingered till eleven o'clock, and closed, weary with the labors of the day.

But to the dying woman. We found her lamp of life flickering in its socket; her dying features illuminated with a faint smile of recognition as her lustrous eyes turned toward us. Some two months ago, we were sent for to visit her. We found her sinking in consumption, and without hope in Christ; yet was desirous of becoming a christian. She was intelligent, and knew what she was about; but her physical sufferings were so great as to render it almost impossible to give herself to the Lord. We prayed earnestly that the Lord would rebuke disease and keep it under restraint till she could become a christian. Thanks to our kind Father, he gave us all we asked for. He held disease in check till she found the Savior precious to her, and she became strong in the Lord; then he allowed the insidious disease to progress with rapid strides, till she sank in death. While grappling with the enemy, she whispered, "Jesus," till past speaking, then lifted her fingers in honor of him she loved. We visited her many times, and were greatly interested in her. We used always to sing, "If I in thy likeness, O Lord, may awake." It would soothe poor Clara so much, and she would exclaim, with a smile, "Oh yes, thank Jesus, I shall be satisfied then." We trust Clara will awake in his likeness soon.

There are some very striking instances of God's care over these poor oppressed creatures; of which I will mention but one. An intelligent but unlettered woman, whom we had visited and labored with from time to time, was feeling her need of a Savior, but too proud and high strung to yield. She and her husband, like thousands of poor people in New York, were out of work, and had been all winter, and to get an honest livelihood, had pawned one article of clothing after another, till scarcely a whole garment remained. We were impressed to tell them that when they gave their hearts to the Lord he would find them a situation; and we could see no door of relief open short of that. They viewed it quite incredulously at first, not knowing the power of God. But conviction began to fasten itself upon them more fully, and that night she came out to meeting, but the husband was not willing to come with his tattered garments. She was slain of the Lord, and when she was made alive again, and we lifted her prostrate from the floor, her whisperings of "hallelujah" grew more and more audible, till shouts of praise, and the downward beat of the dancing feet woke the echoes of the whole Mission, and the glory of the Lord filled the whole house, and presented a scene not for a painter's, but an angle's eye.

That was a mighty hour, and the work a mighty work. The Lord she found was not only her Savior, but also her Teacher; for he taught her to read in two or three days, at which time we visited her, and with her face glownig with a heavenly radiance, she brought, us a bundle of tracts which we had left there from time to time, and said, "See, I have read these all through." Knowing she had not been able to read at all we asked, "But who taught you to read?" With the same heavenly smile, she said, "My Father, bless his name; and I have read them all through since I was converted." In obedience to our request, she took Bro. Hastings' tract, "The second appearing of this same Jesus," and read the first page till we were satisfied, and told her it was sufficient. You who have read that tract, know there are long, hard words, at least for beginners; but she read them accurately. We asked her who told her how to pronounce those hard words? She replied:—"The Lord alone. When I came to them, I could not imagine what they were, or what they sounded like; then I would lift my heart to the Lord, and ask him to teach me, and every time he told me just what I have called them now." We told her they were right, and we were satisfied it was all of the Lord, and we were giving glory to his dear name; when she exclaimed,—"But the Lord has done more than this for me since I gave myself to him."

"My husband prays with me, and is seeking the Lord earnestly; and do you believe it? we have both got a situation on a steamboat, and it is all of the Lord." The evidence of his providential care over his little ones accumulated so fast, we could only bow around the newly created altar, and offer our tribute of thanksgiving and praise for his wonderful dealings with this dear people. These are indeed but few of the many incidental sun-beams which glance upon the otherwise shadowy picture of missionary life.

BRO. GEO. W. HOWARD, Stowe, Me., April 13th, writes:—"The good Lord is reviving his work in this place. Some three or four have started for the kingdom. The brethren are awake in the cause. Bro. E. Johnson was with us last Sabbath. We had a good time in the Lord. The Spirit came with power. Bro. J. is one of God's dear children."

For the World's Crisis.

BELIEVING ON CHRIST.

What is it that one does in becoming a Christian? What is that one thing, the doing of which makes him a Christian? It is not "seeking religion." Religion is not to be sought as an object, but possessed and practiced as a life; and to do the will of God as this is made known in the gospel, is religion.

It is not "seeking a hope." The christian's hope is a state of expectation, based upon certain facts. It springs up where these facts exist, but cannot be conjured into existence by seeking and striving. Where there is repentance for sin, faith in Christ, love to God, then hope is warranted by divine promise. But getting a hope is not the thing to be aimed at in becoming a christian.

Mending one's ways is not the specific thing to be done. There must be repentance; there must be amendment; there must be a turning from sin. But the essential thing in becoming a christian, while it inolves all this, is, nevertheless, something distinct from this. The gospel says, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." This is a single request, and a very simple act. Yet many fail of this simple thing, while they do, or try to do, many other things which they imagine necessary to becoming a christian. If we can point the serious, inquiring reader to just the thing to be done, we may leave him rejoicing in a hope which he has sought in vain.

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." There is an emphasis in that little word "on." One may believe sound doctrine concerning Christ, but not have saving faith. Right doctrine is important, since a misconception of the character and work of Christ may mislead the mind in the act and the object of faith. But holding the true faith concerning Christ may fall short of the act of faith, which the gospel requires.

Now is it enough that one believes in Christ? You may believe in the reality of his mission, in his representations of himself, in his work of atonement, in his remedial power in the world,—believe in him as the only appointed Savior of man, and yet come short of the faith that saves. But believing on Christ carries with it the act of the will; this is to cast yourself on Jesus for forgiveness, for succor, for support; to cast one's self upon him as the personal Redeemer, as the trusted Savior, as the only help and hope; to lean upon him for guidance, counsel, strength, and salvation.

Till the mind reaches this point of simple, absolute commitment, the will, the affections, the whole man going with the act, the real work of faith is not begun. First of all and always, Believe on Christ!

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. M. N. JORDAN, Pay Sippi, Wis., March 16th, writes:—"I started from my home the first of Jan. for Pleasant Valley, in Minn. The first night I stopped at Waupeka with Bro. Burnham, a faithful laborer in the cause of truth. I found some friends there. Next to Stevens' Point. There I found a few friends. Next to Nealsville. There are a few friends of the truth, but no workers. Next to Augusta, where I found Bro. Turner laboring hard for the salvation of sinners. I visited Elder Fish, a Baptist preacher. He had been preaching three weeks. He said he wanted us to help him; but his terms were such we could not. We did intend to have a series of meetings there, but the friends thought it best to stop until he was done. There are some warm-hearted friends in that place. Next to Hudson one hundred miles, where I found Sister Slater and some other friends. There was a good interest in the cause of truth. They are looking for Jesus. May God bless them.

Next to Minneapolis, where I found Bro. Fassett and Bro. Reed laboring hard for the cause of Christ. There is a good church, and they are building a house of worship. From thence to Lily Pond, thirty-five miles from Minneapolis, where I found Bro. N. Bailey. I preached there four times. They appear to have made a full consecration to the service of God. From there to Monticello, five miles, where I found Bro. L. C. Collins. He is the brother who was requested to surrender his parchment as a minister of the gospel in the M. E. church, in the Minnesota Annual Conference last fall. He is a faithful disciple of Jesus. He is a shining light, that can not be hid by the cry of heresy. There is a good church in that place, and still they come. They are coming out from modern churches daily. They intend to build a meeting-house next summer.

Next to Pleasant Valley, nine miles. I found a few believers in the blessed hope.

I have returned to my home again, ready to go out wherever I can do good. Brethren, let us labor for Jesus. 'Ye are the light of the world.' May God forbid we should hide our light. Let us cleanse ourselves from all sin, and present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God. May God help us to do our duty as men who are looking, watching and praying for Jesus to come and redeem his children from this sin-cursed earth. Pray for me, brethren and sisters, that I may be found of him without spot and blameless, when he shall come to establish his kingdom."

SR. M. H. RICHARDSON, Conesus Centre, N. Y., writes:—"Ever since that memorable day in which the Spirit of the Lord was poured out without measure in answer to my unworthy prayer, I have had an intense desire to herald to the waiting church what great things God has done for my soul, in showing me his truth, which had been hidden from mine eyes. New light, like an eternal sea of radiance flows in, and I rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, that when this shadow was on my heart, he opened the windows of heaven and poured in the light of his everlasting love. I have a desire that will not rest short of the fulfillment, not only to tell what Christ hath done for me, but to lift my voice against the prevailing sins of the professed people of God. I would not censure, for that is not my way of teaching Christ.

A short time after God had revealed to me his truth, after a season of prayer, I was earnestly engaged in my mind, pressed in spirit, and asking myself how I could best glorify and honor him who had lain down his life for me, and now in these last days had manifested himself to me in taking away the scales from mine eyes, and enabling me to see things as they are, my mind instinctively turned to my dress. I knew I did not dress like a stranger and pilgrim, but more like a citizen of the country I inhabit. The more I thought, the more the conviction pressed itself upon me, that there must be a radical change in this also. I resolved in my mind to give up all for God; to dispense with all useless modes of dress. I was musing deeply, when suddenly these four words were distinctly spoken in my hearing,—'Wear what is necessary,' just as though some one sat near me and whispered them lovingly to me. I have never doubted but it was the Spirit of God, which searcheth the deep things of the heart, and bringeth them to light. It could not have been Satan, for in the strength of him who imparted to me so much of his Spirit, I had resisted the tempter, and he had fled. It could not have been any human agency, for I was all alone with God; not a soul was in the house but myself, nor about it.

I am anxious to win souls to Christ. This is the moving principle of my life; the last thing when slumber seals my eyes, or the dawning of each day wakes me to conscious existence; and I am often lost in amazement at the constant pressure that rests upon me from day to day of the Spirit's influence.

Beloved in the Lord, countless blessings have been poured out upon me since I obeyed the voice of the Lord in believing the truth; and conspicuous among these was the reception of the Crisis to my hands, my home, my heart. O how grateful to God was I for this token of his watchful care for me, in sending this ray of light to my dwelling. It was to me 'the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.' I rejoice, and give God thanks for the kindness shown me by your most noble and praiseworthy Society, for extending to the poor this most notable expounder of the word of life; and I shall ever cherish feelings of gratitude to God, that he ever put it in the hearts of brother and sister Farnsworth to get it for me. How the tables are turned. Formerly, I resisted every effort to induce me to read any thing from what I then supposed to be a deluded people. I verily believe my reading of any thing that savored of what the Crisis advocates would not exceed the limits of one page of your paper; but when God converted me, I picked up every scrap I could find, and placed them together in a box."

Bro. E. O. Allen, Springfield, Ms., April 5th, writes:—"Peace be unto you in your labor of love in conducting the Crisis with the words and spirit of peace, with which its pages come laden to the household of faith, and to all that will read with minds desiring peace. May all be profited by reading its rich words of peace and good will to men. Truly peace is an indispensable attribute of the gospel. It produces forbearance, long-suffering, meekness, patience, and all other christian graces needful for the overcomer. Christ breathed the spirit of peace in all his words of comfort to his people; and when about to part with them, to be crucified, he spake these words: 'Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.'—John 14: 27. And let it 'rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful.' Col. 3: 15. It is the ruling principle of love that must govern, or we cannot be sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty."

Bro. J. A. Cleaveland, Tunbridge, writes: "I just wish to say that I am still in the field, and am trying to do my Master's bidding. I am preaching one half of the time at Marshfield, Vt., and am happy to say the Lord has blessed our labors there the past autumn and this winter. Quite a good number have found the Savior. One over fifty years old, and other men and their companions have found peace in believing. A good number of children also have been made happy in the love of God. The work is still going on. There is quite a large Universalist church there, who worship in the same house that we do. We find them very kind. Although they do not see things as we do, yet they come out to hear for themselves.

We have organized a church there. I think we shall get about twenty-five to take hold with us. There is a right kind of a feeling. The brethren wish to do something, and where there is a will there is a way. For one, I like to see things in order. Brethren, we want your prayers that God may still bless us at Marshfield.

I am spending the other half of my time anywhere the Lord calls. We are having good meetings everywhere we go. Had an excellent meeting with the brethren at South Troy, Vt. I never witnessed a freer spirit in my life. The brethren need help there. I hope the preaching brethren who go that way will call. They will find good homes with Brn. C. V. Coburn, Spaulding, Saunders, and others.

Come, my preaching brethren, get out of the cities. Come back into this northern country. Come, there is room enough for a hundred good fresh hands. Who will come?"

Bro. E. H. Eggleston, Spring Mills, N. Y., March 27th, writes:—"I am still trying to serve the Lord and labor in his vineyard. The Lord has blessed me much of late, while trying to proclaim his truth. Praise the Lord, some are willing to listen to the truth, and believe and obey it. We humbly trust a few precious souls have been converted to God and his truth in this vicinity, and backsliders have been reclaimed. A number expect to go forward in baptism soon.

Brethren and sisters, we are living in perilous times. We need much of the grace of God. How much we need the Spirit of Jesus in our hearts to help us, that we may be useful in our Master's cause. Let us deny ourselves of every thing that is not right in his sight, and 'be diligent, that' we 'may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless.'"

Bro. A. Walker, Rockville, Me., March 22d, writes:—"I have been for a little while with Bro. Hall, who has been laboring in these parts some time, but is now holding meetings in Rockville, preaching the plain, practical truths of the gospel. Under these, every ism falls, and the people are left without a shelter from the mighty storm that is coming. It had a powerful effect on the people here. The whole place is moved, sinners cry for mercy, backsliders are returning, while the power of God is manifest. Dear children, let us love God, and keep his word, that we may have a right to the tree of life."

A NEW SERIES OF TRACTS NEARLY READY.

We are preparing a series of sixteen four page tracts, which we call "Gems." Beautiful and telling tracts in behalf of "the present truth." They are "letter size," and will make the best "Leaflets for Letters" ever published. But they will also be suitable for general distribution on the cars, on the road, in hotels, stages, tent, camp, and all other meetings; in short, they are calculated to be effective and efficient in any and every place where a tract can be used. Scarce any will refuse to read them. Mostly Scripture. Short, pointed, and telling. They are as follows:

1. Rules to Promote Christian Harmony.	9. The Prayer-meeting.
2. Immortality.	10. The Second Advent.
3. Worms, and their Work.	11. A Little While.
4. Baptism.	12. Is Evil Eternal?
5. The Sinner's Doom.	13. The Resurrection.
6. Everlasting Fire.	14. Our Creed and Covenant.
7. Intermediate State.	15. ....
8. Saint's Inheritance.	16. ....

This series will soon be completed. Packages of 384 pp., 20 cts. Extra and colored paper, 30 and 35 cts. Let no Advent-Christian be without a supply. Special terms for large quantities.

SOMETHING NEW.

We are getting out a series of unique tracts in an entirely new form. Sure to command attention. The first of the series is A Wonderful Dream. A brief, but clear and convincing exposition of the Image of Dan. 2; together with much other testimony as to the times we live in, and our duty. These tracts will be letter size, and contain nearly as much matter as a twelve page tract, but in an entirely different form, being in the shape of a railway circular. Colored paper, 20 cents a dozen; $1.00 a hundred. Ready soon.

The True Hope of the Church; or, The History and Doctrine of the Millennium. By Henry Dana Ward. In three parts.

Part I. The Heavenly Millennium—Its Acceptance by the Ancient Church—Perversion of the Doctrine, and Fall of the Millenaries in the Fourth Century.

Part II. The Reformation; The Anabaptists; The Augsburg Confession; The English Reformers; The Ancient Doctrine Partially Revived; New Perversions; Whitby, Edwards, Hopkins, "Millenists."

Part III. The Analogy of Faith; The True Millennium not of this World; Modern Millenism a Contradiction of the Scriptures; Scripture its own Interpreter; Scripture Synchronisms; Summing Up; Jesus and the Resurrection our only Hope.

This work will prove one of great value and deep interest to a waiting church. It demonstrates the fallacy of the hope indulged by the professed church of this day, of a temporal millennium, or universal triumph of the church by the gospel in this world, and shows the true millennium, anticipated since the fall, to be the eternal kingdom, introduced by the second personal advent of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. The work will contain 130 pp., more or less, and will be issued soon.

The Doctrine of Immortality. This is the title of a new work, the manuscript of which is nearly ready, by James H. Whitmore, of Ypsilanti, Mich., which we hope to issue early this spring. A brother in the ministry who has examined the MS. says: "It is a work of sterling merit; original in its conception and plan; masterly in execution; neither cumbrous nor prolix, yet comprehensive and convincing. In argument, both Scriptural and metaphysical, it is sound and pithy. It shows extensive research, and is just such a work as has long been demanded among us. Just the book for the times, on this subject."

Besides the above, we announce a small pamphlet from the pen of Bro. E. Royce, entitled Restitution, a work entering upon a hitherto unoccupied field in Advent literature, being in part devoted to the typology of the patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations, and their relations to the gospel dispensation and the eternal ages. It will be a rich treat, and awaken new thought and research even among those who may not receive all his ideas.

We have also the MS. of a little tract on the all-important question, What must I do to be saved? from the pen of Bro. J. R. Preston—a thoroughly practical tract, yet one that will give clear doctrinal views. We have many tracts styled practical in these days, so diluted with theological water as scarcely to taste of the gospel. The salvation they talk of is as indefinite as it is incomprehensible. We want something better; the best the word of life affords.

We also have the permission of the Rev. Samuel Minton, of Eaton Chapel, London, Eng., to republish his most interesting work, "The Glory of Christ: in the creation and reconciliation of all things unto himself." Mr. M. is a minister of the Church of England, and his work will deeply interest all into whose hands it may fall, with its convincing argument against the eternity of evil.

We have in preparation a pamphlet, by Eld. Joshua V. Himes, giving his views and experience on the Life and Death Question, of which further notice will be given hereafter.

A pamphlet edition of T. M. Preble's crushing review of Andrew's pretended History of the Sabbath, will be issued soon.

Bro. Sheldon has several new works blocked out, and will prepare them for the press as soon as his health will allow.

Obituaries.

Jarvis. Died in Shipton, P. Q., March 31st, 1869, Elizabeth Jarvis, wife of Bro. Edward Jarvis, aged sixty-two years.

For seventeen years, our much esteemed sister believed and loved those Bible truths which distinguish us as a people; and so nobly maintained and defended by the "World's Crisis," of which she was an earnest reader, and to her a peculiar weekly treasure. She never hid her face from the truth, when the reproachful slur was cast upon it. Her hope was in the coming of Christ, and an early birth from the grave to immortality and eternal life. So conscientious was she, up to the dying hour, that she scrupulously refused the medicine prescribed by the physician to stupify and benumb the sense of pain, so that nothing might intervene between her and a sense of the divine presence. For a length of time past, she had promised the Lord to abandon tea, but in her sickness had been persuaded to take a little, but this was followed by remorse, and caused her much grief.

In a word, she was a good woman, and the Lord owned her on this side of death, and pointed her out to others. She sleeps in Jesus. J. Porter.

York. Died in Campton, N. H., March 13th, Garrie E., eldest daughter of Bro. Oscar and Sr. Mary York, aged seventeen years and four months. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. D. M. Leavitt, from Job 14: 14, assisted by John H. Evans and John B. Brown. J. H. Evans.

Swasey. Died in East Cabot, December 1st, Anna Swasey, aged seventy years, wife of Parker Swasey.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Paris, April 13. The Emperor has ordered that the increased pension to the surviving soldiers of the Republic and the First Empire date from April 15th, in commemoration of the centenary of the birth of Napoleon 1st.

Lisbon, April 16. A military rising is feared in Oporto, and the strictest precautions are being taken by the Government.

Rome, April 17. It is rumored that the Emperor Napoleon has ordered the evacuation of Rome by the French troops in June.

Madid, April 18. The building of gunboats for service in the waters of Cuba is going on with great expedition, and it is expected that they will be completed and ready to sail before the end of Jund next.

DOMESTIC.

Baltimore, April 11. A salute of fifty guns was fired yesterday evening from Federal Hill, by the German Catholics, in honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the Priesthood of Pope Pius IX, and festivals were held in all Catholic Churches to-day in commemoration of the event.

Jews in China.—A correspondent of the Jewish Times says that he made a visit three years ago to a community of Jews, three or four hundred in number, in the heart of China. Extreme poverty had compelled them to sell their synagogue, to be pulled down for the stone and timber it contained. They had preserved their faith and worship for more than two thousand years, until the troubles following the outbreak of civil war robbed them almost of the means of existence. Now it is forty years since their last Rabbi died, and no one remains among them who has any knowledge of Hebrew. Without assistance to rebuild their synagogue and re-establish education and worship, the little community must at last perish.—Boston Journal.

The Aurora Borealis.—A very beautiful and singular display of the Aurora Borealis was visible from seven to twelve o'clock April 15th. Early in the evening the phenomenon presented some very unusual features. Instead of looking to the northern horizon for the chief point of illumination, the centre of it seemed to be right overhead, or, in fact, somewhat inclined toward the southern horizon. From this centre incessant flashes and scintillations of light, occasionally of greenish and purplish hues, shot backward and forward, sometimes with the brilliancy and rapidity of summer lightning. The effect was very fine, and many thousands delighted themselves in witnessing the display.

The telegraph reports remarkable Aurora displays all over the country. In many instances telegraphers worked their instruments without the aid of batteries.

From Bad to Worse.—We have letters from the City of Mexico, from various sources, down to Feb. 28th, all of which concur in representing the country in about as wretched a condition as it ever was in before the days of "the Empire." Anarchy prevails almost everywhere, where there are no government troops stationed, with highway robbery, and other outrages, without number. Official statements show that in the district of Mexico city alone, during the past twelve months, no fewer than 24,936 criminals of various grades were in prison,—that is to say, something near, or over, ten per cent. of the entire population. This simple fact affords a fearful picture of the existing condition of society. What is to become of such a country, socially, politically, or any other way, who can tell?

The Suez Canal.—M. de Lesseps's great undertaking is rapidly approaching completion. At eleven o'clock on Thursday, in the presence of the Viceroy of Egypt, a ceremony was performed which may fairly be considered as the beginning of the end. The waters of the Mediterranean were admitted into the Bitter Lakes—a wide and shallow natural series of excavations through the middle of which the canal passes. The Bitter Lakes are remote from the Mediterranean end of the canal, and near the Red Sea. M. de Lesseps's calculation that the whole canal will finally be opened in October, is supported by the best authorities who have examined the work.

Female Preaching.—Widow Van Coot is a licensed Methodist preacher in New York, and the New York Conference, now in session, is agitated over the question of allowing her to continue in the pastoral work. It is stated as an evidence of her service to the cause of religion, that nearly two thousand persons have been converted under her ministrations during the past year, and she is represented as being veay eloquent, earnest and effective in her pulpit services. The question at issue is whether or not the Conference shall license women to preach at all. Mrs. Van Coot is said to be the only licensed female preacher of any denomination in New York.

Crime in New York.—Such is the degree of crime in New York, that the Sun of the 9th inst. says, in view of the many burglaries and bond robberies recently committed, it is proposed that the merchants and others hold a mass meeting soon and organize an independent police of men of known integrity and worth. Under the rule of the present police and private watchmen the robbers have "the freedom of the city." Several down town stores have been robbed, the police meantime concealing the facts from the newspapers.

Passing Events.

☞ The present heir apparent of Russia, according to several German papers, is said to be suffering from the same malady which carried off his elder brother two years ago at Nice, and the Emperor, apprehensive of a similar fatality, has recently convoked the Russian Senate in order to deliberate on the possibility of such an event.

☞ The revival in Washington county, N. Y., which recently began among the Methodists in North Granville, has spread into the adjoining towns, till over eight hundred have been added to the various churches, chiefly the Methodists, though the Baptist churches have received large accessions.

☞ The New York East Methodist Conference, which has just closed its session at Middletown, adopted a temperance platform which declares the church a total abstinence society, questions the propriety of the sacramental use of wine, assails tobacco, favors prohibitory laws, and condemns the employment of physicians who prescribe stimulants freely.

☞ Maple sugar is selling in Richford, Vt., from ten to thirteen cents per pound. Notwithstanding the snow is so deep in the woods a large amount will be made, and intelligence to the same effect comes from other quarters, where the crop was reported to be a certain failure.

☞ The Liberal party in Rome declare they have positive information that Italy has joined France and Austria in a treaty of alliance, and that one of the covenants provides that "the status quo shall be maintained at Rome till the death of Pius IX., when Rome shall be declared the capital of Italy.

☞ Mazzini is engaged in Republicanizing the Italian army, preparatory to the overthrow of the monarchy. Great popular discontent prevails throughout Italy, and the collection of the obnoxious bread tax causes frequent outbreaks.

☞ The largest rose bush in France is at Toulon. It covers a wall seventy-five feet long by eighteen in height, and near the root measures two feet eight inches round. In the months of April and May it produces fifty thousand roses.

☞ Railway trains in Sweden are provided with a complete medical and surgical staff, for cases of sudden sickness or accident.

☞ An Austrian letter states that, in consequence of the severe drouth which has prevailed there, one man, who had 18,000 sheep, has lost 14,000 of them.

☞ The Sultan of Turkey proposes to spend $1,500,000 in gold in the entertainment of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

☞ The proposed bridge over the East river at New York is estimated to cost $7,000,000 and to require six years for its construction. It will be a mile in length.

☞ An International Universal Exhibition is to be held in Brussels in 1870, and the site is already chosen.

☞ Naples was recently covered with a yellow dust, brought by a tempestuous southeast wind from Africa.

☞ Eighty-eight inches of snow fell at Irasburg, Vt., during last season.

☞ Peach trees are in full bloom in Cairo, Ill.

"The Imperialist."

The public and the trade are hereby informed that arrangements for the publication of "The Imperialist" are now fully completed, and the first number of this long-expected journal will be issued on Saturday, April 3d.

For the first time in the history of the United States, an American journal dares to proclaim as false, and pernicious in their influence, the Democratic dogmas of "Popular Sovereignty" and "Equality"; and to demand that, on the ruins of this unfortunate Republic, shall be reared the firm and substantial structure of an Empire.

The creed of "The Imperialist" is revolutionary: its mission to prepare the mind of the American people for the revolution that has already begun throughout the country.

The conductors of this journal believe Democracy to be a failure. Though theoretically plausible in its practical workings, it has been found totally inadequate to the wants of the American people.

We believe that the national faith, if left in the keeping of the populace, will be sullied by the sure repudiation of the national debt, and that an Imperial Government can alone protect the rights of national creditors.

We believe that an Imperial Government, in its paternal relation to the people, will care equally for all citizens, and, while guaranteeing security to the rights of capital, will jealously protect the interests of the industrial classes.

We believe that the Republic means lawlessness, corruption, insecurity to person and property, robbery of the public creditors, and civil war; that the Empire means law, order, security, public faith and peace.

This creed "The Imperialist" will advocate earnestly, fearlessly, and without compromise, and many will find in it the open expression of convictions and opinions long held and cherished in secret. Its columns will be free from the low vulgarisms which have heretofore disgraced American journalism, and in the discussion of political and social questions, will unite the high tone and thorough culture of the English weekly press with the more popular features of the best current literature of the day.

"The Imperialist" will be published weekly, on Saturday. It will be promptly forwarded to other cities, and sold by newsdealers throughout the country.

All orders and business communications may be addressed to the Imperial Publishing Company, No. 37 Mercer Street, New York City.

The New Hampshire Tent.

If time rolls on, the time for tent meetings will soon be upon us, and we wish to do all we can to feed the flock, and strengthen any who desire life in the future kingdom, and do all that the Master requires in laboring to bring sinners to Christ, that they may be saved in the day of his wrath. We believe tent-meetings, if rightly conducted, are in these last days a great means, under God, of accomplishing this blessed result. And as we wish to make arrangements in season, so as to do all we can during the time of tent-meetings, will our brethren in New Hampshire (and if we go into the regions beyond, we think that we shall not go beyond the commission), survey the field, and let us know as soon as they can where tent-meetings are desired. We wish to go into new fields what we can, but there are places where there are a few brethren who have no meeting-house, where the tent will give your neighbors and friends a good chance to hear. Our first meeting will be at Farmington Village, N. H. Brethren, will you let your alms and prayers go up before God for this object, that the truth may be carried into new places. Any who wish to help in this good work, can hand it to either of the committee; and while you are doing good in different directions, do not forget Bro. White and the tract committee, so that we may have a good supply of tracts to scatter.

My brethren, if you could see what God has wrought in Rochester, N. H., in raising up a church to wait for his Son from heaven, as the fruit of the first meeting in this tent, you would feel that it paid a thousand times for all the expense and labor. Remember we have but a short time to work, and the blessed reward will be given. As the tent will be pitched in different localities, we hope our preaching brethren will render us all the assistance they can.

T. H. Ford,
John Shorey, } Tent Committee.
J. G. Smith,

Notice.

Brethren of Orleans and Niagara Co's, N. Y., the response of those that have answered the question, "Shall we engage evangelists to employ their time in preaching the gospel, having regular appointments within our bounds?" is emphatically, "Yes." You are invited to meet at the church in Knowlesville, Saturday, Apr. 24th, 1869, at 1 o'clock p. m., to confer on the subject. It is desirable that every person in these counties and adjoining territory, that wishes to have the gospel of the kingdom preached in their neighborhood, or will assist in proclaiming the glad tidings, be present at the meeting, or be represented by delegates.

Warren Burnham.
Aaron Riggs.
Philip Thurtle.

Notice.

By invitation of the church at Collinsville, Ct., the next quarterly session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held in their hall, beginning Wednesday, April 21st, 1869. Preaching first evening. From Hartford, on the Providence and Fishkill road to Plainville; then change cars as above. Come in the Spirit.
L. F. Moore, Secretary.

Notice.

Our Brn. of this place, having engaged Metropolitan Hall, with the intention of having regular religious services every Sunday, have requested us, as their committee, to extend an invitation, through their Crisis, to our ministering brethren, who are in full faith and fellowship with the leading and prominent doctrine advocated in the above named paper, to give us a call as often as they can make it convenient. Men of deep and earnest piety are needed. The hall being under our control, can be opened any time during the week, whenever any of the brethren wish to send an appointment.

For the World's Crisis.

I'M WEARY OF EARTH.

I'm weary of earth with its strifes and its tears,
And weary of life with its troubles and fears;
I long for the home of the pure and the blest,—
The "hope of the righteous,"—the saints' quiet "rest."

I'm weary of sinning, corruption, and pride,
Of trials unnumbered on life's troubled tide;
The shades of the future, portentous of woe,
Give no sign of that "gladness" earth's pilgrims shall know.

I'm weary of suffering, of sin, and distress,
Of hate and oppression where God seeks to bless;
I sigh for the morn and its unfading day,
Where earth's shadows forever shall all flee away.

I'm weary of toiling, temptation and care,
And weeping o'er failings, low bending in prayer,—
Oh, when from all sinning, forever set free,
Shall I in the robes of Christ's righteousness be?

I'm weary of wandering oh, when shall I rest,
Forever, forever, on Jesus' strong breast?
Oh, when shall the waves of affliction be o'er,
And "peace like a river" roll on evermore?

I'm weary of tenting within a strange land,
Where numbers the foe as the vast ocean's sand,
And pray for the time when from dangers set free,
With the "saved of the Lord" I ever shall be.

I'm weary of waiting on unhallowed ground,
As the sunset of life throws its dimness around;
Fast looms the dark shadows athwart the dim sky,
And near the "wild breakers" my bark passeth by.

I'm weary of watching His coming to see,
When prisons shall open and captives go free;
Ah! yes, I am weary; my heart, sad and lone,
Beats, longing to kneel at the foot of the throne.

I'm weary, my Father, and long to be thine,
And in thine own likeness forever to shine;
Oh, hasten, my Father, thy kingdom to come,
And with thy redeemed bring me to that blest home.

THE ST. LOUIS MISSION.

ITS ORIGINAL DESIGN—ITS LEGITIMATE SPHERE—AND ALSO THE FURTHER DEMAND OF THE CAUSE OF CHRIST IN THIS CITY.

To whomsoever the following may interest or concern:

The writer having been for nearly two years connected with, and deeply interested in, the A. C. mission work of this city, and also a close observer of whatever might be calculated to impede its progress, or impair its usefulness; in view of which he feels competent, and furthermore that it is his duty, to make the following presentation of facts and suggestions for your consideration, hoping that they may engage immediate attention, and also secure your prompt action. Again, the writer feels that it is not only due to the friends of the mission East, but also in a special manner to the interest of the cause of Christ in the West.

In the first place, he would observe that this is no new discovery on his part; the dictates of wisdom having, as he believes, heretofore restrained him from writing, even as they now prompt him to state the facts. It is not necessary to his purpose that he should enter into a detailed account of the trials through which the mission has passed; many of which were matters of history before he came here; neither will he indulge in any personal reflections as regards the management of the mission, nor yet as regards the course of individuals connected therewith.

It is however his purpose to make manifest a great and serious mistake, relating to the mission, even from its first organization; which we shall prove has well nigh defeated itself, as regards the end for which it was instituted. Hence we may well inquire if this be so; and if true, it behooves us to cast about at once for both the cause and the remedy.

As having bearing in this direction, we will remark first, that this mission was originally designed, and has been sustained as a mission church, for the special benefit of colored people, especially destitute freedmen. Such was its contemplated work and sphere, outside of which it is powerless for good, without involving almost an entire sacrifice of the very ends for which it was instituted; which the following facts will, we think, fully demonstrate. In presenting which, we want it distinctly understood that we are writing in the interest of the mission. It may seem strange to many that so much expenditure of means and labor should have brought forth so little fruit in the line of its speciality. We shall, however, explain the cause and also present the remedy.

It is now two years (less only a few weeks) since we became acquainted with this mission; then, and since, under the care of Eld. H. K. Flagg, up to last fall. We remark that at that time the mission was a year (more or less) old. The entire, or ordinary attendance at said time was about twenty, less or more. The present status of the mission may also be indicated in a few words. Our Sabbath morning (11) service attendance ranges from twenty to thirty, of which only from three to five are colored. Sabbath evening service, general attendance ranges from fifty to seventy-five, rarely over the latter, of which only ten to fifteen are colored, oftener falling below ten, than going over fifteen. Class, prayer and conference meetings through the week, as regards general attendance, range from twenty to twenty-five, of which from one third to one half are colored.

From the foregoing, it will be seen that there is not a very extensive colored church here (unless we refer to the record), nor yet very much to speak of in the direction of a white church. We may and should observe in this connection, that the colored attendance has at times ranged somewhat higher; nevertheless, latterly in proportion as our white attendance has increased, the colored attendance has diminished. Among us such are the well known facts in the case; in view of which may we not well ask if so be these results are such as to meet the expectations on the part of the friends of the mission East? As regards myself, I am disposed and must admit, that my own expectations concerning outside points are not likely to be realized as soon, nor yet to the extent, I have heretofore permitted myself to hope.

In view of these facts, does it not become every one, whose interest and duty lie in this direction, to cast about for the why and wherefore of these things, in order that the remedy may be applied at the earliest possible moment? Certainly it is accomplishing very little in its legitimate sphere; and at the same time it is falling almost equally far short of meeting the necessities on the part of the whites; and which we may safely say must ever be the case, so long as the present mode of conducting the mission shall be continued.

The great error, to which we have made allusion, is undoubtedly more than anticipated, and consists in this: that there was not established at that time, or at the earliest possible moment thereafter, another mission (independent or otherwise), with a view to church organization, having a special reference to the promulgation of our religious faith among the white population of this city, even the same as the present organization was designed for the colored people. If the foregoing facts are not sufficient to fully demonstrate the correctness of this view, we may, in this connection, present others; some of which may be new to the reader, who need not be told that there exists, on the part of whites, an almost universal prejudice against "mixing," as they say, with colored people; while at the same time, such are not probably aware that this feeling is even more than reciprocated on the part of the colored people of this city; than which, there is perhaps no other city in the Union where these prejudices are so mutual, or carried so far, as here.

The colored people are incited to exclusiveness, to a great extent, by unwise leaders among themselves; and the result is very unfortunate for this class of people, which is evident from the fact that there is no city in the Union, to my knowledge, where the colored people are so far deprived of their constitutional rights as here. For example, they have no privileges on street R. R. cars, worth naming. They are compelled, with few exceptions, to ride outside on the front, rain or shine, cold or hot; and often are they denied even this privilege. Again, sometimes they are rudely expelled from the cars, and in such cases they find no redress at the law. Why? Because their own course is such as to destroy much of the sympathy that would otherwise prompt many of their friends among the whites to stand by them in the maintenance of their rights. We might in this connection cite various facts having bearing in this direction. One more however must suffice, which will go to show the violence of their prejudice against the whites; which circumstance came to my knowledge only a few days since.

Two of our best colored sisters, who were living some distance from our place of worship, have been subjected to very great persecutions on the part of those of their own color, because they attended the "white nigger church." This opposition was so violent, at times, that they were afraid to venture out to evening meetings, except both went together. And now that one has moved away, the other is often deprived of the privilege of attending evening meetings, except when her husband can accompany her, or some other escort.

In view of these facts, and under such circumstances, the question arises, and is forced home upon us, What can be done? or what course shall be pursued, in order to do the the greatest amount of good to the greatest number of colored people? such being the special and ostensible object of this mission. Shall we take the fearful responsibility of saying unto them, by either word or act, that they MUST yield their prejudices before they hear the gospel, or die eternally? Or, again, shall we on the other hand declare that white people, who will not thus do, may also and likewise perish? It may be asked, if we would expect to have people, either black or white, saved with their prejudices? We answer, not any more than in their sins. We hold that Christ is at the door, and far be it from us to attempt to open or point out any other way. We do furthermore hold and believe that we are authorized by Christ, and Paul his apostle, to remove all stumbling stones from before the door, and out of the way to the same, in order that all who will may enter thereby. They must, however, first hear the word, by which (when it chances to fall in good ground) come faith, love, and good works. When the word (which is truth) shall have had free course to and into the head, and shall have settled into the heart with its purifying and sanctifying influence, then that which would at first have prevented them from coming to this knowledge will have no existence.

I would here ask, if such course be not in perfect keeping with the admonition of Christ to his disciples, on a certain occasion, while he was instructing them in regard to their labor of love to him, and towards their fellow men, at which time he said unto them, "Be ye therefore wise as serpents, and as harmless as doves." The term serpent is the first name given to the devil in holy writ, which testifies of him that he was wise above all the creatures of the field (or world); hence I understand Christ, when thus commanding his disciples, as saying, "Be ye therefore wise as" demons. Christ, on a certain other occasion, testified that "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." Now we apprehend that the children, much more their father the Devil, are too wise to adopt a plan, or pursue a course calculated to cheat themselves out of so much of their investment and labor, as does the sadly mistaken policy of the A. A. C. Mission of this city. Paul said, "To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak; I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some."

In view of the foregoing, may we not well question the propriety of requiring that people, white or black, shall exercise a christian grace BEFORE they have any knowledge of Christ? Is not this holding the light too high? or as we have heard remarked, "laying the fodder too high in the rack"? We think it is, and such has been our well-known opinion for more than a year. It is not, however, strange that these points should not have been anticipated from the first; nor yet under the circumstances, that they were not provided against. That this error has not long ere this been brought to light, and corrected, is in my judgment the fault of ill-advised efforts on the part of persons whose object was to overcome this very difficulty; yet their course did, in my judgment, involve an entire sacrifice of the primary object, and the already acquired fruit of the mission, in view of which I could not co-operate with them. As then, so am I now a friend of the mission, and its interest I am now presenting.

We would however assure our friends, that this difficulty is not an insurmountable one; and furthermore, that they need not fear lest their sacrifices, prayers and labors of love in this direction shall come to naught; for faithful and true is He in whose interest and name you have cast your bread out upon these waters; hence the promise is sure: "Thou shalt find it after many days." Yet was it not more necessary that "these abide in the ship," than it is that there should be a radical change of operations.

In conclusion, I would say in behalf of the mission proper, that there is needed here a good colored preacher from the East, to take pastoral charge of it; a labor, as regards which, no white man can successfully perform in this city. With Peter Noka at their head, having a good place for worship, and Sabbath School, we believe that his labors in this direction would, even in a short time, be manifestly recognized and blessed of the Lord. We would not be understood as objecting against white preachers serving colored people from time to time, as opportunity offers. Yet as regards this mission proper, we are firmly persuaded of this fact, that its fruits must be well and faithfully nourished by a competent colored preacher, or they will be for most as "waters spilled upon the ground," and also golden opportunities for good and usefulness in behalf of the objects of this mission will be forever lost. There has been a great deal of good seed sown here, which requires watering in order that God may give it its increase, which, when the Lord shall send forth his angels to gather, he will not forget, nor yet fail to reward those who planted, with those that watered, even as he shall those whom he hath appointed to gather his harvest.

A word as regards the necessities on the part of the white membership of our society, and other attendants upon its services, whose love for the truth is stronger than their prejudices against colored people. I have to say that we are nearly all of that class which in Christ's time (as regards his personal ministrations) had the "gospel preached unto them," we may conclude. Hence we also, for a short time at least, may require your further sympathy and aid. Being, for the most part, an unlooked for product of your labors in this direction, we feel that we may with some assurance make this appeal, hoping for a continuation of your favor toward us, which, in a pecuniary point of view, need not exceed present expenditures, in this direction, which we furthermore believe would ultimate, in less than one year, in two independent, or self-sustaining religious bodies, which would be able to co-operate with you in your labors of love to God and man.

Having thus presented my subject, it only remains for me to submit the same for your serious consideration, and such action as shall in your judgment be best calculated to serve the interests of the good cause in which you are engaged; feeling on my own part, that I have now discharged an important duty that devolved upon me; involving as it does grave responsibilities, in view of which, could I have consulted my own feelings, I would gladly have escaped; nevertheless, I have endeavored to discharge it in the fear of God only, and love towards all men.

For the World's Crisis.

"REPENTANCE."

God, the creator and upholder of all things, visible and invisible, has commanded "all men everywhere to repent;" and the reason assigned is, "because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." Repentance and judgment, here referred to, presignify, or presuppose that the "all men" referred to in this most important demand, have sinned; or in other words, have become morally contaminated by a deliberate, open, and high-handed course of rebellion against his royal law, or government; hence the demand is just and righteous. The world that lies in sin, has not only sinned against "truth," "wisdom," and "righteousness;" but against God himself, from whom all derive their being; and not only so, but against one from whom all blessings flow for their especial good, and happiness in this life, as well as the life to come; consequently, while through his benevolence and from his merciful hand, the pathway of the unregenerate is strewn with multiplied favors continually; yet the major part of a lost race seem to regard God's blessings and demands as of but little or no consequence, and esteem it their perogative to walk in the ways of disobedience, and consequently are dead to a life of happiness, the natural result of a life of obedience to God's pure and righteous law. Oh that men would be wise; that they would stop and deeply consider their disobedience, their loss, their moral depravity, their wretched condition out of Christ, and their imminent danger of the overwhelming destruction that awaits them. Yes, speedily awaits all of earth's disloyal inhabitants.

"Repentance," what is it? Why simply this: first, a thorough knowledge and conviction of disloyalty to heaven's ordained "royal law," and its appendages. Second, a godly sorrow for this course of disobedience; and third, a settled determination, that for all future time we will be resigned, or reconciled, to the will and worship of God. At this point, God meets the repentant, broken-hearted, trembling sinner, and washes all his former disloyalty away; adopts him into his own royal family by giving him the spirit of adoption, and all those heaven-born elements of happiness that cause the human heart to overflow, and to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, while anticipating that better day, the day of immortality. If such are the legitimate fruits of loyalty, how important that all men everywhere should repent. Oh, I do rejoice in this great salvation, and that it is full, and free for all lost in sin and moral depravity. Sinner, dear, hopeless, faithless, graceless, perishable sinner, why, oh why will you not now come, and for Jesus' sake, your own sake, and the sake of a world imbedded in the snares of moral contamination, and drink of the never-failing, over-flowing fountain of salvation. Oh, it is so blessed to do so. God's invitations are multitudinous. His exceeding great and precious promises are reliable; and his unnumbered blessings unlimited. Nothing need be lost by the act (save your sins), but every thing gained; even heirship to all things. It is for your good, your present and future good. It is for the good of society in which you move. Moral, loyal, and holy principles and influences ought to be sustained; and disloyal ones brought to nought. It is for the good of mankind generally that all should move in this good way. God's demands in this direction are imperative, and all are held responsible for continued non-compliance; and unless we comply, the awful day of judgment and retribution will disclose our history and ultimate destiny, in which the lost sinner will be overwhelmed with disappointment, sadness, and utter despair, mingled with tears of bitter regret, while weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth will be their doleful condition, until they are forever lost in the agonies of the second death. Dear sinner, will you, dare you, run so great a risk? In heaven's name, I do beseech and "pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." A. N. SEYMOUR.

P. S. BRO. GRANT, by the request of Bro. H. A. King, I have been to Paulding county, Ohio, where, in connection with Bro. King, I have been holding a series of meetings. This is one of his fields of labor, where he has done a good work for the cause of Christ. The good Lord blessed our efforts in preaching the word of life to sinners. Twenty-one came forward and frankly confessed Christ during the fourteen meetings we held. At this juncture of our meeting, and the interest still rising, and a good prospect of many more taking a noble stand on the Lord's side, I was suddenly called home to take care of my dear sick wife. She has been a great and constant sufferer for the last four weeks, and there is still little or no abatement. Her whole system seems to be wonderfully deranged, and as all human efforts seem to prove inadequate for her recovery, I could wish that the "church of Christ" would make her case a specialty at the throne of the great Physician. She joins me in this expressed wish. See John 15: 7. A. N. S.

TWO-YEAR OLD COLT.

When returning from Rochester, I was engaged in conversation for a while with two farmers. One especially was well up with the philosophy of the times, and sneered at the mention of the resurrection of the dead. "T'was impossible." "All of our substance passed off every seven years, and went into other bodies," etc., etc. To talk about all things being possible with God, reminded him of the question the boy asked his mother,—"If God could make a two-year old colt?" "To be sure," said the mother. "But," said the boy, "would it be two years old?"

This was sufficient in the mind of the farmers to upturn the world, Bible, and all. When the excitement and triumph had subsided a little, I remarked, We are getting old, and soon must try the realities of the future, be they what they may. "Yes," said he, "the years seem like months." You are about fifty, I should judge? "Yes." You say that all our flesh and bones and sinews are renewed every seven years? "Yes." That there is not a particle in our systems to-day that there was seven years ago? "Yes." Is it possible, then, that a being made up of new particles, the oldest of which is but seven years, can be fifty years old? Perhaps others may answer more readily than the farmer. I wait an answer. H. PRATT.

P. S. If I put new boards and new timbers in my barn once in seven years, I would suppose it would have a new appearance. New boards certainly are quite discernible on an old building. If the boards that are put on are as old as those taken off, then what benefit in the change? If we are continually casting off the old material and being replenished with other, it must be old, or it must give us a new appearance. If it be insisted that it (the material) is altogether new, how can it (the structure) be fifty years old? I think when this is proved and settled as a fact, there will be no difficulty in making a two-year old colt at once. H. P.

SOUND ARGUMENT.

BRO. GRANT:—While many of our brethren in all parts of the country are now receiving tracts and pamphlets by mail, speciously written, to disprove the resurrection of the wicked, which would also disprove the salvation of infants, as any logical mind can see; it will be well to let such see the following article, which was written by the same hand years ago (when J. T. Walsh first taught it,) which now writes these pamphlets. This is a sound argument against the new views advocated by Bro. Storrs. We quote verbatim et literatim. I. C. WELLCOME.

Elder Storrs says:—"We have no intention of spending our time for a year and a half in discussing so fruitless a topic, and one which we are clearly satisfied is opposed both to the spirit and the letter of the Bible. If any man can give us as plain a text that men are immortal by creation as we have that—'all that are in the graves . . . shall come forth . . . . they that have done good . . . and they that have done evil,' then we will confess our error in ever having preached or printed the 'Six Sermons.' Here we leave the topic of the non-resurrection of wicked men, and little children; for, the theory we oppose denies the resurrection of infants, except possibly the infants of believers. According to it, there is a bare possibility, nothing more, that our sleeping children 'shall come again from the land of the enemy;' and it is quite uncertain whether to them, Jesus is the resurrection and the life.'

The method of interpreting Scripture on which this theory depends, unsettles all faith in the Bible, and saps the foundation of christianity. Prophetic Scripture is made by it to speak of events past at the time. Because the prophets speak as if God had already done what he will finally do, it is inferred there shall be no resurrection of the wicked. For example, the Psalmist says—'Thou hast destroyed all them that go astray from thee'—W. says, 'there is no intimation of a resurrection . . . for the characters are utterly consumed and destroyed.'

The question here all turns on time. When are 'all that go astray destroyed?' If he is correct in his theory, David lived in a happy time; all the wicked had been destroyed—not one was then left; for David says—'Thou hast' done it;—not, thou wilt do it. Thus the truth of God is turned into a fable, and christianity is a falsehood. Do you ask how so? We answer—Several centuries before the birth of Jesus of Nazareth, Isaiah said, 'Unto us a child is born . . . the government shall be upon his shoulder,' etc. Now, says the Jew, 'It is plain the Messiah was born long before Jesus of Nazareth; Jesus cannot therefore be the Messiah of God.' Again, the same prophet said of Messiah, seven hundred years before the birth of Jesus, 'He is despised, . . . we did esteem him smitten of God, . . . with his stripes we are healed, . . ., the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all, . . . he was oppressed,' etc. Hence, it is as plain a matter of fact, to a Jew, that Jesus cannot be the Messiah, as it is to the author of 'Anastasis' that the wicked will have no resurrection from such texts as that in which David said—'Thou hast destroyed all them that go astray from thee.' And we think the argument of the Jew is as well founded and as forcible as that of him who contends there is no resurrection of the wicked because their future and final destruction is spoken of as already past. To us it seems clear that 'blindness in part has happened to' the authors of such interpretations. 'God calls things that be not as though they were' on account of the certainty of the accomplishment of his purposes; thus he said—'I have made thee a father of many nations,' when as yet he had no child.

This principle understood and applied subverts all the fine-spun theory of no-resurrection of the wicked, and shows that what is spoken on the subject of their being destroyed, and not rising, in the various texts relied upon, to support the Pharisaic doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked, relate to their final destruction after the 'judgment of the great day,' unto which the wicked are 'reserved;' when, as Job says—'The wicked shall be brought forth to the day of wrath;' and he affirms, they are 'reserved unto the day of destruction;' Job 21: 30; and Jesus Christ says, they 'shall come forth from the graves' to condemnation or 'damnation;' after which, the testimony of John the apostle is, they shall be 'cast into the lake of fire;' surely that is 'the day of destruction.' Let men beware of deluding their souls with the vain fancy that they will lie in their graves in a state of insensibility to the judgment and the awful execution of the sentence that is to follow; vain hope; strong delusion.

We have called the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked 'a Pharasaic doctrine.' Our authority for this assertion is Josephus and the 'Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, by John Kitto, D. D., F. S. A.,' an English work of great research. The Pharisees maintained that those who had 'lived virtuously,' and they 'only have power to revive and live again.' This fact is worthy of serious attention, as the advocates of the non-resurrection of the wicked, who have recently come up, try hard not only to destroy the force of Christ's words (John 5: 28, 29), but to make Paul's words (Acts 24: 14) to mean only, that the Pharisees allowed there would be a resurrection of the just and unjust, while the apostle did not. The truth is, the Pharisees 'allowed' there would 'be a resurrection of the dead,' but denied that it embraced the 'unjust.' Paul affirms his expectation—for that is all the Greek word elpida, translated hope, in this text necessarily means—'that there shall be a resurrection of the dead both of the just and of the unjust;' thus agreeing with the testimony of Jesus, that 'all in the graves shall come forth—good and evil;' and the 'two witnesses' strike down the Pharisaic doctrine of the just only being raised from the dead.

We have said much more than we intended when we commenced this notice; and we have done so, that all might understand that we have no fear to meet all that can be said, however subtle the argument may be managed. A Jew called on us, not long since, to prove to us from the Scriptures that it was impossible that Jesus could be the Messiah; and his argument was full as strong as the argument by which it is attempted to establish a limited resurrection; and, as we have before remarked, they both have one principle in interpreting the Scriptures."—Bible Examiner, Vol. V. pp. 43–44.

Gems.

— Glorify a lie, legalize a lie, arm and equip a lie, consecrate a lie with solemn forms and awful penalties, and after all, it is nothing but a lie. It rots a land and corrupts a people like any other lie. Men may die for it, churches may groan for it, but if the word of God condemns it, it is a lie still.

—Guilt, though it may attain temporal splendor, can never confer real happiness. The evil consequences of our crimes long survive their commission, and, like the ghosts of the murdered, for ever haunt the steps of the malefactor.

— It is our duty to hold communion with all who hold communion with Christ. Little party differences should never prompt us to deviate from christian fellowship with each other.

— A word of kindness is seldom spoken in vain, while witty sayings are as easily lost as pearls dropping from a broken string.

— Four things cannot come back; the broken word, the sped arrow, the past life, and the neglected opportunity.

— Prayer is ever profitable: at night it is our covering; in the morning it is our armor.

— You may gather a rich harvest of knowledge by reading, but thought is the winnowing machine.

— Some minds are like sieves; they retain all that is worthless, while that which is good passes through them.

— Sin is bad in the eye, worse in the tongue, worse still in the heart, but worst of all in the life.

— Memory is a servant for good to good men, but to him who dies in his sins it will be a messenger of terror.

— Preaching Christ in our own strength and wisdom is like a man going out on a clear night, with a candle, to show you the moon.

— He who is angry with his just reprover, kindles the fire of the just avenger.

— Most misfortunes may be turned into blessings by waiting the tide of affairs.

— Sorrow is the furnace that melts selfish hearts together in love.

— The snake's poison is in his teeth; the slanderer's in his tongue.

— Hopes and cares, anxieties and tears, divide our life.

— Refrain from bitter words; there is only one letter between them and swords.

— The valley of humiliation is very near to the mount of transfiguration.

— Truth is not a salad that it must be served with vinegar.

— The teacher must be divinely taught to "know" the doctrines he teaches.

— Go slowly to the entertainments of your friends, but quickly to their misfortunes.

— Whatever you dislike in another, take care to correct in yourself.

— Bless God for what you have, and trust him for what you want.

— Wealth is not his who gets it, but his who enjoys it.

— Better break your word than do worse in keeping it.

COMMON POLITENESS.

It is not polite to make a remark loud enough to be heard by another, which is a word of reproach or a slander on him.

It is not polite to pick out flaws or petty foibles in the characters of your neighbors, when you are not angels yourselves, and are far from laboring to become such.

It is not polite to utter the ideas of another as your own, and thus attempt to shine in borrowed plumage.

It is not polite to crowd into a full car or omnibus, and expect another to rise, and give you his seat.

It is not polite to refuse to manifest your obligations to those who have assisted you in any way, or given you any desired information, no matter how trivial it may be.

It is not polite to take down a book, or any article, in a store or dwelling-house, and not return it to its proper place.

It is not polite to forget to shut the door in cold weather, when you leave a house or a store, or to stand with the door open while conversing with another.

It is not polite for persons to dress extravagantly, or in the extreme of fashion, when by so doing they know they will mortify their neighbors who are not able to do the same.

It is not polite to refuse a present, however trifling, bestowed by a generous heart, from the best of motives.

It is not polite to hold the contribution box in a man's face, as if to force him to give, when you know he does not approve of the object for which you solicit charity.

It is not polite to stand at the corners of the streets to stare at those who pass, or to make improper remarks.

It is not polite to halloo in the street, or engage in boisterous conversation, particularly when the hour for retirement has arrived.

It is not polite to speak disrespectfully to another, more especially if he is older than yourself, or in humbler circumstances.

It is not polite to speak in an authoritative or angry tone to men or women older than yourself, who may be in your employ.

PRAYER; OR, THE LITTLE GIRL AND THE APPLE.

"Prayer, ardent, opens heaven,
Lets down a stream of glory
On the consecrated hour
Of man in audience
With the Deity."—Young.

Reading about "Mollie's Ducks, or the Answer to her Prayer," which I understand to be true, and not a "made-up story," I wish to say to Mollie, if she reads The Well-Spring, that I believe just as she does,—that she received what she wanted because she asked God for it in a prayer of faith.

I remember, when a child, living on a farm, there was one large tree in the orchard that had a few fine apples upon some of the high branches. One day I went to the orchard, and looking up at those large, ripe, red apples, I very much wanted one of them. I knew of no way to get it; so I knelt under the large tree, and asked my heavenly Father for it; and I expected to have it. And, waiting a few minutes, down one fell just at my feet. I picked it up with no more surprise than as though some earthly friend had given it to me. I went to the house with it quite satisfied, and not doubting that God gave it to me. I found my loving mother wondering where I had staid so long. I told her about the apple, and she only smiled; and I was happy.

A few years afterward, thinking of that prayer in the orchard, I looked upon myself as then a silly child for my simple faith, and thought to myself, "The wind happened to blow the apple off just at that time."

But now I believe God did really send the apple in answer to prayer, just as his dear Son, our blessed Lord and Savior, said, "Ask, and ye shall receive." He hath not said, "Seek ye my face in vain."

"Prayer is the heart's sincere desire, unuttered or expressed."

And I wish to assure little Mollie, that I, a grown-up woman, now believe just as she does about answer to prayer. She asked for what she wanted, in faith; and it was according to God's will, and he gave it to her. And I would still further say, "Mollie, never give up the faith of your childhood. "Without faith, it is impossible to please God.'"

May all children be blessed with similar trusting hearts, and all men and women become like little children, trusting unreservedly in the word of the Lord.—Well Spring.

VERY LITTLE FOLKS.

What is the smallest house to live in? Do you say, a drop of water? Yet millions of living creatures live in a drop of water. What mites they must be! Yes, mere atoms—a thousandth part of an inch in size; and such queer shapes! They look like bottles, funnels, fruit, wheels, crabs, serpents, eels, worms. Some are soft, like leeches; others have a hard flinty shell. They are of all colors, green, red, yellow, and no color at all. The green scum you see on stagnant water is formed of them. Some emit light like a glow-worm. A ship sailing on the ocean at night often seems to leave a trail of light behind her in the waters. It is caused by millions and millions of these little creatures. They are called in-fu-so-ria. Not a drop of water from the ocean, not a drop from the clearest spring, pool, or running brook, but has millions of them in it. You cannot see them with the naked eye, only by a microscope. They have horns, claws, bristles, ears, paddles and move swiftly about, as if time was short, and there was plenty to do. So there is; and they do their part.

Deposites of the shelly in-fu-so-ria form the fine sand which is used in making the beautiful porcelain ware. The famous pyramids of Egypt are built of them; for what is limestone but the dead bodies of these little creatures? Charleston, in South Carolina, is built on a bed of them; and they are at work all along the coast, filling up the harbors and forming shoals.

What pains God takes in making even the smallest things. Nothing is too small for his care and notice. Nothing is too small to be of use in his wide kingdom. Some of his greatest works are done by the power of littles. Let nobody despise little folks; no, no.

KITTIE'S NEW SONG.

"Happy day, happy day,
When Jesus washed my sins away," sang little Kittie, as she came along from school across the fields. The silvery notes came through the open window into papa's study, and papa laid down his book to listen.

Soon the voice ceased, and little pattering feet were heard on the staircase, and then a gentle knock.

"Come in, Kittie."

"Papa, isn't this a nice hymn? Please, may I sing it to you?"

And so papa listened again to that soft voice, singing the same sweet hymn.

"I like 'happy day' part the best, papa."

"The chorus, you mean, don't you, Kittie—the lines repeated in every verse? But why?"

"Because, papa, I can't quite understand the rest, but I know that if Jesus hadn't washed my sins away, I could never go to heaven to live with him."

"Why not, Kittie?"

Kittie repeated slowly the verse she had learned that morning: "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie." "And, papa, I used to make lies."

"And do you think Jesus has washed that sin away, Kittie?"

"Yes, papa, I asked him to. And if we ask we shall receive, you know. Don't you like those lines too, papa?"

"Yes, Kittie, very much."

"Please sing it with me once."

And so papa and his little Kittie sang together of that happy day, when Jesus washed their sins away.

FUNERAL OF A BEE.

On Sabbath morning last, I had the pleasure of witnessing a most interesting ceremony, which I desire to record for the benefit of our readers. While walking near Falkirk, we observed two bees issuing from one of the hives, bearing with them the defunct body of a comrade, with which they flew for a distance of twelve yards. We followed them closely, and noted the care with which they selected a convenient hole at the side of the gravel walk; the tenderness with which they committed the body, head downwards, to the earth; and the solicitude with which they afterwards pushed against it two little stones, doubtless in memoriam. Their task being ended, they paused for about a moment, perhaps to drop over the grave of their friend a sympathizing tear; and then they flew away to their hive.—Glasgow Herald.

A NEGRO'S PRAYER.

"O Lord, bless de teacher who come so far to 'struct us in de way to heaven. Rock her in de cradle of love. Backen de word of power in her heart, dat she may have souls for her hire, and many stars in her crown in de great gittin' up mornin' when de general roll is called. And when all de battles is over, may she fall all kivered wid victory, be buried wid de honors of war, and rise to wear de long white robe in glory, and walk de shinin' streets in silver slippers, down by de golden sunrise, close to de great white throne, and dere may she strike glad hands wid all her dear scholars, and praise you, O Lord, forever and forever, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

A PRAYER.

Tune.—A Weary Traveler.

Dear Savior, at thy coming
Wilt thou remember me,
And give me life unending,
With all the ransomed free?

Chorus—Then palms of victory,
Crowns of glory;
Palms of victory we shall bear.
Repeat—Yes, palms of victory, etc.

Give me thy promised blessing,
While trusting in thy word;
Thy peace and love possessing,
Prepared to meet my Lord.

O keep me from temptation,
My faith and hope renew,
While waiting for salvation,
Which now is just in view.

Unite thy waiting children
In union, to proclaim
The Savior soon is coming,
In righteousness to reign.

Awake, O church, that sleepeth,
Send forth the holy cry;
Behold the Bridegroom cometh,
The judgment scenes are nigh.

Then hasten, Lord, thy glory,
When wickedness shall cease;
And earth, enrobed in beauty,
Be clothed in endless peace.

UNIVERSAL RESTORATION—ITS RISE IN ORIGEN.

It is high time that we fairly face the great question of the future of the ungodly. The idea of eternal torments, which has dominated in the church for so many ages, can no longer give even the miserable satisfaction that it once did. The closer it is looked at, the more forbidding does the picture appear. The mind turns with loathing from an eternal future in which the wailings of miserable souls equal, or almost drown, the hosannahs of the redeemed. It does not believe in the possibility that such is to be the endless aspect of God's world.

It is not merely ungodly men that feel thus. It is not the railer and the scoffer at sacred things to whom alone this familiar picture is a loathsome object. Men of piety and faith; men who reverence God and are jealous for his honor; men who come to Holy Scripture with an implicit belief that it is the utterance of their Father's will; turn with horror from the thought that everlasting torments are the result of the Creator's handiwork. They take refuge in the well-grounded conviction that all will be as it once was, "very good"; that the morning stars will shout with joy at the result, as they shouted at the inauguration of the creation of man.

But there is always danger in the casting off of old opinion; there is the danger of running into the opposite extreme. This danger exists now in regard to the question before us. The sentiment which refuses to accept eternal misery for any, is fast drifting to the sentiment which demands eternal life and glory for all. The bright picture in which reprobate men and devils are painted at the feet of Jesus, returning to their Maker from a wandering which is not endless, only longer than that of others, is dazzling many eyes. Balaam and Judas are in it seen as walking in accord with Moses and Peter; Lucifer and Satan once more taking counsel with Gabriel and Michael. The spirit of Origen has waked up, and is working in the minds of many thoughtful men.

No language can express too strongly our conviction of the danger, as well of the error, of this view. Augustine's theory blackens God's character and converts him into a tyrant; Origen's gilds with seductive light the ways of sin. One would force on the wretched and the depraved a life they would execrate; the other, generally accepted, would, we firmly believe, in a single generation reduce the morals of the world to a level with those of Sodom.

We propose in this, and one or two following papers, to consider the question of future punishment from Origen's point of view. We will, perhaps, effect our purpose best by reviewing the line of argument which was adopted by Origen himself in his day, and by his followers in our own time. In our present paper we will give a rapid sketch of Origen's train of thought, pointing out as well as we are able, within our brief space, its fundamental errors. To do this with clearness we must first allude, hastily, to the theological views in the church which preceded the rise of the School of Origen.

The end of the ungodly, according to Scripture, is their destruction, or death. As this death is the punishment of sin, and as there is no recovery from it, it is called everlasting punishment and destruction. This was also the doctrine of the apostolical age of the church, as we find it declared in those "Epistles of the Apostolical Fathers" which have been preserved to our time. The best and soundest of the Fathers of the age immediately succeeding were also of this opinion. Justin and Irenæus, men who suffered martyrdom for their Master, and Theophilus of Antioch, all maintained the old scriptural doctrine. If the opinion of the church had never departed from it, we would probably have never heard of the view of Origen.

At an early period, however, doctrine on this point began to be corrupted, and the corruption grew with a rapid growth. Of all the systems of philosophy in vogue at the time, the most sublime was that of Plato. Of a part of human nature, the soul, it took a very lofty and captivating view. It abandoned the body for ever to its dust, but it ascribed to the soul a life which should have no end.

The reader of Scripture knows how earnestly and frequently Paul warned the church against philosophy.* He is the only one of the apostles who has specially done so, as he was probably the only one of them who had any acquaintance with philosophical systems. In his warnings he does not make any exception; he does not condemn the Stoic or Epicurian Schools, and exempt that of Plato; he prohibits with all the weight of his authority the introduction of any philosophical system or dogma into the church. He warned that it would spoil and corrupt, not elevate or strengthen truth. It might be that every system of philosophy had its portion of truth, but he knew that every system was also poisoned with error. Accordingly, while he has quoted more than once from the poets, he has never quoted from the philosophers of heathenism.

Many of the early fathers forgot this warning of the apostle, and it is amongst these, precisely, that we find the origin of error upon the great doctrine of future punishment. Educated in Platonism, they thought that they might with great advantage to the cause of christianity, bring at least a portion of their old learning into its service. But on one point they were substantially agreed. All of them, with Tertullian, adopted the sentiment of Plato—"Every soul is immortal."† On this point Plato took rank, not among prophets and apostles, but above all prophets and apostles. A doctrine which neither Old Testament nor New taught directly or indirectly, nay, which was contrary to a great part of the teaching of both, these fathers brought in with them into the church, and this gave to the old Sage of the Academy a greater authority and a wider influence by far than he would ever have had otherwise. It was in effect Plato teaching in the church, under the supposed authority of Christ and his apostles, doctrine subversive of and contrary to the doctrine which they had one and all maintained.

This dogma of Plato was made the rigid rule for the interpretation of Scripture. Christ, and Paul, and John, all were forced to Platonize. The deduction of reason was palmed off on men's minds as the teaching of revelation. We have read the writings of the early fathers with carefulness, at least on this question. It is impossible, of course, to affix a date to a nameless forger, but we think it quite possible, if not probable, that the first known holder of the theory of eternal life for the reprobate was the author of the writings known under the title of "Clementina," and falsely attributed to Clemens Romanus. It is indeed difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain the exact sentiments of this writer. If his work is not interpolated, he appears to hold directly opposite opinions in different parts of it. In one place he speaks of the soul as if it would at length be extinguished in the fire of hell; in another as if, from its essential immortality, its sufferings could have no end.‡ To our mind, he seems to have lived at a period and a place where opinion was changing from the Apostolical to the Augustinian point of view, and that it is thus we are to account for his inconsistency. It is enough for our present purpose to note that he has fully adopted the lofty language of Plato on the nature of the human soul, and thus laid the sure foundation for that change of doctrine which he did not, perhaps, himself fully adopt. With him the soul is of "the same substance with God," and is hence "immortal" and "incorruptible."§ And all this he has placed in the mouth of an apostle who, in his genuine sayings, has taken precisely the opposite view of human nature.‖ This nameless forger is, so far as is known, the first maintainer of the doctrine of eternal life in hell.

For the World's Crisis.

THERE IS PEACE IN JESUS.

Amid all of the strife and confusion that may abound, and the vain efforts of the world to find peace where it is not, how pleasant it is to know that in Jesus there is peace, which the world cannot give nor take away; and that all who diligently seek for it in him, shall find that peace which is beyond comprehension; and flows onward, increasing as we progress in the way of life, like as the river does in its way to the ocean. We may have many a conflict to pass through, both within and without; and sometimes even fears may arise lest we at last, in some unguarded moment, should be overcome by our common enemy; but all of our conflicts will be passed through in safety, and our fears prove to be groundless, if our trust is wholly in Him who has told us not to fear; and the more abundant peace will be our portion when the conflict is over. Often sorrow fills our hearts while beholding the abounding evils in the world, and many, many of our fellow creatures walking the sure road to destruction; yet if we prove faithful in our mission, and do our whole duty to them, as far and as often as practicable, in word and deed, in our manner of living before them and of dealing with them, we may be sure of the abiding peace of our heavenly Father.

Sometimes we feel almost disheartened, and our courage well-nigh gone, while fierce temptations assail us; but the Man of our choice, who "was tempted in all points like as we are," knows how to deliver us out of all our temptations; and the welcome invitation of our Savior calling, "Come unto me, . . . and I will give you rest," secures to us a sure and ever-open place of relief, and refuge from the power of the tempter. No earthly power can give us this peace. We may have all the wealth, wisdom and honor that earth can give to mortal man, and never know what it is to have peace in believing on the Son of God. It only can be found in Him who came to save, through our continuing patient in his service.

ARITHMETICAL PROPHECY.

Figures are said to be incontestible; and, perhaps, that is one of the reasons why prophecy flies so much to arithmetic. Some of these calculations are well known; and here is the latest of the kind. What is wanted is to determine the date when the imperial rule shall end in France. Let us go back, then, to the reign of Louis Philippe for facts which may help up in the calculation. Louis Philippe ascended to the throne in 1830. If we take that as a fixed point we shall find that, by adding to it certain numbers, the result will give the year 1848, when the reign of the Orleans family came to an end. Thus, Louis Phillippe was born in 1773. The ciphers of this date added together make 18; and, if you add 18 to 1830, it brings us precisely to 1848. Again, his queen was born in 1782. The ciphers of this date added together make 18; and 18 added to 1830 makes 1848. Or, once again, the king and queen were married in 1809. The ciphers of this year also make 18; and, if we treat this amount as before, it will yield the same result. Now let us proceed in the same fashion to deal with the empire. It was proclaimed in 1852. The emperor was born in 1808. If we add the ciphers of the latter date together, and add the result to the date of 1852, we obtain the figures 1869. Again, the Empress was born in 1826. Proceed as before, and the result is 1869. The Emperor and Empress were married in 1853. Still repeat the calculation, and the result is 1869. Last of all, take the date of the Revolution—1848. Manipulate its figures in the same fashion as the others—the sum total is 21; and this added to 1848 makes 1869. Is it not perfectly clear, therefore, that the empire will come to an end in 1869?

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT.

11. God is the author of evil.—"Out of the mouth of the Most High proceedeth not evil and good?"—Lam. 3: 38. "Thus saith the Lord, Behold I frame evil against you and devise a device against you."—Jer. 18: 11. "I make peace and create evil. I the Lord do all these things."—Isa. 45: 7. "Shall there be evil in the city, and the Lord hath not done it?"—Amos 3: 6. "Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live."—Ezek. 20: 25.

God is not the author of evil.—"God is not the author of confusion."—1 Cor. 14: 33. "A God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he."—Deut. 32: 4. "For God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempted he any man."—Jas. 1: 13.

The word evil has two meanings in the Bible. It means punishment, and also sin. When it says that God creates evil, it merely conveys the idea that he executes judgments. When it states that man does evil, it is a record of his sins against God. This will be plainly seen by reading 1 Kings 16: 25, 30. Job. 2: 10. Isa. 45: 8.—(See Cruden.)

We conclude on this point, therefore, that though God inflicts evil upon the wicked for their sins, still the Judge of all the earth will do right.

12. God gives freely to those who ask.—"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men freely and upbraideth not, and it shall be given unto him."—James 1: 15. "For every one that asketh receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth."—Luke 11: 10.

God withholds his blessings and prevents men from receiving them.—"He hath blinded their eyes and hardened their hearts, that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their hearts, and be converted, and I should heal them."—John 12: 40. "For it was of the Lord to harden their hearts, that they should come against Israel in battle, that he might destroy them utterly, and that they might have no favor."—Josh. 11: 20. "O Lord, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways and hardened our hearts?"—Isa. 63: 17.

That God gives freely to those who ask of him is true, providing they do not "ask amiss;" then they receive not.

The infidel wishes to make it appear in opposition to the above position, that God intentionally blinded the eyes of the Jewish nation, lest they should embrace Christ, and refers to John 12: 40, as proof. This, however, fails him, for it does not happen to be a decree that the Jews must reject Christ, but a prophecy of Isaiah's showing that they would reject him. Hence the passage is altogether misapplied. See Matt 13: 14.

The reference to Josh. 11: 20, is to those wicked nations who fought against Israel, and the Lord overthrew them for their hatred to his cause and to his people. Isa. 63: 17, and its connection, shows that Israel had forsaken God, and when they pleaded for forgiveness, he returned to them in the plentitude of his mercy. These texts, therefore, cannot be forced to antagonize other parts of God's word.

13. God is to be found by those who seek him.—"Every one that asketh receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth."—Matt. 7: 8.—"Those that seek me early shall find me."—Prov. 8: 17.

God is not to be found by those who seek him.—"Then shall they call upon me but I will not answer; they shall seek me early but shall not find me."—Prov. 1: 28.

Matt. 7: 8, and Prov. 8: 17, refer to the period of offered mercy. Whereas, Prov. 1: 28, refers to the time when mercy ceases to be offered and judgment is about to be executed. This will be seen by reading the verses preceding and following. "When your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you, Then shall they call upon me and I will not answer; They shall seek me early but they shall not find me; for that they hated knowledge and did not choose the fear of the Lord."—Prov. 1: 27–29. The connection cited above, relieves the text from all obscurity, and takes the objection the from over-anxious infidel.

14. God is warlike.—"The Lord is a man of war."—Ex. 15: 3. "The Lord of Hosts is his name."—Isa. 51: 25.

God is peaceful.—"The God of peace."—Rom. 15: 33. "God is not the author of confusion but of peace."—1 Cor. 14: 33.

The Lord is a man of war to all his enemies, and a God of peace to all who obey him. He is a God of wrath to his foes, and of goodness to his children. Were it not that the skeptic was determined to find just 144 contradictions of the Bible, he would never have inserted the above.

THE ETERNAL SONSHIP OF CHRIST.

There was a difference of opinion between John Wesley and Adam Clarke, upon the eternal sonship of Christ, although both were ardent trinitarians, having each adopted the creed of Saint Athanasius, rather than the creed of Paul, who said, "We know . . . there is none other God but one. . . . There is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 8: 4–6. In opposition to Paul, Athanasius taught, "There is one person of the Father, another (person) of the Son, and another (person) of the Holy Ghost." "So the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God; and yet they are not three Gods, but one God." That is to say, this theological arithmetic does not allow us to consider three separate, individual things, or persons, as three, but ONE.

Against such as could compute numbers thus, Athanasius fulminates the worst kind of damnation. But he died as a man, and his thunders, long since silent, neither their echoes, have power to alarm us. Thank God for Bible light and gospel liberty. John Wesley thus explains the language of 1 Pet. 1: 3, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," thus:—"The God of his human nature, the Father of his divine nature"; and elsewhere calls him the "eternal Son," as do others of the same sect. In opposition, Adam Clarke says:—

"The doctrine of the eternal sonship of Christ is, in my opinion, anti scriptural, and highly dangerous; this doctrine I reject for the following reasons:—

1st. I have not been able to find any express declaration in the Scriptures concerning it.

2nd. If Christ be the Son of God, as to his divine nature, then he cannot be eternal; for son implies a father; and father implies, in reference to son, precedency in time, if not in nature too. Father and son imply the idea of generation; and generation implies a time in which it was effected, and time also antecedent to such generation.

3d. If Christ be the Son of God, as to his divine nature, then the Father is of necessity prior, consequently superior to him.

4th. Again, if this divine nature were begotten of the Father, then it must be in time; i. e., there was a period in which it did not exist, and a period when it began to exist. This destroys the eternity of our blessed Lord, and robs him at once of his Godhead.

5th. To say he was begotten from all eternity is, in my opinion, absurd; and the phrase eternal son, is a positive self-contradiction. Eternity is that which has had no beginning, nor stands in any reference to time. Son supposes time, generation, and father; and time also antecedent to such generation. Therefore, the conjunction of these two terms, son and eternity, is absolutely impossible, as they imply essentially different and opposite ideas. The enemies of Christ's divinity have, in all ages, availed themselves of this incautious method of treating this subject, and on this ground have ever had the advantage of the defenders of the Godhead of Christ. This doctrine of the eternal sonship destroys the deity of Christ."—See Notes on Luke 1: 34.

Thus they disagree. If believers in man's mortality happen to disagree on mere minor points of exposition, while they perfectly agree in the main, it is paraded with great ostentation as condemning their doctrines. Let the same rule apply here.

C. P. Dow.

— If we would have powerful minds, we must think; if we would have faithful hearts, we must love; if we would have strong muscles we must labor. These include all that is valuable in life.

SAVE THE FRAGMENTS.

"Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost."—John 6: 12.

These are the words of our Savior to his disciples, spoken when he had performed the miracle of feeding five thousand men with five barley loaves and two small fishes. He had so increased the amount of food, that all had eaten and become satisfied, and still some remained. He was not willing that anything useful should be lost. What an important lesson is here taught, applicable to all times, but especially to us in these last times. Our Savior was a rigid economist. He taught that everything valuable should be saved. At another time he said, "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much." Thus we see he attaches great importance to little things. And many times a small act produces great good, or great injury. What a rebuke our Lord's words are to those housewives who throw out bread, or other food, that by a little care or labor might have been saved for family use. But not only bread is thus wasted, but small sums of money; cents and dimes are thrown away for candies, and other things that do no good, that just gratify the taste; and also for little superfluities in dress, to gratify pride and vanity. These little sums of money are wasted.

We are the Lord's. "We are bought with a price." All we have is his. Soon it will be said to each one of us, "Give an account of thy stewardship." And then how many small sums of money, as well as larger ones, will be found to have been thrown away. Oh! what a strict account we must give for our behavior here in this world. A little sum will place a tract in the hand of some person who may, by reading it, be led to search the Scriptures, until he shall be led into the light of present truth, and following the onward track of truth, he may become an inheritor of the kingdom of God. Thus a soul is saved from death. More than this, this man may become a minister of Christ, and be the means of turning "many to righteousness." Let us save the cents, and make good use of them. While we faithfully use them as Christ would have us, we lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven. But a little squandered every day, or every week, after a while amounts to a large sum.

But many waste fragments of time in idleness or in vain talking, or useless and even hurtful reading, and in many other ways. How many useful little things might be done in these little periods of time. Ofttimes we might do something for the comfort of others, or gain some instruction for ourselves, or lift up earnest prayer to God, and receive rich blessings. We might use these moments in speaking words of truth, or writing a few sentances to do some one good. All our time is made up of moments. For the manner in which we have used or abused these, we must give a strict account before God. Oh! let us improve the the moments as they pass. May we be faithful in little things.—Ex.

TEACHINGS OF OUR DAY.

"Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God."—Matt. 22: 29.

The present condition of the world is, in many points, similar to that which existed at the first advent of Christ. On the one hand, we have a large class of Pharisees believing in the separate existence and immortality of some mysterious part of man—"not knowing the Scriptures," which refute their false philosophy; and on the other hand, we have a large class of skeptical Sadducees, who can conceive of no future state, or resurrection, "not knowing the . . . power of God." Hence when we attempt to present the exact doctrine of Christ, which is neither that of the Pharisees nor Sadducees, "the multitude are astonished." I can find nothing in the Scriptures that teaches the immortality of man in this state, or the endless torment of the wicked in the world to come. The Scriptures, when rightly understood, teach no such doctrine. The multitude believe what the serpent taught our first parents—"Ye shall not surely die." Thus the mass do not believe man really dies; death is nothing more than a change from earth to glory; that the man (soul) is conscious, while the body crumbles back to dust. Thus the idea is taught and the mass believe, while we stand beside our departed loved ones the immortal spirit has fled—as their Pagochristianized poetry teaches—

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,
Look forward to that heavenly place,
The saints' secure abode."

Thus, if this be true, the heavenly place has never yet been reached by the first saint that started for that far-off place; in fact, it is no place at all. Conceive for one moment the distance—"beyond the bounds of time and space"! There is no end to space; yet the heavenly place, "the saints' secure abode," is said to be beyond all space. I think when the saints reach this orthodox heaven, they will be secure enough.

Well, I hear one ask, where is to be the abode of the saints? Let the Bible answer; "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom."—Dan. 7: 27. "For the Lord God giveth them [the saints] light, and they [the saints] shall reign forever and ever."—Rev. 22: 5. In another place it reads—"And they [the saints] shall reign on the earth." "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth."

Thus, when we read and understand the Bible correctly, the idea of a sky-kingdom, and the regions "beyond the bounds of time and space" for the abode of the saints, is done away; and there is something substantial presented, something that we can comprehend; and the best of all is, it is a Bible doctrine. The apostle Peter represents the passing away of the present heavens, and the melting of the earth with fervent heat, and that the works therein shall be burned up. This work is accomplished during the "day of the Lord." Beyond this great change and work of God is something promised to the saints—"new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."—2 Pet. 3. Thus the saints are not represented any where in the Bible as floating about in space, or sitting on a cloud singing psalms. I believe the Scriptures locate the final abode of the saints just as certainly as geography locates the two hemispheres, or the Atlantic Ocean. Let us search the Scriptures, for "in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."—Christ.

A GOOD CHANGE.

The Church Union: "Crammond Kennedy and his Book" Close Communion, or Open Communion?

We think there is, without doubt, a genuine case of conversion afforded in "The Church Union." That it has truly "passed from death unto life," is clearly evidenced, since it has passed under the superintendence of an editor who is not ashamed to give his name, though a contraband one in the estimation of some of his former brethren. The "Church Union" has been, till recently, a sort of "pottage-pot," into which any one could strew "bitter herbs," the partaking of which was calculated to produce a corresponding spirit.

We have formed somewhat of an acquaintance with the present editor, Crammond Kennedy, who has recently rendered himself exceedingly obnoxious to his former Baptist brethren, by apostatizing from the faith once given to Calvin in part, and to the founders of the close communion church in full. Our acquaintance has not been face to face, but through his recent work, entitled "Close Communion, or Open Communion? An Experience and an Argument."

We doubt not but in his own experience he relates that of thousands, who have had the same convictions respecting the impropriety of exclusive communion; the same heart-struggles when that love which draws all christians together in union comes in conflict with the restraints of a creed, that will not allow them to come together around the Lord's table, and by drinking of the same "cup of blessing," "the communion of the blood of Christ," and eating of the same broken bread, "the communion of the body of Christ," show thereby that they indeed, though "many, are ONE BREAD and ONE BODY," by virtue of that one spiritual baptism which makes them one body in Christ; for "by ONE SPIRIT are we all baptized into one body," says an inspired writer.

"It is clear from this passage," says Neander, "that Paul considers the unity of the church not as something formed from without, but as fashioned from within." Most clearly and unanswerably does our author argue from this stand-point of unity, the rightfulness of all christians, constituting that "one body," to partake unitedly of that divinely instituted symbol of that broken body and shed blood, whereof they are all partakers by faith. The Lord's Supper belongs to that one body, and not a distinctive member of it. We have been deeply interested in tracing the conflicts of a soul longing to cast off the shackles of exclusiveness, and show by word and deed the fellowship he felt toward brethren of other churches, and yet fearful thus to do, lest he err from the "old paths" in which he had been instructed to walk, and so go astray like "Christian and Faithful," and perhaps fall into the hands of some giant, if not of "Despair," yet one quite as dreadful.

Poor Brother Kennedy! we could but pity him as we read his account of a Sabbath passed in Noel's church, London. Knowing what sacrifices he had made of preferment in the National Church, and position in society, for the gospel's sake, he listened with deep emotions of christian sympathy and love to the sermon, so simple, so sweet, so humble, and yet so grand, because so essentially christian and godly, that he was led to exclaim, "This is none other than the house of God and the very gate of heaven." The preacher closed, and as Mr. Kennedy bent his head forward to join in his prayer, he saw that the table was spread wtth the sacred emblems. He says: "The battle between my doubting, longing, unsatisfied heart, and my poor, misinformed and prejudiced, but still faithful head, was renewed with more wounding and confusion than ever before; and I left the scene—the inviting Savior, his inviting minister, his inviting disciples, and the inviting emblems of his body and blood, the very bread and wine seeming to beckon me forward, and, like an alien, I passed out of the sanctuary with the dying request of Jesus sounding in my ears, 'Do this in remembrance of me.' I think that the doctrine of 'Indorsement' received its mortal wound in one of the pews, and expired in the porch of that plain old meeting-house, which is hallowed by a good man's ministry. I never rested till I sat at the table on which, with a mistaken fidelity, I had turned my back.

"How ridiculously scrupulous and presumptuous, too, the doctrine of 'Indorsement' appears to me now. I know in my heart whether I indorse a thing or not; and I have a tongue to express my opinion at proper times and in fitting words; but then, in fear of indorsing what I considered minor errors, by sitting at the Lord's table with fellow disciples, I used to go about the world, and into churches, the veriest fraction of the people, if any, knowing who I was, or that I was there, and far less what I thought about the method and subjects of water baptism."

Bro. Kennedy, however, got into a tighter place after this, as we shall show. He says: "I had returned to my native land, which I left for the new world as a wee boddie (he used to be called the 'Boy Preacher'), and was invited to preach to an Independent church that had no minister. Not knowing that they were in the habit of communing every Sunday, I gladly consented, and preached on the opening words of the Lord's prayer. My subject being the Fatherhood of God, and my residence in a distant country, I naturally dwelt gladly on the family that was growing up in every kindred, and tribe, and tongue, into the likeness of his Son, and into the heavenly home. But imagine my horror, when my eye rested on the cloth that covered the bread and the wine, which my brethren and sisters in the Lord, some of them my parents, friends in 'auld lang syne,' were expecting to partake with me in the spirit of my sermon. I did not know what to do, and wished we were all Quakers. I did not think it would be proper for me to explain my position; I could not conscientiously serve at the table, and so I pronounced the benediction and went to the vestry. Here the deacons met me, and, thinking I was unwell, expressed their concern, and wanted to know how they could help me. But I had an affection of the heart, which, as I saw by their faces, they could scarcely understand, far less cure. So when they had told me that there was no other minister present to officiate, and had heard my poor explanation and regrets, they let me go. What a position it was for a christian minister to occupy in a land where Baptists were few and divided; or indeed wherever he might labor outside of his own sect. I could preach in the Established Church of Scotland, wear a gown and bands, and give out the 'psalms of David in metre,' without indorsing the union of church and state, ritualism, or the literary character of the Hebrew bard as he appears in English doggerel; but if I ate and drank with these Presbyterians at the Lord's table, I at once became a party to their views of baptism."

We rejoice that friend Kennedy has broken loose from his exclusive communion bonds, and no longer trembles when preaching in the pulpit of a Pedobaptist, if he sees before him the table spread with the Lord's Supper; but, extending his hand in friendly greeting, can say from the heart, "Whosoever doeth the will of my Father, the same is my mother, sister, and brother." The Baptists claim Calvin as one of the fathers, though they reject his views of the method and subjects of baptism. They glory in Bunyan, but will not accept his doctrine as set forth in his able essay, "Differences of Judgment on Water Baptism no bar to Communion."

Our author takes the ground that water baptism is not a prerequisite to communion, which is undoubtedly right; but we can but think, from many remarks, that he goes from one extreme to another, and has overleaped somewhat the true Biblical stand-point. This is often the case. When the overstrained bow rebounds, it goes beyond its native limit, and so Mr. Kennedy, we think, holds too loosely the ordinance of baptism, and fails always to establish his arguments on a solid basis.

FELLOW SERVANTS.—No. 1.

The ministers of Christ, though called to a great work, are but frail men—"earthern vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." Ministers engaged in the same work should be "ONE." Paul and Apollos were planting and watering the same seed, in the same field, and Paul says, "Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one." Amen. When ministers have fully realized this important truth, their union and harmony have worked like a charm upon the people; for then it is manifest that they are "workers together with God." The love of Christ in the heart causes this "laboring together," and makes us sensible that our work is the Lord's, and he must "give the increase." When men have lost sight of this great fact, that the work is the Lord's, and that they were called to be his servants, they will begin to frame and plan the work for self. There are various manifestations of poor self in the ministry. When one becomes independent, self-managing, self-counseling, self-appointing, and alone in his work, there is reason to suspect some self-work. The best and most useful ministers have always been union workers, often in counsel with Christ their Master; and in intimate association with their brethren, calling on them, advising with them, working with them, bearing burdens with them, suffering reproaches and sorrows with them, being mutual helpers one of another. When this principle is wanting, there is much danger. Let us avoid it.

THE RIGHT PITCH.

Probably few brethren have failed to find the following verified in their experience. Still, it seems to be often necessary to be earnest, and exceedingly animated, at whatever cost though it takes us far in advance of our hearers. Particularly is this true of the message of the coming of the Son of God.

From a letter by Rev. J. G. Warren.

GIVE YOUR MEETING THE RIGHT PITCH.

In singing, much depends on setting the tune at the right key. So in praying, so in conducting a prayer-meeting. If your own spirit is elevated and uncomonly fervent at the outset you must not let it all appear unless you know, which is rarely the case, that others are in full sympathy with you. Seeing you so far in advance of them, they will despair of overtaking you, and so refuse to step one foot forward. This explains the silence and stillness that is so painfully felt on occasions after the leader throws the meeting on to the membership at large. They dare not speak, conscious to themselves that they are not up to the point of your fervency. So on the other hand, if you find yourself for any cause depressed in spirit, unable to soar on the wings of devotion, you had better not let it be known. You will take special pains not to diffuse your tone and temper over the meeting. Look over your assembly, see what you have before you, put out a feeler by the eye and the ear and that mysterious agency through which a practiced mind will take up and measure the average of sentiment and emotion in a mass of people, and set your tune to suit it. So you will work upward and onward, and see the tide rising from first to last provided you stop at the right moment. Stop at the maximum.

LOWELL.

Our meetings at Lowell continued to increase in interest until their close. A large number of the members of other churches have become deeply interested. It was remarked by one of them, that we had been very badly misrepresented. The individual expressed much astonishment that our views of the Bible had been put in such false light before the public. We are aware that this is one of Satan's best means to hedge up the way of truth; but thank the Lord, the obstruction is out of the way of many, and they are now rejoicing in the "blessed hope" of soon seeing Jesus, and being with him in his kingdom. The truth received a hearty welcome in many minds. The people have become really tired of the popular preaching of these last days, and call for something real. They have been entertained with fables instead of gospel sermons, until they are weary of them; and unless they can have something better, they will turn away, and become decided unbelievers.

After a discourse on the "soul," a Catholic minister took occasion to ask some questions. In turn, we asked him why the Bible did not say something about the immortality of the soul, if it is a Bible doctrine? He admitted the question was an important one; but remarked the immortality of the soul was only "assumed" in the Scriptures, and not plainly expressed. This was admitting all we claimed, that the immortality of the soul is not taught in the word of the Lord, and therefore it is not a Bible doctrine. We showed that the doctrine originated among the heathen, was brought into the church from that source, but is not taught in the Holy Scriptures. We found the ears of the people were open to hear the whole truth.

Very large audiences were present every evening, and on the last night the hall was crowded, and many had to stand. It was thought there were two thousand persons present. There was deep feeling. The truth is spreading rapidly, and many are rejoicing in it now, who a few days since were groping in darkness. An intelligent lady remarked, in the Sabbath morning love-feast, that she had learned more about the Bible the last week, than during the past sixteen years.

At 6½ o'clock, Sabbath evening, we met around a long table to commemorate the death and sufferings of our dear Savior; when some two hundred partook of the bread and wine, and felt it was good to be there. As one brother remarked, the scene was "eloquent."

We had a pleasant interview with a Baptist minister, who came to hear. We find many, who have been indifferent to the great truths for the belief of which we have been called infidels, are now anxiously inquiring for the same "old paths"; and are astonished at their plainness, when they look at them, after they have taken off their theological goggles. They wonder that they could have been blinded so long by fables and tradition. The change in their feelings is a joyful one, almost equal to their conversion; and some say it is even greater. Their Bible is to them now an open book; before it was sealed.

The church in Lowell is alive, and growing in grace. We have never seen it in a better condition. The prayer-meetings are excellent, and seasons of real refreshing to the humble followers of Jesus. Their earnest efforts have done much towards spreading the light and truth in the city, causing the strong holds of error to tremble to their very foundation. Praise the Lord.

TIME OF THE COMING OF CHRIST.

We fully endorse the following, published in the "Voice of the West:"—

"The time of the advent is not to be kept out of sight." This is the great theme of this last hour of the dispensation. We must seek light, and give all the light we find on the subject. The miscalculations of prophetic students are no reason why we should not look for the true time. It will be the object of the tempter in this hour, to turn the hearts of God's people from this important portion of the truth. Let us understand his wiles, and keep wide awake on the times, and nearness of the advent."

We believe there is much danger that we lose sight of the evidence that Christ is coming soon. This subject should be kept before the church and people continually. It is meat in due season for all the friends of Jesus. In these last hours of peril, we need the stimulus afforded by the evidences which show that Jesus is soon coming. Let us hold them up everywhere.

BRO. INGHAM.

It is well known to many of our readers, that Bro. Ingham has been in a sad state of health during the past year, and has been in Lawrence, Mass., since the Springfield campmeeting. Those who know Bro. and Sister Ingham, need not be informed that they are worthy the sympathy of all christians. They have sacrificed their all for the cause of Christ. We learn that Sr. Ingham is now anxious to get her dear, sick husband back to their little home in Nova Scotia, where she can again be with her children, from whom she has been necessarily parted for several months. She does not feel able to take on her husband alone. She wishes some preaching brother could accompany her, and stay some three weeks and hold meetings. Is there not some one who can go? No doubt he who will go will never have cause for repentance. If any one will go, please drop a line to Sr. S. A. Ingham, Lawrence, Mass.

BRO. HIMES SICK.

We have just received a note from Bro. Wm. Himes, dated Cordova, Ill., April 20th, in which he says:—

"I am here with father, who has been very sick. The doctor gave him up on Saturday night, but now he is on the mend, decidedly. He has had a severe time, and will not be himself again for some weeks. He has had, as he said in his half-wandering moments, 'a narrow escape from sheol,' and is more than ever of the opinion that man is mortal."

Pray for him.

IMPORTANT NEWS.

The Mount of Olives has been purchased by a French lady, probably by the direction of Napoleon III., and the French Consul is to take possession of it next May, "in the name of France." This is the spot which the Crusaders endeavored to rescue from the hands of the infidels, and about which all Europe was stirred. It is a very significant event to have this memorable spot fall into the hands of Napoleon just at this time. He is accomplishing marvelous things in a very quiet way. We think other important events are close at hand in the career of this wonderful man.

Here is another interesting item of news, as follows:—

"The Liberal party in Rome declare they have positive information that Italy has joined France and Austria in a treaty of alliance, and that one of the covenants provides that 'the status quo shall be maintained at Rome till the death of Pius IX., when Rome shall be declared the capital of Italy."

For a number of years we have expected just what is announced in this last item of news. We have believed that "the ten horns" upon the scarlet-colored beast, of Rev. 17: 12, represent the ten divisions of Italy, whose work is to "hate" the harlot woman, "make her desolate and naked, . . . and burn her with fire; for God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled." The late "treaty" is in complete harmony with the foregoing.

In a Catholic Commentary on this scripture, published about 1860, we find the following:—

"By the late Italian war—the war of 1859—the same two Catholic powers [France and Austria] that altered, broke up, or joined the toes, have now repaired and arranged them again. Now, after the war in Italy, the Catholics have got all their kingdoms—all the toes—ready, all ready to be given up. The Italian war of 1859 was, as it were, for this very purpose. And it ceased suddenly when this object was accomplished. The Italian war raised up an additional and necessary kingdom—the kingdom of Venetia. . . . So that viewing the late Italian war of 1859 in a scriptural point of view, the object of it was to get the toes of the statue— . . . ten Catholic kingdoms—ready for the beast."

This Catholic writer thought the beast represented Mohammedanism; and that it would trample upon Rome about the middle of 1864, and continue its desolations for three and a half years, till the close of 1867, when the Lord would appear to deliver the Catholic church from the power of the Turkish oppression. But instead of being humbled by the Mohammedan power, the Roman woman has been hated and humbled by the ten divisions of Italy, who were once her lovers and protectors. Since 1859 they have been taking away the dominion" of "the Mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." Her final end and burning can not be far in the future.

THEATRICAL WICKEDNESS.

The wicked and licentious tendency of theatres is daily increasing. They are the highways to perdition, and are thronged with visitors, especially those theatres that are the most dangerous. Says the editor of the Home Journal:—

"The whole tendency of the hour is to make New York the Paris of the new world; and it is characteristic of imitation to seize upon the more prominent points of its model first. So true is this, that born and bred Parisians look with unfeigned astonishment upon the ambling facility with which we not only copy, but exaggerate, the vices of their native city. Paris sends us her fashions not only in dress but in moral laxity, in amusement, in festivity, in dissipation. All these we adopt with the eager voracity of a brilliant, but spoiled child, knocking down and pulling up by the roots one after another, the old time-honored, and once revered social landmarks, safe-guards and hedges. The present day might be aptly termed the can-can period in our history. The students and grisettes of the Latin quarter and the habitues of the Sardin Mabille, in the wildest of their mad revels, have a dance made up of graceful vulgarity and gymnastic indecency, in which extravagant suggestiveness is the principal feature. Through the medium of the stage, we have been introduced to this dance, and its devastating influences have spread far and wide, like a wild-fire. It tickled the popular fancy, fed the growing appetite for sensuality, and, before we knew it, became fashionable. Not many weeks since, it was presented nightly, in one form and another, at ten nominally first-class theatres in this city, before audiences, respectable in the best sense of word. But respectability cannot shield from taint in such an atmosphere; and when we remember what a large proportion of our citizens are theatre-goers, and what an immense influence for good or evil the theatres exert, we can but tremble in anticipation of the result of this subtle admixture of sensuous vice with our most popular diversion."

POLITICAL CATHOLICISM.

There is no doubt but that the Catholics in this country are laying plans to obtain the control of political matters. It will be recollected that from 1853 to 1856, there was a noted "Know-nothing movement designed to head off an expected opposition from the Catholics. It appears that their political feelings are no less strong now than then; and that they are becoming bold in their denunciations against those who took an active part in the "Know-nothing" movement.

It appears that James F. Babcock, Editor of the New Haven (Ct.) Palladium, took occasion to speak out plainly in his paper against the operations of the Catholics in this country. He is now a candidate for Congress. Sabbath morning, March 21st, 1869, a large number of hand bills were circulated in the Catholic meeting in Waterbury, Ct., on which may be found the following:—

"Fellow Catholics and Citizens of the Second Congressional District: We place before you, for your information, some of James F. Babcock's editorials on the questions which agitated the public mind during the never-to-be-forgotten reign of Know-Nothingism. It was miraculous that the scenes enacted in Louisville and other cities were not in like manner repeated here, when such unscrupulous bigots as Babcock and his ilk were hounding on the mob to deeds of violence and bloodshed all over the land. The Devil himself could not abuse the church of God, its venerable head, and its sacred dogmas, with a more diabolical virulence and blasphemy than did this man, the creature of a corrupt and venial convention, who, forgetting all decency and respect for the people they pretended to represent, thrust him (Babcock) into our very teeth, with all his 'crimes full blown as May,' thereby adding insult to injury. We ask you to read these articles carefully, and afterwards hand them also to your neighbor, so that all may know the man they are called upon to place in the halls of Congress."

After making several quotations from the Palladium, the hand bill closes with the following:—

"And now, fellow Catholics and citizens, after you have read over this array of damnable insults and innuendoes to our race, and all we hold in respect, can it be possible that any man who claims to be an Irishman or a Catholic, could possibly find it in accord with his conscience and self-respect to vote for a man who did all the harm he could in his day? Is it possible that we can be taunted with the usual reproaches that we would vote for any man the democratic party might place in nomination, and that we dare not at our peril do otherwise?

"Oh, shame! oh, perdurable shame, if we should be found so wanting in manhood! Let us now, when the occasion offers, beat back into the teeth of our enemies this infamous assertion. Let all men understand that any organization at war with our rights as citizens, cannot and will not be maintained. Let us in God's name, then, vote down this man Babcock, and teach others a lesson that will last a lifetime—that no man, or set of men, can abuse his fellow men or their religious principles with impunity. It will be an infamous disgrace if this fellow should get to Congress. See to it, then, that his name is scratched wherever and in whatever form it appears. Deceptive tickets will be introduced by paid hirelings. Examine them carefully, and scratch out and vote down this deceptive and corrupt politician.

"This is no political dodge, but an honest appeal from your brethren of New Haven, who know Babcock unfortunately but too well."

SPIRITUALISM AND BUDDHISM.

The Spiritualists are advocating the same doctrines as the old Buddhists; and, no doubt, get them from the same source—the lying demons. The Buddhists believe that "the soul" is "an emanation of the Divine Being, which, after having accomplished its transmigration, returns to its high origin."—Discoveries in Afghaniston, by H. T. Prinsep, and the Theogony of the Hindoos, by Count M. Bjornstjerna, p. 88.

The Hindoos believed "that the soul . . . had existed from eternity (had pre-existed), and, consequently, must be an emanation from the infinite, eternal Spirit, who fills the universe, having proceeded from the latter as beams from the sun."—Theogony of the Hindoos, p. 28.

"Menu [the Hindoo 'Commentator'] affirms that God and the world are one; . . . that all is God, and that God is all."—Ibid. p. 54.

"The soul is enclosed in the body as in a shell." "At death it leaves the body, ascends on high," and "clothes itself in a watery veil."—Ibid. p. 74.

In China, the followers of Confucius, and Lao-tse (born 604 B.C., 54 years before Confucius) "both deny divine revelation." Lao-tse founded the religion of the Tao (supreme reason.)" Its followers "believe in the existence of a spiritual world, in spiritual manifestations, and a migration of souls." "The real religion of the Chinese is the worship of deceased ancestors."—New Amer. Encyclopædia, vol. 5, pp. 104–5.

"CAUSES OF BACKSLIDING."

The above is the heading of a pithy article in Zion's Herald, from Bro. H. P. Blood. Zion's Herald is the leading Methodist paper in New England. We are glad to find some of the Methodist ministers speaking out so faithfully against the "causes of backsliding." This minister says:—

"Among the prominent causes of backsliding are secret socities, and church gatherings of a worldly character.

Converts are brought into close contact with the world in these gatherings, and are taught to return to their former ways and practices. Often they are led even beyond what they had known of sin in their former life.

Many have taken their first lessons in gambling at church festivals.

Here they meet with the 'wheel of fortune,' 'lotteries,' 'grab-bags,' 'fish-ponds,' 'target-shooting,' and a host of new and popular inventions; all as barefaced lessons in gambling as are given in any gambling hell on the face of the earth.

But they are told that this is not gambling; and hence are taught lessons in lying, which is ever an accompaniment to gambling.

If, however, it is allowed that these things savor of gambling, it is then taught that the end justifies the means; hence 'Let us do evil that good may come,' is the lesson impressed. Is it strange that converts backslide?"

WILL THEY LIVE AGAIN?

Will some one please answer this: Is there any chance for the wicked to live again, in the plan of salvation? TRUTH SEEKER.

Yes, for Jesus tasted death "for every man," (Heb. 2: 9), and if he "died for all, then were all dead," (2 Cor. 5: 14. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. 15: 22. "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." Jno. 5: 28–29. We were all in Adam when he sinned, and thus partook of his mortal nature. Christ died for the first man, and brought him back from the embrace of death, and all his posterity; as when one buys a fruit tree, including all the fruit it will ever bear; with the privilege of disposing of the fruit as the purchaser may think best. Jesus has paid the price necessary to buy Adam and all his posterity from the claims of the law that held them in death, and in this way has become the "Savior of all men;" and "specially of those that believe." 1 Tim. 4: 10. He saves 'all men' from the power "of the second death." As men die in consequence of what Adam did; it is right that they should have their life restored to them unconditionally, and then answer for what they have done themselves.

NEW MUSIC.

Many who have heard the Freedmen sing "The General Roll," have been anxious to obtain the music. Bro. Geo. E. We can furnish "The General Roll," and "Jesus comes again," on one sheet for five cents, postage 2 cts. Per doz., 50 cts., post-paid.

GERMAN TRACTS.

We have received from Bro. L. Reimer, of Philadelphia, the following German tracts, viz:—

1. "The Hope of the Dead in Christ."
2. "The Future Doom of the Ungodly."
3. "What is Man?"
4. "Answer to the Charge of Heresy."
5. "Rich Man and Lazarus."

ROCHESTER.

We spent the 18th with the church in this place. The cordial greetings from all well paid for sleepless nights before reaching here, and we trust good will result from this unexpected meeting. The church here have endeared themselves to me by all the kind acts of christian affection. We have shared together the buffetings of Satan and the joys of hope. The celestial pathway has opened up before us the beauties of an endless life. The fields and groves of Eden restored have rejoiced our hearts, and we have talked and sung of our beautiful home, as though it were already prepared; but we remember that here is no rest; like the velocipede, we can only keep upright by running; stop treading, and our vehicle is over.

Our morning meeting was specially interesting. The testimonies of many show a deep experience in the things of God. Our deaf Bro., who is called by some our D.D., says, "Keep yourselves in the love of God." The cars could not keep on the track unless there was something about their wheels different from other wheels; there must be something to keep them on the rail; there must be a flange. So on God's track to the kingdom; every thing else may be right, but unless we have our wheels flanged with the love of God, we go into the ditch; therefore "keep yourselves in the love of God."

One devoted German Bro. says: "I love my Bible so goot, since I came to these meetings, that I bro't my farder and brodder with me this morning; so they may love my Jesus too." The father's eyes moistened, and the brother's tears increased to sobs, while each observing heart seemed to say, This is the house of God; this is the gate of heaven.

A RECEIPT

FOR CHRISTIANS WHO COMPLAIN THAT THEIR RELIGIOUS PAPER GROWS UNINTERESTING.

Sit down immediately and write the best article you are capable of. As we are commanded by high authority to "seek to edify one another," choose a subject you think the best calculated to edify; clothe it with the best language of which you are master; and if you only write enough to fill one column of a common newspaper, you will find it is more like labor than you had thought. Send it immediately to your editor, and when it comes out fairly printed, compare it with those articles you thought so insipid, commonplace, etc., and see how far it eclipses them in point of interest. If in your judgment it really does stand number one, why then try it again, and choose a subject of sufficient magnitude to occupy two or three columns; and if by this time your editor, his subscribers and yourself, really think a new interest is added to the paper, why then it is plain you ought to be a helper instead of a complainer.

Try it, and see if this is not the diagnosis of your moral dyspepsia,—not having labored sufficiently to gain a healthy appetite,—hence you are dainty, because disordered, and will only pick here and there a sweetmeat. Then, as for Therapeutics, I would recommend labor, labor, LABOR!! For I have noticed this effect follows this cause; those who labor most complain the least, and vice versa; whether it be in helping forward a religious paper, the prayer-meeting, or sustaining any other religious interest. "The LABORERS are seldom complainers."

EUROPEAN WAR-CLOUDS.

The correspondent of the Philadelphia Morning Post, writes from Paris under date of February 2d, that this year must inevitably bring forth a general and fierce European war. Every country in Europe has long been dissatisfied to the utmost with its own and the general situation. The sudden and radical subversion of the economical laws, which for centuries governed the world, have dislocated the habits and interests of all classes, and led to discontent, material sufferings, and demoralization, which induces part of the people to think that a new territorial partition of the continent among the different races will result to the universal advantage. The rest of the people, the greatest number, are confident that a general revolution, whatever may be the geographical result, will give them the best opportunity for establishing the economical law henceforth, their favorite theme, the socialist dogma. So that, though divided as to the secret or avowed reasons for war and its ultimate consequences, all, high or low, rich or poor, capitalists or laborers, economists or socialists, join in a common and irresistible call for WAR.

France, where both people and rulers have been so deeply wounded in their pride and prestige for the last six years, is longing for the signal to advance to the Rhine, for it is very likely in the vicinity of that river that the European Gordian knot will be cut; and besides her ambition for glory and her desire to regain her natural frontiers, France, perhaps, more than any other power in Europe, is eager for war, because of the above-explained economical uneasiness. As for the Emperor, he seems certainly resolved to play the whole for the whole. If he succeeds in getting the Rhine, and assuming again the role of arbitrator of Europe, he will reach the goal that he has ever had before him; and he is bent upon gaining it, or falling gallantly and with the honors of war.

Prussia, drunk with glory since the day of Sadowa, is eager for a contest with France, not only for political purposes, but also to give the proof that the Prussian army is the first army in the world, and the Prussian generals the first generals. Behind Prussia, all Germany waits but a word from Berlin to rush toward the Rhine first, and the Danube soon after.

Russia, stronger than ever after the annihilation of Poland and the failure of the Western scheme of conciliation between the Mohammedan and the Christian populations of the Ottoman empire, will rise as a single man, with enthusiasm and confidence in her final success. She is ready to make all sacrifices to avenge her disasters in 1855, and to give the coup de grace to the "sick man," whose succession is hers, (according to a religious and political faith,) from the Pruth to the Amoor. Sustained, morally and materially, by all the Greco-slave populations of the Sultan's dominions, numbering nearly two-thirds of the whole, the traditional Moscovian policy meets now with a chance that Russia would certainly not allow her government to throw away. But the emperor and his counsellors share the resolution of the people to set up the St. Andrew's cross upon the shores of the Bosphorous.

Austria—poor Austria! who is being day after day dismembered, and whose prestige was forever lost at Sadowa, has but one chance to recover part of her greatness and influence among nations, and that chance is war.—Ex.

REPORT OF R. I. AND EAST CONN. CONFERENCE,

HELD AT DANIELSONVILLE, CT., APRIL 7TH, 8TH, AND 9TH, 1869.

This conference, for various reasons, was thinly attended by preachers and delegates; yet, from its beginning, God's presence was manifest, and that presence dispersed our gloom, and made all within us rejoice. Wednesday evening, Bro. Sweet gave us a timely word from. Phil. 2: 21.

Thursday A. M. and Friday A. M. were devoted to business sessions. Two dollars and ninety cents were reported in the treasury. The following churches reported: Foster, R. I., by letter.—Young converts mostly holding on. Zeal among older ones languishing again, somewhat. Abington, Ct., by Clerk.—Without change. No special interest. Westerly, R. I., by letter.—Struggling against sin in all its forms. Prayer-meetings interesting. Truth gaining ground. Determined to press the battle to the enemy's gates. One added since last conference.

Lafayette, R. I., by A. G. Brown.—Trying to serve God. Four have joined us since last conference. Rockland, R. I., by J. S. Collins.—In trial still, but mean to regain lost ground. Scituate, R. I., by Bro. Angell.—United and in good working order. Danielsonville, Ct., by Bro. Shumway.—Some growing amid trials. One had fallen and been restored. One had been converted. Another, not a member, but a visitor with the church, had been silenced for disorderly conduct.

PREACHERS' REPORTS.

Bro. E. Bellows had labored in revival at West Gloucester, R. I. Seventeen converted, one reclaimed; others from other churches are about to change their relations. Bro. C. H. Sweet had endeavored to do duty; had seen some converted to God. D. V. Corey had preached nearly every Sabbath, and worked during the week with his hands. Way of manual labor now hedged up. Thought it might be duty to give himself more fully to the work.

Bro. I. B. Potter felt Jesus more precious than ever. Had held meetings of interest in Westfield, Mass. Some sought the Lord. Had labored also at New Haven, Guilford, Woodstock Valley, North Somers, and East Haddam, Ct. At the latter place about thirty sought the Lord. Bro. J. S. Collins had been blessed in holding meetings in the centre of Gloucester, R. I. Also found Jesus very precious at home. Bro. D. O. Hopkins had labored at Comer's Hill, Killingly, Ct. Some had been converted. Felt free in Christ; was ready for his coming. The Clerk reported his labors at home and abroad, but as they have already appeared in the Crisis, we omit them here.

These reports being given in, the Western Ct. Conference invited us, through their committee, Bro. I. B. Potter, to join them in holding a union campmeeting upon an old-fashioned plan, to be located somewhere between Plainfield and Plainville, Ct., on the Hartford and Fishkill R. R. After some interesting remarks as to the demands for such a meeting, it was unanimously voted, That it is the sense of this meeting that R. I. unite with Conn. in holding such a meeting. On motion, a committee of two was chosen to confer with the committee of the Western Ct. Conference as to time, place, and all other matters pertaining to a complete arrangement for the proposed campmeeting. Brn. Bellows and Carpenter were appointed that committee.

The conference then adjourned its business session to meet at River Point, R. I., or at North Scituate, R. I., as the Moderator and Clerk should decide best.

Thursday P. M., Bro. E. Bellows cheered many pilgrim hearts from 2 Pet. 3: 9; and Bro. I. B. Potter gave a quickening word the same evening from 1 Cor. 15: 58. Friday P. M., Bro. C. H. Sweet gave a clear, heart-searching word from Matt. 7: 1; and Bro. Potter again in the evening gave a profitable discourse. One sought the Lord during the conference. Though the attendance from abroad was not large, our evening congregations were good, and all felt at the close that the meeting had not been in vain.

BOOK NOTICE.

"Give attendance to reading."

THE LIFE AND EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL." "BY CONYBEAR AND HOWSON." "PEOPLE'S EDITION."

This is a reprint of an English edition, and is a work of rare merit. It is a great work, illustrating the life and labors of the "great apostle" of our Lord, by giving copious statements of the civil and religious condition of the Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans, in the times of Paul; the countries he visited, the routes he traveled, illustrated by landscapes, cuts and maps, together with a statement of the events connected with his mission, which are of thrilling interest, in foot-notes to the epistles. Also varied versions of many passages of Paul's epistles. It contains a great amount of valuable information, which every lover of the gospel would like to possess. Some of the comments in the foot-notes contain some of the popular errors of modern times, but these can be overlooked. The work was prepared by W. J. Conybear, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Eng., and J. S. Howson, D.D., Principal of the Collegiate Institute, Liverpool.

There is much work bestowed upon this book, and he who buys it will get the worth of his money. Be careful which you buy. There are three publishers in this country publishing it. One publishes it with Greek and Latin notes, another has it abridged, while S. S. Scranton & Co., Hartford, Ct., publish the full edition, with the notes translated into English. Be sure and get "The People's Edition," by S. S. Scranton & Co. Price $3.00.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. J. Maress.

To my dear Brn., Srs., and Friends:—I believe that many of you, who befriended me when I was on my pilgrim journey, have been disappointed in not hearing from me through the Crisis, according to my promise; but I can assure you, that I wrote when I was in Detroit; then I had been three weeks from Chicago; but by some mistake the letter has been mislaid, so it was not put in the Crisis; but I can assure you all that the Lord was with me all the way through my journey. It was seventy-nine days from the time I left my home till I returned back; and the good Master provided a bed for me every night; and although my feet were wet most of the time, and I had to carry from twenty to thirty pounds weight of tracts, with clothing, yet I can truly say that I never felt better in my life; for the Lord was with me, and his yoke is easy, and his burden is light. I have been paid a hundred-fold in this time, with persecution, and although I have felt like a bruised reed, and been called a fanatic, yet the good Lord has strengthened me, and I have found his yoke is easy, and his burden is light.

I find that the greatest trials are when we get persecuted by one in like precious faith; but thank the Lord, none of these things move me, for I am willing to be called anything, suffer anything for the Lord's sake. I would say to all my brethren and sisters, that if any of you feel that the Lord calls you to go into the highways and hedges, don't think you are not strong enough in the Lord, but go at once; for it is the best college to go to, and you will have the best teacher to teach you by his Spirit. I have found him most precious to me on my journey; and truly the harvest is ripe and the laborers are very few. I pray that the good Master will send me again, and more into his vineyard. I have been often asked, How I can afford to buy my tracts, and give my time, and not charge anything on the road? My answer is to all such inquiries, that since the most merciful Lord has called me into the vineyard at the eleventh hour, I give the money that I used to lay out in tobacco, beer, and all other useless things that have any tendency to pride; and I can declare to all that read this letter, that I feel stronger, happier, and wiser, than when I used them; and now I am going to work hard to support my little family, and to have a dollar for Master whenever he requires it of me. Although I was fifty-five last March, if my Master sends me next to New Orleans, and to come back on foot, my heart says, Good Lord, here I am, send me. Now as I am not quite eighteen months in this blessed truth, and feeling assured that we are all in the eleventh hour, I wish to double my diligence.

Dear brethren and sisters, pray for unworthy me, that amidst all the scoffs and frowns, I may hold out till the end. I would say to any of my friends, that helped me on my pilgrim journey, if they wish to take the Crisis, or the Christian, or the Voice of the West, and cannot afford to pay for it, I shall feel it a privilege to send it at my own expense. For the encouragement of others, that may be as weak as I was when I first left my home to work in the vineyard, I can assure you that I have been in many a battle in towns and villages with the enemy, but I cried aloud and spared not, and the Lord always gave me the victory. Yours in the Lord,

J. J. MARESS.

From Sr. Mary N. Stearns.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—It is high time that we were awake, improving our talents. The reckoning day is at hand. Can we be silent and stupid while we see a world coming to the judgment? God forbid. "Up, thou drowsy soldier, worlds are charging to the shock." The Lord calls for laborers in his service, true volunteers; men who are not afraid to die; who will esteem it a privilege to engage anew in this warfare. Who will sound the last notes of warning to a guilty world? Ah! I hear the response from warm hearts, We will go. Glory to God. The Lord will have his work done. May we all feel it a privilege to share in the work. No idlers on this line; all must work their passage. I rejoice that it is so. We receive a large bounty as we pass along, and eternal life at the end of the journey. Glory to God for ever. Amen. MARY N. STEARNS.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. A. F. SHELDON (brother to William), Burrillville, R. I., March 26th, writes:—"I wish to acknowledge a little first. I used to think you a mean man, deluded by the Devil, because you preached that man had not an immortal soul. I considered you dangerous to society; still I was a member of an evangelical church. I was where Paul was when he was going to Damascus to persecute the church. I verily believed I had an immortal soul, that would either go to heaven or hell at death; and I thought that he who believed and taught any other doctrine than this was all wrong, and much to blame. Silus Tucker used to try to argue the point with me, but I thought he was blind, leading the blind, and both would fall into the ditch. I hated the name of Second Advent; but, dear brother, I am convinced by God's revealed will to man, that Christ has 'become the first fruits of them that slept'; that 'as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive; . . . Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.' I read that Christ is now a mediator between God and man; that the time is coming (and I think soon), when he will leave the mediatorial seat and become a Judge, and 'all that are in the graves . . . shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation.'

I feel that God has, for Christ's sake, forgiven me my sins, and I am now waiting for the second coming of my Savior, when he shall bring our reward with him—eternal life.

Forgive me for my hardness, and hard feelings for your faithfulness in preaching the truth. Pray for me that I may learn more of the truths of the Bible. May God bless you and the truth."

BRO. A. PENNEL, Honeoye, N. Y., writes: "It is no very strange thing that people, coming as we have from the thick darkness of the popular theology, should differ in some points, especially when we consider how hard it is to unlearn errors that have almost been interwoven in our natures. Then, again, it is quite mortifying and humiliating to a man, who was regarded as knowing something, and fancying himself that he did, to find after carefully studying the Bible that he hardly knew anything aright; or, in other words, to be converted over again, when he had never backslidden. To be converted to the popular theology strikes deep into the roots of pride in the human heart; but to be converted to Bible theology roots out the last vestige of it. Now, and not till now, is he truly a disciple of Jesus Christ. I am not theorizing on this point. It is my own experimental knowledge. I would not be uncharitable to any who profess to be the friends of Jesus; but how little does that sectarian, creed-bound devotee of popular theology know of the liberty and power of the gospel of the Son of God. Christ told his disciples they should know the truth, and the truth should make them free. How many of his professed disciples of the present day have found this out? What an awful upheaving of the present order of things it would take to do it. This will probably not be till the day of Jesus Christ, and may that day soon come."

BRO. S. BUSH writes:—"I was first led to adopt the views I now have by reading the last chapter of Malachi, and the parable of the wheat and tares. These led me to believe that the wicked would be destroyed in the day of judgment; but I was a Baptist, and thought we must have a spirit that would live when the body was dead. The idea that the whole man slept, I thought was awful. I thought the reply to the thief on the cross, by our Savior, was enough on that point to settle it forever. But I began to investigate the subject, and when I got once into the stream, there was no landing, although I caught at every willow on the bank, and threw out my line for every snubbing post; but neither snubbing post or willow would hold, until I was clear over the dam. But when I got over, every thing was as clear as day. I saw that we were to have eternal life through a resurrection from the dead. I began to read your tracts, and found I was with them, and they with the Bible, and could not help it.

The Baptists could not stand such a doctrine as that, and began to cry, 'Heresy, heresy; away with him, away with him'; and as Christ was crucified for heresy, so I was banished from the church for advocating that same heresy. He said, 'My reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be'; that is, when he comes again; so I taught, and they cast me out; but still I feel that my name is recorded in the Lamb's book of life; and if I hold out faithful, I shall receive a crown of life when Jesus comes, that will not fade away."

BRO. T. W. RICHARDS, Augusta, Wis., Apr. 8th, 1869, writes:—"I have always desired to write you, since we had that blessed meeting at Fairfield, last June. It was there I obeyed my Master, by being buried with him in baptism, and ever since I have been crucifying and mortifying this sinful body and trying to live in the Spirit. I know his Spirit dwells in my heart to-day, and I shall come off conqueror if I patiently continue in well-doing, and with you, Bro., reap eternal life. I long for that day when that same Jesus (Acts 1: 11) will come again. The times are eminently portentous, and the most astounding events are likely and liable to be compressed into a few days, weeks or months, at most. Surely, we are in the "quickly" time (Rev. 3: 11). It seems, as Bro. Turner remarked in a sermon the other day, that this world is running as it were without a history. All is about accomplished, but his coming. The works of these lying spirits are about to be made manifest to all men, as were those of Jannes and Jambres. Ex. 8: 17–19.

I have just returned from Burns, and had the pleasure of meeting with the dear saints, who enjoy the labors of Brn. Hough, Dennis, Downer, and Adams. The cause prospers gloriously, and I was much refreshed and strengthened by meeting with them. It does one good to see the hopeful and happy countenances of those that love the appearing of Jesus. Bro. Hough is a hard worker, and a faithful laborer. The great day only will show all the good he has done.

Eld. Turner is located here, and we have a few that contend for this faith once delivered to the saints. We have preaching every two weeks, and prayer-meeting every week. Eld. Hough is coming to labor and help Bro. Turner, and we trust in the Lord that some brands will be plucked from the burning. I have not held any meetings myself lately, but intend to arrange to have them every Sabbath, and week days, when convenient. My heart is in the work, and trust God will open a way for me. The other churches appear to be getting more embittered against us than ever. I do wish you could come up here.

I hope the brethren will excuse me for not writing to them, as I have to write left-handed, since I lost the use of my right hand a year ago. I send my best wishes to them, and all the other brethren. Let us rally for Jesus. We are on the last charge. We will soon gather at the river. Our warfare will soon be accomplished. Our elder brother will redeem us, and present us before the throne of his Father."

Bro. Thomas Rines, Augusta, Me., Feb. 27th, writes:—"The Lord is at work by his Spirit at Mud Mills, converting sinners, and reclaiming backsliders. When we commenced laboring there, there was not a praying house in the place; now the family altar is erected in about every house, and still the good Spirit is at work. Praise the Lord, to whom be all the glory. Brn. Somes and Weeks have been laboring in the same place of late.

There is also quite an interest awakened in the Preble district, Windsor. Some backsliders have been reclaimed, and sinners are beginning to inquire what they must do to be saved. The people in these places are very poor, as regards this world's goods, and unable to do anything to support the gospel; and they have been sadly neglected by the preaching brethren. A little more than a year ago, when we first commenced laboring in those places, there had not been any kind of a meeting for over a year."

Bro. Josiah Willoughby, Keswick, P. O., Canada, writes:—"I have read several numbers of your worthy paper, the World's Crisis, with great interest, being perfectly satisfied that what it teaches is in accordance with the truth of the gospel, as it is in Christ our living head. We thank God that there are a few of us who believe in the second coming of our blessed Lord and Master, and are waiting patiently for the same. At present we are holding a discussion on the truths of the living God. Our opponents affirm that the soul of man is immortal. We have had two nights. The last night, our opponents seemed to be willing to leave it to the house. We divided it in favor of the negative. Two thirds majority were in our favor."

Sr. A. D. Flagg, Torrington, Ct., March 28th, writes:—"I have had the privilege, for the past two months, of visiting quite a number of churches in this State, and had many good seasons with the brethren and sisters; but some places that I visited are very much in want of more preaching. In these cases they are out in the country, where there are no R. R., or stage routes; consequently the preachers are very few, and it has been said to me many times, 'O that we could have more preaching.' Now it has been impressed on my mind, for some time, to ask the preachers, through the 'Crisis', if they would think seriously of this matter and go more out into the country. There are many friends ready to receive them, and if they will go through the part I have been through, I know the Lord will bless them. In some places I have no doubt they will find financial affairs at a low ebb; but most of the farmers have a good horse and wagon, and are always ready to carry them from one place to another. I have a route that I think is a good one, I will give it here, then the brethren will know where to find good houses on the way. Take the cars at Bridgport, on the Housatonic R. R., go to Lanesville, call on Bro. Marsh, stay there as long as the Lord directs. Bro. Marsh will carry you to New Milford. There is a little band of colored people there who will give them a hearty reception. Their hearts are in the Lord's service and are looking for his coming. They will devise means to convey you to New Preston, where you will be received gladly by Bro. and Sr. Baldwin, and they are anxious to hear the word. You can then go to Washington, and stop with Sr. French. She will be glad to take care of any of the Lord's children. From there to Morris, to Bro. Emmons', where there are quite a number of the Lord's children, ready to hear and profit by the word they are so much in need of. There, too, you can learn of different routes. Brethren are ready to carry you any where the Lord directs.

The time has come when we ought to go into the high ways and hedges and compel men to come to the marriage supper of the Lamb. May the Lord direct some of the preachers to go this way, and if they go trusting in him, they will be rewarded an hundred fold in this world, and in the world to come eternal life."

Sr. B. Waterhouse, Mechanics Falls, Me., writes:—"It encourages me on the heavenly journey to hear through your excellent paper from so many of like precious faith. For two years I have read the 'Crisis' every week, and should feel sad and lonely to be deprived of its weekly visits. By it I have learned the truth of the gospel. I have also learned there is no true happiness in this life but in the service of God. I thank the Lord I have a hope that is like an anchor to my soul, both sure and steadfast, It affords me comfort and consolation while journeying along the rugged pathway of this life, and gives me to expect an entrance into the kingdom of heaven. I feel like girding on the armor anew and fighting the good fight of faith, and laying hold on eternal life. Jesus will soon come to make up his jewels, and gather all his children home. I want to be numbered among them, and be made like him, and have this body fashioned like his glorious body, when he shall reign on the new earth for ever and ever. Lord help me to live in constant readiness, so that when he who is our life shall appear, I may also appear with him in glory."

Sr. M. J. Isham writes:—"This morning my heart is drawn out towards those who are afflicted by the loss of their precious little ones, whose hearts ache as mine aches. To whom the world seems as nothing, who look in vain for the sweet face, the curly hair, the clear blue eye, that so lately met their gaze. The 17th of Jan., 1869, my beautiful little girl, Jennie Louise Isham, of Bloomfield, Ct., aged five years, two months, fell asleep in Jesus, after one week's sickness of scarlet fever. While I write these words, I ask myself, as I often do, How do mothers live, and see those we love snatched from our homes? How can we come around the table at meal time, and see one chair empty, one plate gone? How do we live, and lay the doll away, the tea-set, and the little thimble, we have seen so often used in those long winter evenings? The little patch-work is taken out; mamma threads the needle, makes the knot, and little fingers work so busily, until little eyes are heavy with sleep; then the Lord's prayer is said, the good-night kiss, and we lay our darling in her little bed, thanking God for so great a blessing. And I still ask how do mothers live when all this is taken from them, and the little one is carried from her father's house to the cold, cold grave?

While the heart is almost broken, the home desolate, there arises a ray of light, and as we look it expands, brighter and still brighter, and we wonder why we cannot keep it before our eyes,—'Thy child shall live again.' Blessed hope. It lifts our fainting spirit up, and we pray God to help us to keep the blessed promise before our eyes. When people come to comfort us, and say, Try to think your little one is an angel, a bright happy spirit, safe in Jesus' arms in her home in heaven, I wonder how people read their Bibles. Rachel's only promise was, Thy child shall come from the land of the enemy, and I feel willing to wait for the dear Jennie I saw put in the grave—all that composed my dear child, that is what I want to see; that same loved one.

These afflictions are sent to wean us from this world, and the things that are in the world; O Lord, help that they may be used aright, and answer the purpose for which they were sent. I do praise God for our hope. There is not another hope that can be compared to ours. Now mothers, let us try to wait patiently, and work for those in our families that have not this hope, for the little ones will be there. There is not a shadow of doubt but that they will be in the kingdom. How I long for that day. My soul cries out, Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

WORCESTER CONFERENCE.

Bro. Grant:—The State Conference at Worcester was a success. Those that have attended the conferences in the past, know they all have been good, and they are destined to do good, and if all would take more of an interest in them, they would be better than now. The one at W. was a good one, and was very well represented. The church in W. did their part well. Quite an interest was manifested Sunday. May the interest in the conference continue to increase, and the blessing of God rest upon them all.

Geo. A. Streeter.

IS IT HONEST?

A brother, who is not a preacher, suggests the publication of the following:

Have you paid your preacher? Do not turn away to some other collumn, because you may not relish this discussion. Say, have you paid him? We do not ask if you have given him anything? Not that. Have you discharged your obligation to him? Can he eat wind? Can he and his wife and children subsist on good wishes?

The preacher is alive, it may be, but what have you done to keep him alive? Are you a member of his congregation? Do you go and take your seat quietly, hear his sermon over, on which he has labored many long hours and perhaps days? Do you come out at the close and say, "A fine sermon—an eloquent discourse?" Have you paid him for it? How can you sit in his church, and look him in the face, if you have not? The preacher may have been paid something, but who did it? Did you help?

Can it be possible that any honest man would be willing that others should support the preacher while he does nothing? Are you not a member of his church? Upon what principle is it that you can escape the duty while I cannot? Suppose we were hungry—a number of us order a repast—we all eat, drink and are satisfied. The bill must be paid. But instead of coming up like a gentleman and paying his part, one of the company slinks off and leaves the burden on the others, who are to ohonorable to let it go unpaid? What would be said of that man? Would he be considered honest? Not he. The man who will not pay his preacher is no better. Not a whit. There is no use in withholding the truth.—Ex.

Obituaries.

McCullock. Died in Rochester, N. Y., April 8th, Anna B., infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. N. McCulloch, aged ten weeks and four days.

Thus we have been called to follow another precious jewel to the resting place of the dead, there to sleep until the Lifegiver comes, and bid it arise to die no more. We have laid away six loved ones; but glory to God, they will soon come from the enemy's land to their own borders, with shouts of victory over the grave. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. A. A. Phelps, from these words: "This year thou shalt die." Jer. 28: 16.

N. McCullock.

Fletcher. In Colebrook, N. H., of consumption, April 1st, Mrs. Eliza A. Fletcher, widow of Mr. John Fletcher, and daughter of the late Elder Benaiah Bean, aged forty-two years and nine months.

Ours is the blest assurance that she sweetly sleeps in Jesus.

S. B. W. Mulliken.

Turner. Died in Etna, April 6th, of consumption, Matilda E., daughter of Bro. John and Sr. Wetha Turner, aged twenty-seven years, eight months, and sixteen days.

May the Lord bless them in their hour of affliction. Services by Eld. John Morrell.

Mary S. Turner.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Madrid, April 21. The Cortes is considering a project for the reorganization of the army, on the Prussian system.

Another informal meeting of the members of the majority in the Cortes was held to-day to nominate a candidate for the throne. So great was the diversity of opinion that the meeting broke up without result, leaving the members more widely divided than before on the subject. Prime Minister Serrano declared that the choice of Montpensier for King or the declaration of a Republic were the only possible alternatives. Gen. Prim, who was also present, remained silent throughout the proceedings. His conduct has given rise to a wide-spread belief that he would not be unwilling to accept the Presidency of a Spanish Republic.

DOMESTIC.

New York, April 21. A Montreal special says the desire of the people of the New Dominion to cut loose from their dependence upon the Mother Country has received a powerful impetus from one or two recent events, and whatever course may finally be adopted there can be little doubt that a great political change of some sort is not far distant. Several private meetings of influential persons have recently been held here for the purpose of considering the question of a change in the form of Government, and the general dissatisfaction with the present state of things is more and more openly expressed.

There is a party in favor of independence, but a larger part aims at annexation to the United States, and will soon make itself prominent. The acquisition of the Hudson Bay territory has given additional force to the arguments of the annexationists, and it is felt that such a magnificent domain as the New Dominion now promises to be, ought no longer to be dwarfed and kept down by dependence on a trans-Atlantic government.

April 22. A London special says: The London papers of to-day comment very freely on the present state of affairs in Cuba. The Telegraph, a ministerial organ, and moderate in tone, says that in regard to the independence of Cuba England is unbiassed, but at the same time admits that England's interests can be best subserved by Spain retaining her authority in the Island. The article does not say, however, that in any case it should be the business of England to interfere and endeavor to prevent Cuban independence, but it maintains that the good offices of England might prove useful to arrest a quarrel between Spain and America. It designates the seizure of the brig Mary Lowell as a mad act, implicating England, Spain's best friend, unless the latter country offer reparation for the insult. The article then goes on to argue that the Cubans can never willingly attach themselves to the United States.

The London Owl argues that President Grant has been mad on the subject of Cuba, and thinks England and France would interfere if America attempts to wrest the Island from Spain. Grant, says the Owl, longs for a foreign war, knowing, as he does, that the feeling at present pervading American officials is one of intense hatred to England, and, though in a less degree, to France. It is stated that in a day or two a yacht will be dispatched from here to Cuba on a mission from the Government, to ascertain the exact position of affairs. There is a belief that a heavy storm is brewing, which may yet occasion much trouble.

New York, April 22. A Montreal special says the order for the withdrawal of the British troops from Canada in May next is said, by well informed persons, to be held in abeyance for a while. There will be, however, considerable changes in the military stations, and one change, both curious and unaccountable, is the transfer of troops from Montreal to Quebec, which has been ordered. The general order from the Horse Guards directing the return of the regiments to England and to foreign stations has never been withdrawn, and considerable uncertainty prevails in consequence. The dispatch from London stating that the United States had demanded of the British Government an explanation regarding the capture of the Mary Lowell, is regarded here as showing a speck of war.

The exodus of French Canadians to the United States still continues, and another load of them went west yesterday.

The Star takes the ground that the time has now arrived when the question of independence or annexation must be met, but the young Canadian party is still undecided on the subject. There will probably be a strong meeting with closed doors in a day or two.

Accounts of the late Freshet.

Springfield, Mass., April 21. The Connecticut river at this city was nineteen feet above low water mark this afternoon, and is still rising. No serious damage is yet reported, though the dwellings in the exposed portions of the city are partially submerged and deserted. Railroad travel between Brattleboro and Bellows Falls, Vt., is interrupted, and the trains now go by the way of Keene, N. H.

Concord, N. H. The Merrimack river has continued steadily rising to-day, and is now very high. The intervales are overflowed for a long distance, and present a beautiful appearance. The roads to East Concord and Pittsfield are both impassable. The steam engine at the Concord Railroad shops has been stopped by high water.

The Ammonoosuc river is very high, and the trains cannot get over a portion of the track near the Bath depot.

The railroad bridge at Braintree, Vt., was carried away this morning.

April 22. The Merrimack river is still rising very fast, and at this point it is higher, with one exception, than at any time since 1852. At Sewall's Falls the water washes the bottom of the bridge, and if it rises much longer the structure will be carried away. A portion of the Concord and Portsmouth railroad, near Hooksett, is flooded and impassable for trains.

On the Passumpsic railroad no trains have been further north than Barton since Tuesday morning.

Last night another wash-out occurred on the Passumpsic, and now the trains can go no further than Newbury. Several of the passengers from that route have been taken across the Connecticut River in boats to the Montreal road. It is reported that the rafts of logs above Wells River have broken away and a large number of rivermen passed north through Concord this forenoon. There is a large wash-out at South Charlestown and the passengers are carried by in boats. One report says that two million feet of logs have broken away from McIndoe's falls and are doing great damage.

Montpelier, Vt., April 21. We have almost an unprecedented high water here to day as the result of the warm and heavy rain which fell during last night. The streets are inundated in several places in the village. State street, from the old Episcopal church nearly to the cemetery, is almost entirely under water. Near the Main street bridge over the Winooski the water flowed across the highway into and around the residence of Mr. Chas. Silver, threatening for a time to undermine it and sweep it away. Temporary dams have been erected in several places to prevent damage to private and public property. All grocery keepers, barbers, and other occupants of cellars and basement stories in the business part of the town have been drowned out. In many cases their shops are filled with water, on the surface of which float chairs, benches, boxes, tubs and barrels. It is said that the firm of Bancroft & Holmes removed over forty tons of goods during the forenoon.

Although it stopped raining at eleven o'clock this forenoon, there seems to be no abatement of the flood. Of some five or six stages running to and from this point not one had arrived or departed to-day. The flood is the worst since June 1851.

Montreal, April 22. There is no hope of relief by the ice breaking up. The Custom House is surrounded and the water has reached Lemoine street. The roadway in Craig street is flooded. The Grand Trunk cars cannot come further than Point St. Charles. No communication has been had with St. Helen's Island since Monday.

Longueil and La Prairie are flooded to an alarming extent, the water in the latter place being nearly up to the eaves of the houses. A signal of distress has been hoisted, and much loss of life and farm stock has probably taken place.

The Ecumenical Council.—His Holiness Pius IX. is busily engaged in surveying the preparation made for the reception of the Ecumenical Council. This reunion of all the Catholic Bishops of the world is looked upon as the greatest event of the age. No doubt that the discipline of the church will be modified; it is already rumored that the council will allow Catholic priests to marry, and that the bills on that subject are ready.

Passing Events.

☞ A severe shock of earthquake was felt at Valparaiso on the 15th of March. It created a good deal of alarm, but there were no casualties. Shipmasters state that their vessels trembled violently during the shock.

☞ The Princess Louise, daughter of Queen Victoria, is to be married on the 27th of July next to the Prince Royal of Denmark. This will leave the Queen only one unmarried daughter, the Princess Beatrice.

☞ Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe is said to have given up her plantation in Florida, for the reason that her title, acquired at a military tax sale, does not hold good. The original owner regains posession, paying Mrs. Stowe the amount she expended for the estate.

☞ The final stroke was given on the 3d inst. to the demolition of the fortress of Luxembourg by the firing of two mines by means of electricity. The effect was tremendous and leveled the whole structure.

☞ The friendly intercourse between the courts of Russia and Austria is improving daily, and it is reported that the embassies that have been vacant for some time will shortly be filled in the two capitals.

☞ Mr. Higgins, the British astronomer, has demonstrated by experiment that heat from the principal fixed stars reaches this earth.

☞ It is said that among the numerous patrons of the clairvoyant fortune tellers in New York, none are more liberally represented, or more credulous than bankers and men controlling large commercial and manufacturing interests.

☞ Mormonism is flourishing in England. In London alone there are eight branches of the church, and 104 elders, 38 priests, 23 teachers and 30 deacons are always hard at work.

☞ Ten of the continental nations of Europe, embracing 130,000,000 inhabitants, have adopted the uniform gold coinage, and it is said that Germany with its 38,000,000, and Russia with its 68,000,000 will probably come into the arrangement this summer.

☞ The Chinese, it is said, tolerate every religion in theory and practice none. In Pekin one may attend service in as many different forms as any city in the world.

☞ Fourteen railway locomotives have exploded within the past seven months in the United States, killing twenty-nine persons outright, and severely wounding a much larger number.

☞ The highest store rent paid in Broadway, N. Y., is $60,000 per year, and the highest hotel rent is $100,000.

☞ The fare by rail from New York to Sacramento, Cal., will not be over $100 in gold, and the emigrant will be able to get through for less than $100 in currency.

☞ We would say to our preaching brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.
5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.

Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.

THE LAST APPEAL.

Song by Peter S. W. Deyo, Strawberry Point, Iowa.

Listen, sinner—sinner, listen,
While I make one more appeal;
Would with tears your eyes might glisten,
Would to God your hearts might feel.
You will all ere long be dying,
Soon they 'll miss you from the earth,
And your forms will soon be lying
'Neath the green mound and the turf.

But the grave is not the ending,
Sin will kill beyond the tomb;
Oh! what awful horrors pending
In that world, the sinner's doom.
God has wrote it with his finger,
Jesus said it should be so;
He that lives and dies a sinner,
To destruction sure must go.

You have had the Bible warning,
You have had the Spirit too,
Ever since life's early morning,
It has strove and plead with you;
Many times the tear drops glistened,
Many times your hearts did melt,
While of Jesus you have listened,
Of the pangs the Savior felt.

But the Bible you have slighted,
And the Spirit turned away,
And refused to be invited
To improve your gracious day.
Oh! how hard your hearts are getting,
Soon you'll quench the Spirit's ray;
Friends, your star of hope is setting—
Come, oh! sinner, come away.

O, ye sinners, be entreated
To prepare to meet your God,
Ere the Spirit has retreated,
Ere you sleep beneath the sod.
Hark! your God is on you calling,
Dying friends have said, prepare;
In the grave you may be falling—
Sinner, you will soon be there.

ITINERANT EVANGELISTS.

THE FRUITS OF THEIR LABORS.

Inquiries having been addressed to John Hambleton on some points concerning the work of God in the hands of itinerant evangelists, he has returned the following reply:—

Your letter contains six questions, on each of which I shall be happy to give a few thoughts, so far as I have been taught by my own experience since the year 1854, when the revival began at Liverpool.

1. What life and power are apparent?
2. What is there needing correction?
3. Is the work deep or shallow?
4. Do the converts, as a rule, endure, and adorn the gospel?
5. What could be done, under God, to make the work more effectual?
6. Is the preaching generally in the Holy Ghost?

First, then, as to the life and power. Some evangelists with whom I have been acquainted have preached the grace of the gospel with power, and the love of God to sinners has been received with gladness. The hearers have rejoiced in the knowledge of a present salvation from the consequences of their past sins, having learned that "Jesus was delivered for our offences;" but they have stopped short of the other half of the gospel—"He was raised again for our justification." Such converts have generally become backsliders through lack of resurrection-life, and the knowledge of righteousness revealed in the gospel from faith to faith. They gradually lost the relish for meetings and revival hymns which had kept them alive for a short time; and from want of power in resurrection they have gone back, some to be reclaimed after a time, others to wallow in the mire of Sodom; while others have become vain janglers on controverting points of doctrine, using the Scriptures in the letter for the purposes of a clever victory over their opponents. Tares, therefore, have grown up with the wheat; nevertheless, the precious grain of true life with spiritual power is visible in many places, proving that the word preached has not come in word only, but in the Holy Ghost and much assurance. Wherever the word has been received in much affliction—that is, deep conviction of sin—not only of sins of past life, but sin of Adam-nature, the joy of the Lord then has become the strength of the converts. They not only turn from idols to serve the living God, but having learned that Jesus rose from the dead, and that they are begotten again to a lively hope by his resurrection, they wait patiently for his coming again from heaven; and with this power of faith and hope they purify themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, going on to perfection, leaving the things of this world behind, and pressing forward to things before, adorning the doctrine of God our Savior. Such search the Scriptures for themselves in secret, and are not looking to preachers or churches for their example, but to Jesus only. I am acquainted with many such, who are not without their trials, but know the spring from whence comes joy in sorrow, and walk well.

Your second question is, What is there needing correction? Much, both in preachers and converts. We are living in days of lawlessness, both in the professing church and in the world; those seeds sown in the churches of Asia are in our day fully developed. Self-exaltation is a ruling passion with many, and wants correction. Some, young and older, who are gifted of God for the preaching of Christ, often use the talents intrusted to them to preach themselves, seeking their own glory or advantage, instead of being themselves nothing and Jesus everything. Although the Lord uses his own word in conversion through their preaching, such evangelists resemble King Uzziah, who built towers, digged wells, fought battles, gained victories, planted vineyards, and was helped of the Lord marvelously till he became strong; but when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction, and he was struck with leprosy in the forehead. 2 Chron. 27. Paul says, "I keep under my body, lest, after I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast away."

All novices are in danger of being puffed up; therefore the needs-be of always judging ourselves, that we may "preach, not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord."

One great snare that Satan has laid for these young evangelists is the flattery they so often receive from the daughters of Babylon, those professors of religion who join in the excited meetings of a revival time, but, instead of profiting by the word of life preached, have their minds fixed on the preacher. . . .

The third question was, Is the work deep or shallow? Wherever the ground of the heart has been deeply ploughed, and the seed has gone into the furrows of repentance unto life, (that is, a complete heart-surrender of all to Christ,) the roots of faith have struck into the dying love of the sinners' Friend. The sense of gratitude and love to Jesus has swelled the soul of the convert; and Jesus, becoming sweeter and more precious the more he is known, the faith has grown, nourished by the sap of that most precious blood, and the sincere milk of the word, undiluted with doctrines and commandments of men. Such converts are healthy, and grow strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. When temptation assails them, there is no parleying with it, no compromising truth or the honor of Christ for the deceitful smiles of Satan. If business failures stand in the path, there is no truckling with the world or the king of Sodom; comfort and safety are found in the promises of God; and the believers learn by experience that godliness is profitable for all things, having the promise of this life as well as that which is to come. We have known many such during the revival, who are now strong in the Lord, having been taught in the school of Christ, and tried in the furnace.

Others are shallow in the things of the Spirit. You may perceive a measure of grace in them. They, like Lot, can walk a certain distance with Abram, but their eyes are always toward Sodom. The world is not wholly a dead thing with them. If they read the word, "not slothful in business," they alter it and say, "We must be diligent in business;" and their activity in gathering up dust is extraordinary; but for communion with God they have no leisure. The heap of letters by post will not allow time to search the word of truth; the express-train goes too quick to admit of reading anything except business advertisements. They take a pew and pay for it, and help to pay the minister for talking something on Sundays. They know they were converted in a revival meeting once; and if they settle down with the doctrine, "once in grace, always in grace," what more is needed?

These are shallow indeed, and woe be to the preacher who allows such to be rocked to sleep by the false and easy-going Laodicean delusions of this religious, money-loving age, without warning every man, and teaching every man with all wisdom, that we may present every man perfect in Christ. There must be a total separation of God's people from this present evil world, for its customs and maxims are all of the earth, earthy; while our place is with Christ in the heavenlies. If the preachers themselves would live Christ as well as preach him, they would not be stumbling-blocks in the way of others, but pressing on to the likeness of Jesus, which is our calling.

Another token of want of depth is the flippant manner of some professed teachers in reading or teaching the Scriptures, as though the Bible were a mere history instead of the inspired word of the living God, given for our spiritual instruction. A loose head-knowledge has been learned of certain doctrines, but, in many instances, with little searchings of heart and judging of the flesh, or practical walking with God by deadness to this world and life in Christ. Converts often suck at the dry breasts of such teachers, and, for want of sincere milk, get nothing but some favorite dry dogma, and either become starved in soul or exclusively closed in from all communion with saints of better pasture, where faith is mellowed by holy love to that which is divine and above all worldly wisdom, either in its pleasantries on the one hand, or fleshly sentimentalities on the other. The grace of God which bringeth salvation teaches the denial of all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and inculcates sobriety of mind, gravity, sincerity, not handling the word of God deceitfully, but while in the body living righteously and godly. Though some deny the possibility of living above this world, there are men of God, even in this adulterous age, who know a power above the world, the flesh, and the devil, who have no confidence in the flesh or creature righteousness, but who believe in the power of God, who is able to keep them from falling, and who will not suffer them to be tempted above that they are able to bear. In localities where such men are found, converts thrive well; but where a mere outward activity exists, converts either stand still without growth, or dwindle down into a mere religious profession.

A personal Christ, preached and lived, is the only power to make real, living, heavenly-minded christians. In these last days, when every thing both in the church and world has a tendency to shallowness or surface work, solid, deep, holy meditation, and depth of truth in the inward part, are the exception and not the rule; and pulling souls out of the fire is, in most instances, the work of evangelists at the end of the present age.

In reply to the fourth question, Do the converts, as a rule, endure, and adorn the gospel? My own experience leads me to believe that the majority have been brought into the first chapter of Ephesians, but know very little, if anything, of the last chapter; so that their standing in Christ is both taught and studied; but the walk in newness of life, as risen with Jesus, or the fight in the heavenlies with the rulers of the darkness of this world and wicked spirits, are matters of which both converts and teachers are often ignorant. Yet there are a few with whom I have met whose spiritual discernment appears to be more enlarged than others in respect to the practical walk and living testimony against this evil day. As to endurance, I believe that to endure the pleasing sights of the eye and sounds of the ear, and fashionable temptations spread at the feet of every one of us, is a greater trial than the fagot and the stake would be to thousands. To adorn the gospel is to be clean within from these pollutions, and according to the abundance of the heart the outward life will be manifested.

The fifth question was, What could be done, under God, to make the work more effectual? For those who preach and teach to live themselves more effectually as examples to the flock. If we could get upon the platform of life with Paul, and say, "Follow me as I follow Christ," we should be made more effectual to the salvation of others.

My reply to the last inquiry, Is the preaching generally in the Holy Ghost? is that, in general, the work has been especially of the Holy Ghost, but, through ignorance of Satan's devices, the flesh has often marred a good work; and a true discernment between what is of the Holy Spirit, and what is of the flesh and Satan, is a study, under God, for both preachers and hearers at this time. Volumes might be written; but I have given a few thoughts for your consideration. "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." If buried with Christ into death, let the old man remain dead.—Witness.

INVISIBLE CHURCH.—The question as to what this may mean, has been settled by some person through the Central Baptist. He thinks it applies to those members of the churches whose names appear on the church book, but whose persons never appear in the congregation.

FASHIONABLE MOTHERS.

Fashionable mothers, what are you doing to make the world better or happier—to elevate, purify, and sanctify? How are you training your sons and daughters? On gospel principles, to habits of industry, economy, purity, and sobriety; and is your influence for good or evil; on the side of virtue or of vice?

Who ever knew a great and good man, or great and good woman, reared under the tuition of a fashionable mother? Whence came our Moseses, Miriams, Samuels, John the Baptists, our Timothys, Wesleys, Doddridges, the John Newtons, the Washingtons—whence are they—who trained them, moulded their infantile years—fashionable mothers? Not one! These great, good, holy, and eminently useful men had great and good mothers—plain, practical, industrious, economical, diligent in business, prayerful, God-fearing.—See Prov. 31: 10–31.

Read the biographies of all our great and good men and women, from early time to the present—not one of them had a fashionable mother. They all sprang from plain, strong-minded women, who had as little to do with fashion as with the changing clouds. Away, then, with your starch, your aristocracy, your gewgaws, your pride, and your folly. Live for something—live for God and glory.

A pious mother, then, is the greatest of all earthly blessings. The influence she exerts is the most excellent known on earth. Children brought up by a godly mother—who knows her duty and does it—who doubts their salvation? She makes the earliest, the deepest, and the most lasting impressions on their hearts. In their minds, religion is associated with all that is kind, winning, and pleasant in home-life. They grow up with reverence for the Bible, the Sabbath, the house of God, and the ministers of Christ. They cannot remember the first time they heard the name of Jesus, or bowed their knees in prayer, or lisped the praises of God. They are instructed to hate and shun vice, and the seductions to it, and to admire and practice virtue. Having been trained up in the way that they should go, when they are old they will not depart from it.

How great is their responsibility! God has committed to them the salvation of their own offspring. To secure the faithful discharge of the trust, he has planted in the maternal heart an affection which no toil, care, or sacrifice can exhaust. No mother, who studies her responsibility or the interests of her children, can consent to be without the sustaining and guiding influence of divine grace.

Fashion kills more women than toil and sorrow. Obedience to fashion is a greater transgression of the law of woman's nature, a greater injury to her physical constitution, than the hardships of poverty and neglect. The slave woman at her task will live and and grow old, and see two or three generations of her mistresses fade and pass away. The washerwoman, with scarcely a ray of hope to cheer her in her toils, will live to see her fashionable sisters all die around her. It is a sad truth that the fashion-pampered women are almost worthless for the great ends of human life. They have but little force of character, they have still less of moral will, and quite as little physical energy.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE?

We often hear the question asked, "What shall be done?" and as we look around upon the church of our Savior in these last days, who can help but cry in the same language? But when I see so many young people rushing down to destruction, who have been connected with us as a people from their earliest days, and yet have no regard for the truth, I cannot help but cry, what can be done? I think there is no subject at the present time that needs attention more than the one under consideration. I have felt for a long time that there is a work to be done in behalf of the young, which we, as a people, are neglecting, and will be accountable for at the bar of God.

In the short space of time, during which I have been connected with this people, I have often thought of the awful condemnation that will rest upon those who neglect the duty of influencing the young in the way to eternal life. The wise man says, "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old he will not depart form it." Is this so? Did not the wise man know what he was saying? I think he did; and I also think that if our people had given more heed to the word of God in this respect, the few years since God called them out as a separate people, there would not be so many parents to mourn over the condition of their children. How often do we hear parents lament that their children are not with them in this blessed hope of Jesus' coming; but, on the other hand, are making the pleasures of this world their God. Now here let me ask, why is this so? But this question cannot be answered in a word. We must look at our condition as a people. We find here and there, scattered up and down among the mountains, little companies forming the church of our Savior. Then in our cities and villages we find the same, who profess to believe God's word; and week after week they wend their way to a little humble place of worship, and there mingle their voices together in prayer, and exchange their thoughts about this blessed hope of the gospel. And yet among the fashions and amusements of the world is where we find the most of the young people to-day. The truth is, they are forsaken by this people that profess such great things, and left to mingle with the first thing that presents itself to their minds, and looks as though they might get some consolation from it.

The question arises, who is responsible for these things? It looks to me as if the fault lay at our own doors; and if the people who profess to believe in the immediate appearing of Jesus Christ were more earnest in this work, things would look different. We owe it to our profession of faith to see to this work. How often do we see those who profess such great things, and find a great deal of fault with others of the same faith, yet they show so little of the spirit of their Master, that even their own families have no confidence in their christianity; therefore, they cannot exert that influence over their children which will lead them in the way of life. We cannot tell what men believe by what they say. It is their actions that make them honest in the eyes of the ungodly, and the professed church in general. Now in these last days, when we see the word of God fulfilling every day, and "men's hearts failing them for fear" of these things that are coming on the earth, may God help us to see that we have on the whole armor, and "our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," so that we may be clear of the blood of all men; and may the prayer of each heart be, Lord, roll the burden on each one of thy professed people until they shall cry, Here I am, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do; or send by whomsoever thou wilt, only let thy name be glorified in carrying on this work.

AION—AGE.

Aion meets the eye of the reader of the Greek New Testament very frequently. The same thing may be said of the Septuagint translation of the Old Testament. In our authorised English Bibles this word is translated variously, but its proper signification is that of duration. It denotes a space of time, or time in general; whether past, present, or future. This is its only classical meaning. It is used to express an age: it may be the lifetime of an individual, the length of a king's reign, the duration of a particular dynasty, the continuance of a particular constitution, or a nation's existence; and hence it is applied to the condition of the earth, or of the world, during a certain period of time. But its real meaning does not embrace any thing that is material. On many occasions it would legitimately be translated dispensation; by which word we understand a certain state of things—social, moral, or religious, historical, or political—continuing during a certain space of time. Thus we are accustomed to speak of the Antediluvian age, the Noachian, the Patriarchal, the Legal or Levitical, and the Christian age or dispensation. And on the same principle profane history, and even profane literature, are marked by ages.—Rainbow.

"THOU GOD SEEST ME."

GENESIS 16: 13.

This language was used by Hagar, after she was cast off by Sarai, Abram's wife, in consequence of her trouble. No doubt it seemed to her as though she had no friend to sympathize with her, but there was One who sent his messenger to her with a message to relieve her distress, and to comfort her in her sadness. I wish, by this language, to impress the fact that God's eye is ever open. Let us be where we will, he sees all we do, and hears all we say. Even the thoughts of our hearts are all known to him. Brother, do we realize this fact? Do we act as though God was looking down upon us? How careful we should be to do nothing but what we know will meet his approbation; that when we are in trouble, he may bless us, and comfort our poor hearts; for the children of God are turned off from the popular churches, and out of popular society to-day, as Hagar was from the society of Abram's family. We need God's watch-care to protect us from the darts of the enemy. If God's people ever wanted help, it is now. O let us live close to God, then he will not forsake us nor leave us alone, but will give us strength to overcome every thing in our path.

Brethren, let us do nothing, say nothing, think nothing, but what is in harmony with God's plan of salvation. Let us be one, even as the Father and Son are one. Let us make a full consecration to God of all we have and are; for he has done all for us, and is willing to do more, if we will only live humbly at the foot of the cross. Let us present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, and acceptable to God. M. N. JORDAN.

THE DAY OF JOY.

"Unto Jesus still, unto Jesus always," must we look if we would make progress in the heavenly race; not at stated times in the sanctuary, or even in the closet alone, though it be daily: but always, in all things, all events, all cares, all sorrows, in all joys, must we see his hand, recognize his presence. Thus may we walk with him, work with him through the hours of the week; and when the day arrives—the day the Lord hath made, the day when Christ arose, "the pearl of all the days," the blessed and holy Sabbath, it will be indeed a rest and a refreshing to our souls.

And when the eternal Sabbath dawns, our hearts will be attuned to its blissful occupations. It will be but a changing from glory into glory, till we shine in his likeness, for we shall see him as he is.

Here we are "looking unto Jesus," but a veil dims his glory to our eyes; we see as "through a glass darkly," but then "face to face." O, what an anticipation! to behold Him whom we have loved so long unseen, without a cloud between. To hear his voice speaking unto us such words of peace and love as mortal ears never heard, mortal heart never conceived.—Ex.

It is not polite to hesitate for a moment to forgive a person who makes an apology, and endeavors to repair any injury he may have done to you.

A LETTER FROM THE SICK ROOM.

BRO. GRANT:—As I pass along in the journey of life, walking by its sickly waters, how often my ears are saluted with the sad news that some dear one has passed away to the enemy's land. If not fallen a victim to the iron grasp of death, they lie but a short space from the jaws of the monster. Such an one I am called to visit this day. An aged Mother in Israel, whose name is Susan Wordell, born Nov. 19th, 1772. At the age of fourteen years she gave her heart to God, and connected herself with the Baptist church at Fall River, Mass., during the time that Elder Job Burden was pastor of the church. She has been a resident of this town ever since; and from her earliest experience, until she lost her reason, she has lived a devout christian. Her life was characterized by her earnest efforts to do good to all around her, though a part of it has been marked with scanty meals. We think it will be said to her, when the King comes, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. For I was . . . . naked, and ye clothed me; I was hungry and ye fed me."

She has had fears, in days past, that she would be sent to the alms-house; but God, who careth for the widow and the fatherless, has raised up friends to watch over her during her present illness. Bro. Joseph Wordell and wife for the past eight months have watched over her, and tenderly cared for her wants. ALLEN DAMON.

Westport, Mass., April 15th, 1869.

P. S. It will be seen that this aged mother is one of that generation who lived at the time the sun was darkened, in 1780. They are almost gone. Soon Jesus will come.

P. S. 2ND. Since writing the foregoing, I hear that the aged mother is dead, aged ninety-six years and five months.

"BRIDGE UP."

Riding along the other day, I saw a sign with these words: "Bridge up." I looked at the narrow road, then I looked at the bridge a little beyond, and I knew what it meant. I thought how well it illustrated the condition of this world. They see the sign, but the road is narrow, and not well trod, and we shall have to leave this road, which looks better. They think they will keep on to the bridge, and run the risk, thinking, perhaps, they can cross; but if they can not, why, then they will go back and take this narrow road, and cross. How many will be in that condition when the judgment overtakes them. Then there will be no chance to cross over. Jesus will have left the mediatorial throne. The cry will be, Too late, too late, too late!! O how I wish I had taken that narrow road.

How kind the Lord has been to show all this narrow road. He has placed the sign where all can see it. He has said to all, "Danger ahead—bridge up—take this road." O how glad I am I ever saw the sign, and was willing to take this narrow road. Dear brethren and sisters, let us keep this narrow road; then, by and by, we shall cross over.

Dear sinner, if you read this, will you take this narrow road? In it there is peace, joy, and gladness. It is narrow and despised, but it reaches over. We meet with scoffs and frowns, and but few walk in it; but it reaches over. Bear the cross the whole distance, then cross over, and wear the crown for ever. Will it pay? We think it will. Come, turn into this road, will you? It is the only one that reaches over, and if you go on to the bridge, you won't have time to get back. It will be too late. The Lord help us all to keep this road, then we can cross over when Jesus comes. JOHN T. KIMBALL.

USEFUL HINTS.—Grease may be removed from a coat collar by washing it with a sponge moistened with hartshorn and water.

Three parts of lard and one of rosin, melted together, makes an excellent coating for iron implements, to preserve from rust when they are lying idle.

Worms will not trouble dried fruit if a little sassafras bark is scattered through it; a handful to a bushel of fruit.

To take rust out of steel, rub well with sweet oil, and let the oil remain for forty-eight hours. Then rub with leather sprinkled with unslaked lime, finely powdered, until all the rust disappears.

To keep away red ants, cover the shelf where they are troublesome with salt; then set on it butter, preserves, anything, with impunity. Did you ever see ants about a salt barrel?

Liquid glue, superior to mucilage, may be made by dissolving glue in an equal quantity of strong hot vinegar, adding a fourth of alcohol and a little alum. This will keep any length of time when placed in closed bottles, and will glue together horn, wood, and mother of pearl.

DISORDERS INCIDENT TO SPRING.

In the spring of the year pill-makers reap rich harvests from the sale of their nostrums. A single dealer has informed us that in a town of five thousand people between the 1st of March and the 1st of June, he has sold as many as nine hundred boxes of pills. Of course they had been puffed well by almanacs devoted to that purpose. The reason why there is always such a demand for physic in the spring, is because when the warm weather of March and April comes people keep on eating too much food, more than can be managed by the stomach except during the cold winter weather. The result is, the stomach is over-taxed, the liver and bowels obstructed, the blood deteriorated, and the patient, for want of knowledge, knows no better than to resort to physic. The true method to be observed in such cases is, on the approach of spring, to eat less food, and that of a milder nature. The brown bread should take the place of white, if white is used in the winter. More fruit should be taken. Avoid stale vegetables. If you have not good pototoes, eat none, for poor potatoes are very unwholesome. If you have good potatoes, bake or broil them, and not fry or hash; eat with fresh cream instead of gravy or butter. Use freely of canned fruit, or well kept apples; at least one meal each day should consist largely of fruit. Avoid fat meat, pastry, cakes, rich puddings, and live simply and naturally.

Every family should put by for spring use, sufficiently good fruit to have it abundant during March, April and May, and as soon as the strawberries ripen, they should be used freely. Strawberries for those who have attacks of the disorders incident to spring, are one of the best remedies that can be used. We pity the family that does not have them in abundance, and early ones too. Nature seems to have made them on purpose to meet a demand of the system in early summer, and we have known many cases of invalids being greatly improved by their free use. Wilson, the ornithologist, was once ordered by an Indian doctor to live on strawberries, in order to cure an obstinate dysentery, and to his surprise he was cured in less than a week. The tomato, which can be canned in almost unlimited quantities, so as to be fresh and good in the spring as in the autumn, should also be used freely, and not as an occasional luxury, but as a regular article of diet. They are especially wholesome at this season of the year. These simple rules followed, will, in most cases, prevent much disease and suffering.—Herald of Health.

MOULD POISONOUS.

Mould, however induced—whether eaten in cheese, or mouldy bread, or other food, or breathed in the infinitesimal spora that are diffused from it in the atmosphere—seems to be the source of a great variety of very serious diseases. One variety, which is found in the hold of damp and badly ventilated ships, is proved to be the cause of ship fever, which is often very fatal.

Another variety, which is found in some localities, formed on newly-stirred earth, is the cause of fever and ague; and in one place, at one time, in western Pennsylvania, every man who worked in digging a canal was affected with it, and most of the inhabitants who lived in that vicinity, on low grounds, were also affected; but above a certain elevation all escaped; and on examination with a microscope, spora from mould on the recently made banks, too fine to be seen with the naked eye, were found floating in the damp evening in every house where those slept who were taken with the fever, but none in the houses on a higher level, where there were no cases of fever.

Other varieties of mould, in cellars and damp places, are believed to be the cause of typhoid fever, endemic dysentery, and many other diseases whose origin cannot otherwise be accounted for. These facts should make us afraid of all moulds, and, indeed, of all decomposed and decomposing materials, whether in the food we eat, or in our dwellings, or even in our vicinity, where they can impart to the air a deleterious influence.

As corroborating this view of the case, it is a significant fact that in New Orleans, with more people in it than usual, for five summers, while the houses and streets were kept clean and clear from all decomposing substances, not a case of yellow fever is caused by mould, or at least by decomposition, with which mould is always associated.—Ex.

OAT MEAL PUDDING.

It is one of the strangest considerations in our whole system of living that the laboring classes will not learn to eat that kind of food which will give them the most muscle. A hard working man does not want food that will repair the waste of the brain, but he wants something that will impart strength to his sinews. Oat meal will do it. Children that are romping and playing like young colts all day, will feast on oat meal pudding and milk; nothing is better for them. And if mothers would have their children grow up clear-eyed and comely, with frames of bone and not of cartilage, with transparent complexions instead of muddy ones, with full and well-rounded limbs instead of scrawny ones, they should not always set before them bread of fine flour and highly seasoned meats, but give them four or five times a week a breakfast of oat meal mush. Do not say that they don't like it. Perhaps you don't know how to prepare it properly. The Scotch method of preparing oat meal is to make a very thin mush, a little thicker than gruel, and salt it well. The water should be salted when the meal is stirred in, and the boiling should continue three to five minutes (not more) after the thickness is finished. This eaten with sugar and milk, with milk alone, or with syrup, is highly palatable, and is generally liked by children whose tastes are not vitiated by indulgence. Oaten bannocks are made by mixing the meal, water and a little salt, and baking it in little patty-pans about twenty minutes, or they may be baked on a griddle.—Exchange.

CARE FOR THE FEET.

Many are careless in the keeping of the feet. If they wash them once a week they think they are doing well. They do not consider that the largest pores of the system are located in the bottom of the foot, and that the most offensive matter is discharged through the pores. They wear stockings from the beginning to the end of the week without change, which become completely saturated with offensive matter. Ill health is generated by such treatment of the feet. The pores are not only repellants, but absorbents, and this fetid matter, to a greater or less extent, is taken back into the system. The feet should be washed every day with pure water only, as well as the arm pits, from which an offensive odor is also emitted, unless daily ablution is practiced. Stockings should not be worn more than a day or two at a time. They may be worn for one day, and then aired and sunned and worn another day if necessary.—Scientific American.

HEALTHY CELLARS.

What is the condition of your cellar? Is it damp, close, filled with disagreeable odors, proceeding from germinating or decaying vegetables? If so, it is high time you gave the matter your earnest attention; for you have in that locality the germs of that disease, and yourself and family are liable to be prostrated at any moment. Have you looked over the potatoes, turnips, squashes, and other vegetables, to ascertain their condition? We know that diptheria, typhoid and scarlet fevers, and many other most serious illnesses, have their origin in cellars, both in city and country.

Cleanliness is essential to health, and it is just as necessary in the country as in the city. A family living over a foul cellar is more liable to be poisoned and afflicted with illness than a city family living in its polluted atmosphere, but without cellar or basement filled with fermenting roots and fruits. There is far more sickness in the country among husbandmen than there ought to be. With plenty of pure air, water, and exercise, disease ought to be kept at bay. Bad-conditioned cellars, small, close sleeping rooms, stoves, these are all agents of evil, and are fast making the homes of farmers almost as unhealthy as those of the dwellers in cities. Are not these suggestions worthy of consideration?—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

THE NIGHT LAMP.

There are many families who use night lamps, and through inability to provide gas, have been in the habit of burning kerosene oil, a very good thing when properly used. A few words on the subject of its uses at night may prove interesting to the general readers. When the light of the kerosene lamp is turned down low the combustion is not perfect, and the atmosphere of the room becomes vitiated by the unconsumed oil vapors, by the gas produced by combustion, and also legitimate particles of smoke and soot thrown off, to be taken into the lungs of the occupants Air thus poisoned is deadly in its effects, and the wonder is that the people are not immediately and fatally injured by breathing it. Its consequences are the unaccountable and mysterious headaches, irritation of the throat and lungs, dizziness and nausea.

BURNS AND SCALDS.—Kerosene is the best antidote for a severe burn or scald. Immerse the injured part in cold water for a moment, dry with a soft cloth, taking care not to rub at all. Then bathe in kerosene, and the terrible pain soon ceases. We know of a little child who put his foot and leg into a pail of nearly boiling water. The above remedy was applied, and in a few minutes the child's screams ceased. We know not of the philosophy of the matter, but we do know that it is the most efficacious remedy for severe burns or scalds in the materia medica.—Ex.

CURE FOR TOOTHACHE.—The Lancet says toothache can be cured by one drachm of collodion added to two drachms of Calvert's carbolic acid. A gelatinous mass is precipitated, a small portion of which, inserted in the cavity of an aching tooth, invariably gives immediate relief.

DIARRHEA of summer is often cured by maintaining perfect quietude on a bed, and eating acid fruits or berries in their natural state while ripe, raw, and fresh. If the acid fruit fails, eat nothing for a few days but common rice, parched brown like coffee, then prepare in the usual way.

PROPER CLOTHING.—Clothing, night and day, should give sufficient warmth, with perfect cleanliness, freedom of motion, and free transpiration. Feather beds, cotton comforters, oil-cloth and India-rubber clothing, are civilized abominations.

EFFECTS OF TOBACCO.—A little girl in Ohio bruised her lip. Her mother wiped the oil from the bowl of her pipe and applied it to the bruise, and the result was convulsions and death.

"REJOICE IN THE LORD."

To this command I gave no ear,
Nor heeded once that precious word—
"Rejoice in me,"—how could I hear,
Till heavenly love my heart had stirred?

But now I hear it every hour,
And oh! how sweet the accents sound,—
"Rejoice in me, rejoice always,"—
That precious joy I now have found.

Long had I sought, but never found,
Cause for rejoicing, which I craved;
All rung a false; discordant sound;
I turned from earth and thus was saved.

Oh! pure and endless fount of love,
That opens such a door of bliss,
Now bids me seek it from above,
Not in a transient world like this.

How keen or long my sorrows now,
I will rejoice, for well I see,
If in my griefs I humbly bow,
Its deadliest weight ne'er rests on me.

Oh! what delight it is to know
I may rejoice though dark clouds lower;
If here in righteousness we sow,
There we rejoice forevermore.

UNIVERSAL RESTORATION—ITS RISE IN ORIGEN.

We now come to a man who has at least the recommendation of having a name. We know his antecedents, and can give some fair opinion of what his judgment is worth. He is Athenagoras, who lived from about A. D. 127 to A. D. 190. He was born at Athens; was educated there in the philosophy of Plato; became a christian and settled at Alexandria, where his great object seems to have been to show that Christianity and Platonism were one and the same in substance. Beyond a question, he held to its full extent the doctrine of eternal life for the reprobate, as it was afterwards elaborated by Augustine. He based it on an argument of reason, for, it is as clear as daylight, this theory of the soul's immortality is pre-eminently a Rationalistic deduction. He laid it down that God's grand object in making man was *that man should live. He does not say a word about God's having man's happiness, or his own glory, in view in creation; but that simple existence was his end. Hence, he argues as God's end cannot possibly be defeated, man must live forever, be he good or evil, miserable or happy. This is indeed Rationalism, except that it is Rationalism of a very poor order. One text of Scripture Athenagoras never dreams of advancing for his opinion; but then he has his master's sonorous phraseology for our nature. With him, as with Plato, the soul is "immortal," it must continue to exist; it was made immortal at its creation and cannot be subjected to death; no change can affect its invulnerable being; for it is, and was, and always will be "incorruptible."† Athenagoras being a Christian as well as a Platonist, took the liberty to add to his master's theory. Plato dropped the body altogether at death, and was only glad to do so as being with him only a clog, a prison, a curse to the soul. Here Athenagoras struck out a new line for himself, which diverged, we must say, fully as much from Scripture as from Plato, and was no improvement to either system. The body, according to our Alexandrian philosopher, was originally created immortal, but became mortal by Adam's sin. At the resurrection, however, it will, in the case of the wicked as much as of the righteous, resume its original immortality. The glorious chapter of Saint Paul, in which he describes the resurrection of the just, and the change which passes on their corrupt, dishonored, weak, and natural bodies, to fit them for an eternal life, is applied by Athenagoras to the resurrection of the unjust as much.‡ Monstrous as this idea is to us—abstaining as our modern Agustinians do from this application of Paul's great chapter, such an application is a necessity to them, and Athenagoras was reasonable here. The mortal body must put on immortality if it is to endure an eternity of pain.

But while Athenagoras, the Platonist, is at Alexandria maintaining the novel doctrine of eternal life in hell, he has a worthy fellow laborer in Mesopotamia, in the person of Tatian, the Marcionite heretic. It is curious and instructive to trace, when we can, the progress of error. Tatian had been, in his earlier days, a scholar of Justin Martyr, and after the death of the latter, professed great reverence for his old master's opinions, and affected to consider them identical with his own.§ Justin, a great admirer of Plato, had, to a great extent, adopted the phraseology of Plato concerning the soul, and called it immortal and incorruptible. We know, however, that his meaning was that it was immortal as compared with the body, and did not suffer death when the latter did, but continued to exist in a separate state. We know this from a very remarkable passage in his writings, in which he describes with much minuteness the death of the soul when God withdraws from it the life he had given to it.* Tatian, well aware of this prominent doctrine of Justin, introduced a view of the soul of wicked men which, so far as we know, was quite peculiar to himself. He supposed that when the body of the wicked died, the soul also died with it, being forsaken by the higher spirit; that, at the resurrection, it is raised to life again along with the body, and then receives an immortality which makes it capable of enduring endless pain.†

* S. Justini Opera. Paris. 1615. Athenagoras, 53, c. 57, 1. † p. 31, a. 53, d. 64, c. ‡ 54, a. 60, a. 65, c. § 158 a.

In Athenagoras, Tatian, and the forger of the "Clementina," we have the earliest known advocates of the theory of eternal life in hell. From their writings we gather the marvelous power which the introduction of the Platonic dogma of the soul's immortality had upon the doctrine of the church. But this theory required a more powerful advocate than any of the above writers, and it found it somewhat later in the person of Tertullian. A perfect master of the Latin tongue, a powerful reasoner where not led away by his peculiar errors, of a vehement nature, and a vivid imagination, he was well suited to impress an idea on an age disposed to accept it, and, spite of his heresies, spite of his strange hallucinations, he left the lasting impression of his mind upon the church of succeeding times. Accordingly, the theory of eternal torments culminated in the second century, in this fierce African theologian. He did not hold it more plainly than Athenagoras and Tatian, but he impressed it with a power to which they were utter strangers, and he freed it from some of their statements which would expose it to animadversion. In his utter ignorance of the Hebrew language, he attempted to find some Scriptural support for the base of his theory—the immortality of the soul—in the description given in Gen. 2: 7, of the creation of man.‡ But he does not rely on this alone, or even chiefly; he appeals boldly to the natural argument, and when he feels pressed here, he throws himself on the revelations of a sister, to whom divine visions of the soul were vouchsafed.§ Thus fortified he uses, to their utmost possible latitude of meaning, most of Plato's terms for the soul. It is, even in the case of the wicked, not subject to death, but must ever continue immortal; it is ever indissoluble, indivisible, an eternal substance, having the very same immortality which belongs to Deity.‖ But it is in the descriptions of the endless agony of the lost that Tertullian surpassed his predecessors, and threw them into the shade. He does not draw any vail over his scene of punishment. Without saying that he took a positive delight in the contemplation of it, he depicts its fancied circumstances with a minuteness and a force that has scarcely been surpassed by the imagination of Dante, or the agonizing details of a a Jesuit or a revivalist preacher. Nor can we say that he was wrong, if his theory were but true. No amount of terror, horror, disgust, that could possibly be awakened here in the human mind could be too great, if only by it a single soul could be persuaded to fly in time from this wrath to come. The delicacy that tells us there is such a hell, but that good manners, or regard for feeling, should lead us to conceal its naked and terrible aspect, is a false delicacy, which risks eternity rather than give pain for a moment. Tertullian certainly was not guilty of this false delicacy. He believed in eternal torments, and he drew faithful pictures of them. With him hell was a scene where endless slaughtering (æterna occisio) was being enacted, where the pain of dying was to be ever felt, but never the relief which death could bring.* And God was the author and inflictor of this!

We think of a terrible scene in English history. The Duke of Monmouth has laid his head upon the block. The executioner, in his agitation, has struck a blow which pains but does not deprive of life, and the ill-fated son of Charles raises his head, and looks reproachfully at the man whose want of nerve only had made him act the part of cruelty. Such is the picture which Tertullian represents as being enacted throughout eternity, not in the case of a single being, but of millions upon millions!

Let us look fairly and boldly at this. It was the root, and basis, and justification of the theory of Origen. No man can deny that God is able to destroy what he was able to create. No man can deny that God had a power to choose whether he would inflict death upon the sinner or an endless life of agony. Which would he choose—the gentler or the more fearful doom? Will you say the latter? Why? There must be a reason. Is it to please himself? He repudiates wholly this kind of character.† His mode of dealing here contradicts it; where pain is sharp it is short. Is it to please his angelic or redeemed creation? They are too like himself to take pleasure in such a course. Did no pity visit the Creator's bosom, they would look up into his face and pray for mercy. Is it to terrify them from sin? Would it? What is it? Is it not pre-eminently alienation from God? What would alienate from him so completely as the sight or the knowledge of such a hell as Tertullian taught? Pity, horror, anguish, would invade every celestial breast. Just fancy a criminal with us. He has been a great criminal. Let him be the cruel murderer; the base destroyer of woman's innocence and honor; the fiendish trafficker in the market of lust; the cold-blooded plotter for the widow's or the orphan's inheritance. Let him be the vilest of the vile, on whose head curses loud and deep have been heaped. He is taken by the hand of justice. All rejoice. He is put to death! No. That is thought altogether too light a punishment by the ruler of the land. He is put into a dungeon; deprived of all but the necessaries of existence; tortured by day and by night; guarded lest his own hand should rid him of a miserable existence; and this is to go on till nature thrusts in an irresistible hand, and frees the wretched offender. Now, what would be the effect upon the community of such a course? The joy at the criminal's overthrow, once universal, would rapidly change into pity, into indignation, into horror, into the wild uprising of an outraged nation to rescue the miserable man from a tyrant, and to hurl the infamous abuser of law and power from his seat. And this is but the faintest image of what a cruel theology would have us to believe of God? Nature steps in, in the one case, and says there shall be an end. Omnipotence, in the other, puts forth its might to stay all such escape—for ever and ever! Millions of years of torment gone, and yet torment no nearer to its close! Not one, but myriads to suffer thus! Their endless cries! Their ceaseless groans! Their interminable despair! Why, heaven, and earth, and planets—all worlds which roll through the great Creator's space, would raise one universal shout of horror at such a course. Love for God would give way to hatred; apostasy would no longer be partial, but universal; all would stand aloof in irrepressible loathing from the tyrant on the throne; for a worse thing than Manechæism would be seated there—the one Eternal Principle would be the Principle of Evil.

* [illegible] † [illegible] ‡ [illegible] § [illegible] ‖ [illegible]

The theory of Origen was man's revolt against this doctrine of man. This fearful picture of God could not be laid in its bare horrors before the mind without drawing forth a protest. It came in the form of Universal Restoration. Tertullian had consigned reprobate men and devils to endless suffering in hell; Origen converts hell into a purgatory, and sends men and devils forth from it purified and humbled to the feet of the great Father, and to the joys which are at his right hand forevermore. It is the old story of human thought—from one extreme to its opposite. The truth always lies between the two.

Origen had seized hold of a scriptural truth—the final extinction of evil, which was just as much a part of our Father's revelation as Tertullian's eternity of punishment. Each had his share of truth, and if the question lay between these two human systems it could never be set at rest. If Tertullian could appeal to Scripture for the overthrow of the wicked, whether angels or men, as being of an endless nature, Origen could point from the same source of truth to a blissful coming time when all that had breath should praise the Lord.*

What was there which prevented Origen from going back to the old scriptural doctrine of death as the end of sinners, which places the two scriptural truths just mentioned in harmony and not in opposition? It was the very same human dogma of the immortality of the soul which had led Athenagoras and Tertullian to their endless life in hell. This dogma of Plato, this creation of human reason, this tradition of men, made the revolt from Tertullian to be only the exchange of one human system for another, instead of being a return from man's heresy to God's truth.—The Rainbow. (To be continued.)

JESUS IS COMING.

O, glorious thought. The real, tangible Son of God, who was made under the law, and born of a woman; upon whom rested the spirit of wisdom and of the fear of the Lord; who grew up to manhood in the likeness of sinful flesh; who went about doing good; "a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief;" who agonized in the garden, and was taken by wicked hands and crucified and slain; who burst the bars of death and came forth conqueror; who showed himself alive by many infallible proofs; who was seen to go into heaven by men of Galilee; who says, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold I am alive forevermore; . . . and have the keys of hell and death." Yes, it is "this same Jesus" who is about to descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the arch angel, and with the trump of God.

Already the heavenly hosts are being marshaled for the escort. He hath sent forth his premonitory tokens to his waiting church, saying, "I come quickly."

"His chariot will not long delay,
I hear the rumbling wheels, and pray,
Triumphant Lord, appear."

But who may abide the day of his coming, and who shall stand when he appeareth? when he shall lay judgment to the line and righteousness to the plummet, and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters overflow their hiding-places? Will it be that evil servant who says "in his heart, My Lord delayeth in his coming," and smites the men-servants and the maid-servants, and eats and drinks with the drunken? Will it be that nominal professor who loves the place of worldly pleasure more than the house where prayer is wont to be made? Will it be he who, to gain earth's gilded toys, shuns the cross, compromises the truth, and speaks to please the unholy throng? Will it be the one who is so wedded to the mighty dollar as to be deaf to the cries of the widow and the fatherless? No! no! But it will be the meek of earth; those who hunger and thirst after righteousness; the poor in spirit, the reviled and persecuted ones for Jesus' sake. He whose soul is not lifted up unto vanity, nor hath "sworn deceitfully," in whose eyes a vile person is contemned, but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. "He that despiseth the gains of oppression; that shaketh his hand from the holding of bribes; that stoppeth his ears from the hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil; he shall dwell on high; his place of defense shall be the munitions of rocks."

Then let us be fully awake to these three important considerations: The certainty of Christ's speedy coming; the perils of these last days; and what constitutes the preparation for the coming kingdom. A. Ross.

For the World's Crisis.

THE TALENTS.

"For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability, and straightway took his journey."—Matt. 25: 14, 15.

The kingdom of heaven is likened unto one of the ancient masters, who had a number of servants. This master denotes the Savior. and the servants, such as profess to be his followers. The master was about to take his journey into a far country, as the Savior has since gone from his followers on earth. The Savior may now be considered as far away, attending to important business. He has told us that he will return again at the appointed time. The servants in old time were often very cultivated and skillful men, and were allowed to engage in business, upon condition of paying to their master a fixed yearly sum. As in the parable, they were furnished with means to trade on their own, or their master's account; with the arrangement and understanding that they were to bring him a proper share of the profits. So our Lord has furnished his people with goods, or means, that during his absence they might employ these means for his glory and their good. After delivering the talents, Christ ascended up to heaven, which denotes the far country. Unto one he gave five talents, to another two, to another one; to every man according to his several ability. Each one is fully furnished. The man who received the two talents, in comparison to his ability, receives just as much as he who receives the five. "As a small circle is as complete and perfect as a large one, so each man is supplied to his full capacity to receive and manage." The apostle says, "There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit." The body is not all foot, or all hand. In an army there are generals, captains, privates, etc.; so the Lord has given lower places to some than to others. Each one has his own sphere, and his gifts; all are to occupy their place in the church, and do what they can for Christ in this world. It is a very true saying that some men make good deacons, but very poor preachers.

At first Christ "gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." The apostle says, "To one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy." Some of these gifts were extraordinary, and vanished with the age in which they were given; others have been continued. I understand our talents, as believers in Christ, to be our spheres of usefulness, our duty, our responsibility in this world as christians, and our usefulness in the church, whether pastors, teachers, elders, deacons, or parents; and our gifts of grace are given to profit withal. There is no one who has not received something which the all-wise Creator designs we shall use.

The 19th verse reads: "And after a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them." Although the Lord has been long away from his church, he will come at last, and "render unto every man according as his work shall be." We shall all soon stand before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall have to answer for all the gifts, means given to us, and the manner we have used them. It will not be asked in the great day, whether we occupied the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the prominence in all things; but, How many hungry have you fed? how many naked have you clothed? etc.—such questions as will not suit most men. How many souls have you won from sin and error? What self-denial, as laborers, have you sustained for dying men? Such questions will be pressed home upon each one. O the solemn reckoning day! Who shall be able to stand? The one that had entrusted to his care five talents came and bought other five talents; this represents a faithful servant of Christ. He made his means tell for good. The Lord says to him, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The one that received two talents came and said, "Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents; behold, I have gained two other talents besides them." Here, again, is the picture of a faithful servant of Christ, of less capacity, doing what he could for his Master. But Christ does not despise his effort, because it was not in his power to do more. The widow's mite was commended by the Savior more than the rich donations of the Pharisees. We are to be faithful with what we possess. "Well done," greets the ear of the one with two talents, as well as of him that had five. The two servants are alike admitted to share the joy and the reward.

But there is another one, who has not yet rendered in his account—the last one. True, he had not wasted his master's goods, nor spent all his portion in rioting, like the prodigal. This man, or servant, is one who had received gifts from the Savior as well as those whom we have just considered. The difference is, that he had "digged in the earth, and hid his Lord's money." It does not say he wronged his Lord out of a farthing; but he buried the gift, instead of using it to profit. This servant, who buried his talent, represents a large class of professing christians—those who decline labor. They profess to believe in Christ, make a show of religion, appear unto men to be christians; at the same time they have no hope of salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ. They are inactive, fruitless, take no part in promoting the work of God, and are always full of excuses. They do not love prayer. They give but little, and do less for God and his gospel. They are exceedingly poor, when called on for donations for charitable purposes. They are very much afraid the judgment day will come; at the same time they may profess to believe it is at hand. They have a slavish fear, and an awful dread of God and the day of account. But what does the Master say to such servants, when he reckons with them? "Thou wicked and slothful servant; . . . thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received my own with usury. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him that hath ten talents. . . . . And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." All this happened because this servant was slothful, inactive, and wicked. We have all received, and we must all account for what we have received, whether much or little. And if we are faithful in that we have received, we shall receive a glorious reward at the return of the Master. But on the other hand, if we are faithless, there remains an awful account, and a fearful looking for of judgment.

On the whole, we have every reason to be diligent and hopeful. Do not be ashamed of your one talent. Use it. God will bless and save you, if you do all you can. Each has his place and work; therefore, whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, for in death there is no remembrance of God. We can not work for God when dead. We must do what we do now, in our lifetime. Work, you feeble saint. God wants all hands to labor. Be up and doing; no excuses. Take courage; hope in God; "for thou shalt yet praise him, who is the health of thy countenance, and thy God." J. E. Clark.

Love and Hate.—If you love, love more; if you hate, hate less. Life is too short to spend hating any one. Why war against a mortal who is going the same road with us? Why not expand the flower of life and happiness by learning to love, by teaching those who are near and dear the beautiful lesson? Your hands may be hard, but your heart need not be. Your forms may be bent or ugly, but do you know that the most beautiful flowers often grow in the most rugged, unsheltered places? If we are not careful, business will crowd all there is of beauty out of the heart.

THE CHURCH OF GOD.

By the church of God we understand all true believers in Jesus Christ. All members of his body, united in him by faith and love, born of the Spirit, and made new creatures by a change of heart, and the atoning sacrifice of the cross by which they are justified, constitute the church. There is no other sense in which the word is warranted by Scripture use.

The terms visible and invisible church are not found in the Scriptures. The idea of an invisible church is not found there. The church is spoken of as the light of the world which cannot be hid. The term invisible church is of modern origin; being first used, we believe, by Martin Luther to designate those christians who were not in the regular organizations of Rome. So now it is understood of those christians outside of all organizations. But since none who are in Christ, are outside of the true church, nor invisible by the Scripture test, therefore the term is inadmissible, and there is no other but the visible church on earth.

Again, the church of any locality can mean nothing more or less than the christians of that locality. Any party divisions cannot be called a church. A sect is not a church, any more than a man's arm can be called a man. It is only a fragment; and exists in direct conflict with Christ's church, which is one body. All the saints of a place are necessary to constitute the church of that place; because the church means simply the body of Jesus, which is composed of all his disciples. No divisions can be recognized in Christ's body, so as to be called churches.

The churches of Asia and Europe were only the saints of various localities, separated by no lines or distinctions whatever, except that they inhabited different cities, or countries. In every city and country the saints were one in Christ, presenting his body complete without schism; even Jews and Gentiles "being made nigh by the blood of Christ," so that they were called churches, being one whole body of Jesus in each town, and also one church as embracing all the saints on earth. The moment any distinctions are introduced so that believers are divided in interest, or by name, into separate families, the term "church" cannot be applied, because it can be applied in no sectarian sense. There is no such thing as a church in any community which does not include all believers in that community.

With these facts before us, which none can deny are authorized by Scripture, why do men accuse us of dividing or tearing down churches when they mean their sect organizations which are no churches? Why do they call these divisions churches which are no churches, and then charge us with schism of Christ's church when they know their charge to be false? Why do they shut their eyes to the fact that their sect, or denomination, divides Christ's body, and at the same time blame us for dividing their divisions precisely as they have divided the body of Christ?

The Bible says nothing against dividing a sect, but puts all the stress of the law on dividing the body of Jesus. What sort of consistency or virtue is there in denouncing us for dividing their sects precisely as they have first divided the church of Jesus?—The Church.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CHILDREN OF GOD.

It is evident that we can not be the "children of God" until we are "born" of God; and as we are declared to be the "sons of God" now (1 John 3: 1), some think the "new birth" must have already taken place. Again: "Ye, . . . as new born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word."—1 Pet. 2: 2. As babes do not desire milk before they are born, and as the convert is spoken of as being a new BORN babe, the new birth must be accomplished here. A few thoughts, we believe, will obviate all this perplexity.

1st. In what sense are we the children of God now? Paul answers, in Gal. 3: 26,—"For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." This shows that we are only children "by faith in Christ Jesus." And now "By grace are ye saved THROUGH FAITH" (Eph. 2: 8); for, "if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart that GOD HATH RAISED HIM FROM THE DEAD, thou shalt be saved." Rom. 10: 9.

So a saving faith centres in Christ, and we must believe in the heart (and not with the head only) that he died and God raised him from the dead. A heart belief will produce fruits, and our works will correspond with our faith; for "faith without works is dead." James 2: 20. Therefore, we are not only to believe, but must reduce our faith to a form, and obey the form. Read carefully Rom. 1: 5, and 6: 17. The only way we can reduce our faith in the death and resurrection of Christ to a form, is to be "baptized . . . in the likeness of his death"—be "buried with him by baptism into death."—Rom. 6: 3, 4.

And to believe with the heart that Christ died and rose again, implies much more; for if we truly believe that Jesus as the Son of God died, we believe he died to purchase our salvation; and if we believe he purchased our salvation, we must expect to obtain it through him, unless we believe he died in vain; which would be a reprobate faith indeed. And now if we believe he died to purchase our salvation, and expect through him to obtain it, we must believe that he will come "the second time" to bring it (Heb. 9: 28); for unless he does come the second time, the dead will never rise (1 Thess. 4: 16); and if the dead never rise, all that have fallen asleep in him are perished (1 Cor. 15: 15–18); and as Christ died that all that believe in him might not perish (John 3: 16), it must be obvious to all that if the dead never rise, Christ died in vain.

So when we have done just what the Savior has commanded us—believed and been baptized (Mark 16: 16), then we have been "born of water" (John 3: 5); our faith has been made perfect, and we have become "the children of God by faith." And then we are "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body," when we shall be born of the Spirit, and become the children of God in fact. J. W. Taylor.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT.

15. God is cruel, unmerciful destructive, and ferocious.—"I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy."—Jer. 13: 14. "And thou shalt consume all the people which the Lord thy God shall deliver thee; thine eye shall have no pity upon them." Deut. 7: 16. "Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not, but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling."—1 Sam. 15: 2, 3. "Because they had looked into the ark of the Lord, even he smote of the people fifty thousand and three score and ten men."—1 Sam. 6: 19. "The Lord thy God is a consuming fire."—Deut. 4: 24.

God is kind, merciful and good.—"The Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy."—Jam. 5: 11. "For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men."—Lam. 3: 33. "For his mercy endureth forever."—1 Chron. 16: 34. "I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God."—Ezek. 18: 32. "The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works."—Psa. 145: 9. "Who will have all men to be saved and to come unto a knowledge of the truth."—1 Tim. 2: 4. "God is love."—1 John 4: 16. "Good and upright is the Lord."—Psa. 25: 8.

It has ever been the boast of Infidel writers that the God of the Bible is cruel and unmerciful, and the texts brought forth in the first part of the above proposition, are ever quoted to sustain the idea. If the reader will take the trouble to examine the passages referred to, in their connection, he will see that they all allude to the judgments of God falling upon wicked nations, for their sins against him. In Jer. 4: 14, God proposes to destroy the nation of Israel from the land, because they had sinned against him with a high hand, and trampled on his holy law; but before the threatened judgment was executed, he offered them pardon and forgiveness if they would turn unto him and cease to pervert his ways. Hence this text is purely of a judicial character, and cannot be made to sustain the skeptick's attack. Deut. 7: 16, alludes to those nations that were vindictive enemies to God's people, and he commanded Israel to destroy them. This also was a judgment visited upon the sinful, and therefore founded in justice. The same is true of 1 Sam. 15; 2, 3. Amalek had done much evil to the people of Israel when they were in the wilderness, killing those that lingered behind in their march, that were fatigued and weary, etc. And for these acts of hostility, God had decreed the overthrow of the Amalekites, and the time now came for its execution. But why, it will be asked, did God decree the destruction of women and helpless infants? We answer, it was upon a nation, and as such it fell upon all. It was so in the days of the flood, and so of Sodom and Gomorrah. Indeed, the Infidel who blames the "God of the Bible," and boasts of his "God of nature," is in a worse difficulty than this, for his God buries millions by earthquakes and volcanoes, many of whom are innocent women and helpless babes. His acts are not deserved judgments for sin, but they come without warning or mercy, upon the innocent and helpless. But, says the infidel, they transgressed a physical law, and must suffer its penalty. So we say of those nations. They transgress a moral law, and must suffer its penalty. The infidel sees no cruelty in his "God of nature" visiting families by disease, by famine and pestilence, taking all the little ones from affectionate parents; he sees no injustice in his "God of Nature" executing the penalties of violated law. Yet if the God of the Bible inflicts a judgment on a nation of sinners, he is frightened, and exclaims cruelty! unmerciful! ! ferocious! ! ! Reader, be not deceived. It is done to lead you from the God of truth, who dose all things for the best, for the good of man, and for his own glory.

FELLOW SERVANTS.—No. 2.

"I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." Thus Paul went as a pioneer to plant the word of God, "where Christ had not beed named," lest it should be said he preached for gain or applause. Had he first gone where others had prepared the way, it would likely have given occasion for suspicion, after his great hatred of Christ. But Paul did not strike out independently of his fellow laborers. We find him in company with Silas, laboring in the ministry, also with Mark, until Mark grew too fast to take counsel, and separated. We find him at Miletus sending for the elders of the church to confer with them. We find him with Apollos united and associated. No select fields, or parties; no choice societies, fat salaries, nor heavy contributions sought. Nor could he be turned aside from the one great work of gathering sinners to Christ, and seeking to unite all the working elements of the brotherhood, in the one work. All the brethren were dear to him, and shared his notice.

Such was the spirit of all the apostles of Christ. In these things we should imitate them. Give no place to self. Seek not for the easier fields, the most pleasant places, the most agreeable associations, the most wealthy brethren." Doing nothing by partiality"; always "bearing one another's burdens," anxious to become acquainted with all the brotherhood, conferring with the local ministers, and especially seeking counsel of the elders (older persons) of the churches, and, if possible, working in harmony with them.

DAY-STAR.

In 2 Pet. 1: 19–21, we read as follows:—

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts. Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

We think the punctuation is not in harmony with the sentiment, but should be as follows: "Until the day dawn, and the day-star arise. In your hearts knowing this first," etc. The day-star rises in the heavens, not in our hearts; but we are to take heed to the "sure word of prophecy" until the dawn of day, which will be indicated as near at hand by the day-star. This day-star may be "the sign of the Son of man." When that appears, we shall not need prophecy to tell us the time is near. The events will then occupy our whole attention.

THE STATE OF EUROPE.

The state of Europe is specially interesting to the student of prophecy. Every day the world expects to hear of some event that may show the certainty of a terrible conflict between the great powers of Europe. Says the New York Herald:—"All Europe, and the world, are holding their breath in expectation of the terrible struggle so long delayed; but the more terrible, because of the delay, when it comes."

TAKE HEED TO THE DOCTRINE.

Paul has exhorted the followers of Christ to take heed to . . . the doctrine." If one is not well instructed in the doctrine of the Bible, he is in much more danger of being led astray by Satan.

The following is from the last Nov. No. of "The Vials," published by Mr. Purden, Torquay, Eng.:

"You are, let us suppose, a converted person. As such you expect a future kingdom of some kind or another. You do not trouble yourself with considering what sort of kingdom it is to be. You are told by your minister that the kingdom of God began long ago! that you yourself are a KING at this day, while you are offering up prayers which God does not see fit to grant; and that you are doubly a king when you are listening to a discourse from which the true kingdom of God is carefully excluded—a sober sermon of solemn misrepresentation! You are told that such is the kingdom, and that such is the King; and you return home wondering that so great a king (as yourself) should be so poor, or so sickly, or so uncomfortable, or so powerless, and with a slight suspicion that sitting upon a cloud hereafter will not very much improve your condition. You have therefore but one resource, and that is to plunge into the affairs of the world. To keep your conscience easy by shunning theatres and races, and the gaieties of life, for which you have no taste, but to keep your blood in active circulation by talking, striving, and struggling, where, money, or preferment, or high society, or church politics, are concerned. Church politics are a treasure to the serious world, for they have a show of spirituality because they relate to the church; yet they are full of the fine flavor of the world—for what is the visible church but the world under a mask?

It is to the cold unfaithful preaching of the day that you owe this dreamy state of mind. The ministers of the gospel are ashamed of their high commission. They are ashamed of the sublimity of truth. They are proud of being 'men of the world,' ashamed of being out of the world; and to keep up their credit as men of the world, they have stripped the gospel of all its sublimest attributes, and turned it out before the public in only half its vestments—the Jewish High Priest without his breastplate, or like the Red Cross Knight, with a cross upon his shoulder while the rest of his body was clothed in the habiliments of strife.

The members of the visible church are nothing but ordinary men. They may belong to the visible church without having any part in the kingdom of God; but the members of the true church have been made unto God 'kings and priests' (Rev. 1), and they are bound to put on the insignia of their offices. The hope of the kingdom is the royal crown, and the influence of that hope is the breastplate of their priesthood. Our modern style of preaching deprives us both of crown and breastplate, and leaves us nothing in their place but a mist of Spirituality."

JEWISH CONSUL.

It is manifest that the Jews in all parts of the world are contemplating some important movement in relation to their native land.

We are well satisfied from facts already known, that they are arranging with Napoleon III. to restore them to Palestine, while they acknowledge him as their Messiah.

The following is an interesting item in relation to the Jews of this country:—

"The leading Israelites in this city, with Senator Wilson, Rev. Dr. Samson and others, have petitioned the President to have a Consul professing the Jewish faith appointed at Jerusalem, and they also desire an appeal to the Government of the Sultan for the privilege to Israelites as well as Christians in the Holy Land of visiting the spots held sacred by the believers in the Old Testament, as also the security of their rights in engaging in various industrial pursuits, especially in the right of purchasing and cultivating the land in this province of the Turkish Empire."

A GOOD RULE.

We are glad to see that some sensible men are opposed to using "complimentary titles." How much better it looks to see a letter addressed to the simple name of the person, than to see a lot of titles prefixed, or affixed. The following published note expresses the true sentiment:—

"A great many business men have adopted a rule never to give complimentary titles, such as 'Hon.,' 'Esq.,' or 'Mr.'—believing that they are useless, meaningless, and in all respects played out."

We would commend the following from Job 22: 21–22;—"Let me not, I pray you, accept any man's person; neither let me give flattering titles unto man. For I knew not to give flattering titles."

QUITE DIFFERENT NOW.

There has been quite a change during the past century, as may be seen by comparing the following with the present customs of society:

"Ninety-eight years ago, the English Parliament enacted, 'Whoever shall impose upon, seduce, and betray into matrimony any of His Majesty's mail subjects, by scents, paints, cosmetic washes, artificial teeth, false hair, Spanish wool, iron stays, hoops, high-heeled shoes, or bolster hips, shall be prosecuted for witchcraft, and the marriage shall be null and void.'"

We apprehend that if the foregoing was put into effect now, many marriage relations would "be null and void."

"SECRETISM."—In this paper will be found an interesting article on "Masonic Secresy." If any of our readers wish to inform themselves more fully on the subject, they can do so by sending to John T. Walsh, M. D., New Berne, N. C., who published the work from which are made the extracts. Orders can also be sent to Ezra A. Cook, Chicago, Ill Price, single copies, 25 cts., five copies for $1; $2. per dozen, postage free.

BRO. R. E. LADD.—We learn that Bro. Ladd's health has failed, so that he is obliged to give up all business. He should be remembered in the prayers of the saints. May the Lord bless him.

BRO. DICKENSON.—We learn that Bro. H. H. Dickenson, of Hartford, is very sick. Remember him in your prayers.

WHICH IS RIGHT?

BRO. GRANT:—There seems to be a difference between Isaiah 59: 20 and Rom. 11: 26. Which is right? J. K. BELLOWS.

Isa. 59: 20, reads:—"And the Redeemer shall come to Zion and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord." Rom. 11: 26 reads:—"There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

The Septuagint of Isa. 59: 20, reads:—"And the deliverer shall come for Zion's sake, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

PROGRESS.

Much is said concerning the progress the world is making at the present time. If people mean in literary matters, mechanical improvements, conveniences for travel, etc., it may be granted; but if they mean morally, facts deny it most emphatically. The progress in wickedness and infidelity is truly alarming, and is beginning to arrest the attention of all classes, excepting those who may be floating with the current. Read the following from Adam's Transcript:—

VICE AS A SYSTEM.—The statistics of startling crime with which our newspapers are constantly filled have come to be a staple of daily expectation. Marriages and deaths are scarcely more regular in their appearance than this unremitting chronicle of vice. Drunkenness, robbery, murder, disclosures of private scandal, the breaking up of homes, the ruin and disgrace of individuals public and private reel along in one giddy procession before the general eye, and are read with an indifference that is truly appalling. Is it that the keen pang of horror can dull with repetition? or is it as a people that we are becoming indifferent to the affairs outside our immediate interest from the soul absorbing care of NUMBER ONE? However it may be, it is a manifest truth that vice was never so rampant, so unchecked, so successful, or endued with so little general manifestation of public disproval as at present. In the rapid current of our daily political and commercial life, events flash too hurriedly for the mind to fully grapple with their intrinsic import, and are succeeded by fresher occurrences which fill their place. Still it is a statement to call serious attention, both to discover its source and, if possible, its remedy. Vice in its present manifestations seems to have its schools, its course of study, its graduating degrees. As a system, the Paris Police in all its fabulous dexterity was never more thoroughly developed. Common and vulgar theft has almost fallen into contempt, as the work of a bungler beside that of a well-trained artist, and we feel ourselves almost insulted to read of petty crimes. The appetite of the public has been whetted and stimulated into unnatural inclinations for such details as rape, murder, arson, etc., can afford, and a regular gusto appends to much of our sensational items. That this must bring its reaction, poisonous to all who crave its indulgence, is simply a law of nature. As the perusal of Robinson Crusoe has induced many a boy to run off to sea, so the reading of Jack Sheppard has surprised and plumed many an adventurous youth to the high though unenvied flight of a gallows-bird. That the very details of such crime should exist, and flourish and be on the steady increase, is a sadder acknowledgment still. What then are the causes of this present state of affairs? The answer is multiform. The vast amount of wealth so speedily accumulated in this country, the open and extravagant display of luxury, the growing need to be rich, based as it is upon the universal spirit of emulation and social ambition, the facilities of concealment to those who commit crime, and of ultimate escape from justice if detected, the false estimate of being 'smart,' and that a smart transaction excuses its want of honesty—an error so fatal to many a youth—all these and a thousand others tend to produce and make permanent that looseness of principle which is the prolific germ of many a downward course."

CHINESE CHRONOLOGY.

Some of the enemies of the cross of Christ, who would be glad to overthrow the Bible, have got hold of some statements concerning the fabulous chronology of the Chinese, and are trumpeting it around, saying the Chinese Empire has stood for some fifteen or twenty thousand years; and, consequently, the Mosaic account of Creation must be false; as well as the account of the flood. For the benefit of those who may be attacked by these enemies of the Bible, we give the following historical extracts from standard historians and chronologers:—

"Nearly all the eastern nations have legends of times when gods ruled on the earth for many thousands of years, giving way to demigods, and these to men; but these claims are considered by chronologists to be undeserving attention, and to have arisen simply from the difficulty of conceiving an abrupt commencement to the existing order of human events."—New Amer. Cyclo., vol. 5, p. 202.

"It is . . . manifest that the high antiquity of the Chinese empire must be deemed little better than a fiction."—Universal History, vol. 20, p. 7.

"Their original . . . favors strongly of fable, as does also the history of several of their first emperors."—Univer. Hist., v. 20, p. 109.

"In fine, that the Chinese annals cannot be depended upon, may be inferred even from Confucius himself, who more than hints the inaccuracy of them; nay, that many of the oldest materials for such annals had been destroyed before he wrote."—Univer. Hist., vol. 20, p. 155.

"In the memoirs concerning the history, arts, etc., of the Chinese, extracted from the grand annals, and lately published by the missionaries of Pekin, it is asserted, that all the relations of events prior to the reign of Yao, or You, (as differently pronounced by different writers), which they date B. C. 2057, 'are fabulous, composed in modern times, unsupported by authentic records, and full of contradictions. And that neither the Chou-king, or Xu-king, their most ancient and authentic record, nor the books of Confucius (who died B. C. 479), or of his disciples, make mention of any genealogies, or princes, before Yao. It is also proved, that the origin of the Chinese empire cannot be placed higher than one or two generations before Yao.'"—Dr. Hales' Chron. vol. I., p. 296.

GRECIAN CHRONOLOGY.

"A little after the death of Alexander the Great, they began to set down the generations, reigns, and successions, in numbers of years, and by putting reigns and successions equivalent to generations, and three generations to an hundred, or an hundred and twenty, (as appears by their chronology), they have made the antiquities of Greece three or four hundred years older than the truth."—"Chronology of Ancient Kingdoms," by Sir Isaac Newton, p. 3.

EGYPTIAN CHRONOLOGY.

"The priests of Egypt told Herodotus that Menes built Memphis and the sumptuous temple of Vulcan, in that city, and that Rhampsinitus, Mæris, Asychis, and Psammiticus, added magnificent porticos to that temple. And it is not likely that Memphis could be famous before Homer's days, who doth not mention it, or that a temple could be above two or three hundred years in building. The reign of Psammiticus began six hundred and fifty-five years before Christ, and I place the founding of this temple by Menes, about two hundred and fifty-seven years earlier; but the priests of Egypt had so magnified their antiquities before the days of Herodotus, as to tell him that from Menes to Mæris (who reigned two hundred years before Psammiticus, there were three hundred and thirty kings, whose reigns took up as many ages; that is eleven thousand years, and had filled up the interval with feigned kings, who had done nothing. And before the days of Diodorus Siculus, they had raised their antiquities so much higher, as to place six, eight, or ten new reigns of kings between those kings, whom they represented to Herodotus to succeed one another immediately."—"Chron. of Ancient Kingdoms," by Sir Isaac Newton, p. 6.

The Egyptians held that on the account of the rich "soil, the first men were formed in Egypt," or grew up out of the ground.—Diodorus Siculus, vol. I, p. 18–19.

"From Osiris and Isis, to the reign of Alexander the Great, who built a city after his own name, the Egyptian priests reckon above ten thousand years, or (as some write) little less than three and twenty thousand years."—Diodorus Siculus, vol. I, p. 29.

How did they make out so many years?

"In their fabulous stories, they say that the most ancient of their gods reigned twelve hundred years . . . apiece." The Egyptian priests, in their computation of time, do reckon above three and twenty thousand years from the reign of Sol to the passage of Alexander the Great into Asia."—Diodorus Sic. vol. I, p. 32.

It is said they had lunar years of thirty days each.

Diodorus Siculus says:—"The priests have fabulously reported" that "the gods and demigods reigned in Egypt for the space almost of eighteen thousand years." "Afterwards, they say, that men reigned there for the space of fifteen thousand years, to the one hundred and eightieth Olympiad, at which time I myself came in to Egypt, in the reign of Ptolemy, who took upon him the name of Dionysius the Younger."—Diod., vol. I, p. 50.

DIARY PAGES.

To-day the horrors of the late war have been brought afresh before me by a visit to the rebel stockade, at Florence, and the soldiers' cemetery, where many poor northern boys, after months of suffering, found rest in the dreamless sleep. The stockade contains eighteen acres of land. The most part is rough and shrubby, sloping from two sides down to a small creek running through the centre, which would have afforded water in abundance and good. The rebel guard knowing this, and wishing to deprive the boys of such a blessing, built over it their private walk outside and above them, so that of necessity they must use its drainage or die of thirst. Here I begin to grow indignant, and gladly turn to talk of something else; yet all musings are provoking and uncomfortable in this field of death.

We will visit now the little shanties, where one or two, and perhaps more in each, had their burrows; for the most of them were over cellars, which, of course, would be warmer in winter, and cooler in summer, than the surface of the ground. The shanties were built with Yankee skill, of small logs and sticks, plastered with clay. The chimneys also of the same, though some I saw were of brick, which the boys made with their hands. These little dwelling places were scattered over all the ground. O what a city of sorrow this must have been. What yearnings of heart for home firesides, tables, and beds; aye, more for the loving smile and words of wives, children, mothers, fathers, and sisters. If battle-fields were drenched in blood, it seems to me such places as this were baptized with tears. A small hut near one corner is pointed out as the one in which Florena Budwin lived and died. Till her death, she was known only as a soldier boy. Death came to this dismal enclosure many times a day. He loves to lurk around such places. We call him an enemy, but I thought of him here almost as a friend.

We will go now to his prison, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." "There the prisoners rest together." The cemetery is arranged with taste, and enclosed with a picked fenced. The gateway is arched, and through the lattice-work a running southern rose tree is weaving itself. Near the gateway, a beautiful cottage is nearly completed for the attendant. Here are buried two thousand and eight hundred soldiers from the Northern States. A painted head-board marks each grave, and each is numbered. The names of the dead were registered, but the list was lost, or destroyed, before coming to loyal hands. A few head-boards, however, bear a simple record. Here, side by side, are the graves of some boys from the fifteenth Maine Reg't, whose names are given. The names of officers are also inscribed.

Now we stand by the resting-place of some one whom love, or respect, has seemed to favor. Kindly hands have been here. The grass is springing, and a beautiful rose-bush grows from the mound, to drop year after year its blossoms, as if to teach mankind the shortness of life and beauty. I will read this inscription:—"In memory of Florena A. Budwin, of Phila., who died Jan. 23d, 1865, at Florence, S. C.

'Asleep in Jesus, far from thee
Thy kindred and their graves may be;
Yet thine is still a blessed sleep,
From which none ever wakes to weep.'"

A feeling of sadness crept over me among these graves in this lonely spot, and I left them with an unusual homesickness for the sinless and deathless land.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT I HAVE SEEN AND HEARD.

BRO. GRANT:—Having an appointment with the dear brethren and sisters at Grand and Allen Sts., March 28th, and feeling an anxiety to visit the Star-of-Hope Mission, I left my field of labor, and started for that large and wicked city, New York. I arrived in season to be present at the evening prayer and conference. It was a very stormy day and evening; in consequence, the house was not quite full, but the Spirit of the Lord was there, and its soothing, consoling influence was felt and appreciated by my poor heart, as I entered that old brick structure, 14 Laurens St., where prayer is wont to be made, and where so many poor, frail human beings, both black and white, have been compelled to turn from the error of their ways, and find that peace that the world knows not of. It was quite late when I arrived, and I found Srs. Boide and Bennett acting in the capacity of teachers, while the whole company combined were looking away to Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith, and who has promised life and immortality to all that love him and fear his name, both small and great.

After our good meeting was over, I accepted of the so-called "prophet's room," in which to spend the night. As there are many of our dear brethren and sisters who have never been to the mission, perhaps it would be well to speak of the furniture found therein. It consists of three pieces: a small iron bedstead, an old wooden chair, and a pine table of small dimensions. I would like to add right here, that I hope Sister Smith will excuse me for informing the public of the amount and quality of her household goods; but I have come to the conclusion, that perhaps it would be a good plan for those who have enough of this world's goods to remember the Star-of-Hope.

The next morning, I arose thanking the good Lord for the preservation of my life and health, and left the room thinking I would go somewhere else to procure a breakfast; as Sister Smith was away sick, and not able to send home means, I did not suppose they had any more than they wanted themselves; but ere I left the house, that dreadful word "death" rang in my ear, accompanied with an invitation to preach a funeral sermon (Srs. Mellen and Dow both being disabled, and on the sick list). I consented. About 8 o'clock, we started for one of the lowest, most degraded, God-forsaken dens of iniquity I ever saw. We passed through a long alley filled with thieves, blacklegs, rum-sellers, prostitutes, and all sorts of the most miserable creatures on earth. As we entered that dreadful place, how my heart yearned for the time to come when, instead of misery, will be peace; and instead of sorrow, joy.

(Inside view.) After passing through a back yard, surrounded by large tenement buildings, we went up a flight of old broken stairs, along a little narrow walk, into a small room. O what a sight to behold. There lay the object of our visit in one corner. A few old chairs, table, and water pail, constituted the furniture. We called in the neighbors, and I spoke a few words from the text, found in Matt. 27: 22: "What shall I do then with Jesus?" Tears flowed freely, and we received a blessing from the Lord. Sr. Boide then offered up an earnest appeal for God not to withdraw his insulted Spirit from his people, and we left them alone to their shame.

Now, Bro. Grant, allow me to add, that I do believe it would be a sin and a great sin for us as a people to withdraw, or withhold support from that mission. If Sr. Smith and all her helpers were to get as rich as A. T. Stewart of this city, it would not begin to pay them for what they have to suffer. I am satisfied that nothing but the grace of God can sustain them. May the good Lord put it into the hearts of those that have means to do all they can in the missionary work; and let us who are poor in this world's goods do all we can by prayer and supplication to the throne of grace for the support, comfort and consolation of our fellow laborers in the Lord.

WHO WILL GO?

It is now time to arrange for the summer campaign with the Maine Mission Tent. We have consulted and written several of the ministry about taking charge of the tent the coming season; but no one is ready to go. We now call for a volunteer. Is there a minister among us who will take charge of the tent? If so, please notify me at once by mail, and I will lay the proposal before the tent-committee for action. We do not yet know who will convey and care for the tent. Let us be ready for every good work. In behalf of the committee, I. C. WELLCOME.

STRAY THOUGHTS.

BRO. GRANT:—A word or two to be cast among the rubbish, or put in the "Crisis," just as you think best. It won't cost much to write, and if I am doing this I shall not be doing worse. It is a very true saying, "If we have nothing to do, the devil will set us to work at something." If it is not talking about some of our neighbors, it will be finding fault with some of our brethren; perhaps it will be with the Editor. What they have written has not been published, and the devil will tell them, "There, you see, they don't care for anything you can write. Perhaps they are having a good laugh over my poor writing; perhaps some words are not spelled right, and they will make sport about that. Well, I am bound they shan't have anything more from me to make sport of, any way, or to throw away. I can spend my time better than all this comes to. So you may do your own writing after this, and publish your own paper without anything from me; for I won't stand it anyway."

Now, brethren, I would not entertain any such feelings about this matter. I would keep writing. It will occupy and bring new thoughts to your mind, improve your composition, and do you good; and perhaps it will do some one else good also. As for the poor writing and bad spelling, it is not to be expected that a man who works hard with his hands can write as well as he that never does anything but write. It is the case with me, when I am writing, I can't think how to spell some of the most easy words in the English language. Some-times I get too many letters, sometimes not enough. So don't mind that; let those at the office who prepare for publication, take care of it. We want more good, warm letters from one and all. I know many who are well qualified to write, who never write a word.

I am sure there are none more illy prepared to write than I am; but still I must do something. I can't be idle. Now, I don't care whether Bro. Grant publishes this or a number of other epistles I have written lately, or not. I am perfectly willing they should be, if he thinks best to do so; if he don't do it, I shan't fret about it. If we have a man appointed for Editor, he ought to know enough to do his work; and if he can get anything out of what I can write that will assist him, I am willing he should; if not, throw it away. WISCONSIN CAMPMEETING.

Wisconsin friends, campmeeting time is approaching, and our State campmeeting and State conference (which are to be held in connection) should claim a share of your attention. In former years many have failed to attend simply because they did not begin in season to lay their plans to attend. This year we look for a great gathering, and we earnestly admonish every one to come up to this feast of tabernacles. None are too poor to come, if timely plans are made. Begin now to arrange. The meeting will probably be held about the first of June, near Prairie du Sac, Sauk Co., Wis. Let not a single believer within one hundred miles dream of making an excuse; and many in remote parts of the State should come. This is our yearly gathering, and it is a crime in the sight of heaven to belittle it by staying away. These gatherings electrify the body at large, and thrill it with heavenly vigor.

It is fondly hoped that not a minister in the entire State will absent himself. Let none get out an appointment, on the time of this general gathering, to keep himself or others from attending. Let several unite in getting up a tent, where one family can not do it alone. Notice in time. WM. SHELDON.

YOUNG PREACHERS AND VISITING.

It is difficult for a preacher to accomplish much good without a great deal of visiting. It is very true that even with much visiting he is not always successful. This is especially the case when his visits are purely of a social character. Visits of this kind are usually very agreeable, but they do not, as a general thing, tend greatly to the spiritual edification of the church.

Many preachers do a great amount of visiting of this kind, and think themselves very good pastors, when, in fact, they may not be worthy the name of pastors at all. Purely pastoral visiting is what is required. In paying visits of this kind the preacher seeks not his own comfort or pleasure, but the good of those visited; generally their spiritual good, very often their temporal. No order of exercises can be laid down that would be suitable for all cases of pastoral visiting. The preacher's own judgment must dictate the course to be pursued in each particular case. Sometimes it may be suitable to pray; sometimes to sing and pray; sometimes to read, sing and pray; sometimes to hold a religious conversation; sometimes to listen to a tale of suffering, and to sympathize with the afflicted; and sometimes it may be found inconvenient to do any of these. But the visit is not lost; it gives knowledge that the preacher is at work.

In distinguishing between social and pastoral visiting, I do not mean to condemn social visiting, or to say that a preacher should never indulge in it. He and his family have the same right that other people have to participate in the enjoyment of social life, provided those enjoyments are not of a sinful character. But social visiting is not work, and it is not a discharge of pastoral obligations; and the preacher who visits a great deal socially, is almost certain, from a want of time, to visit much both socially and pastorally, to do very little visiting in the latter way. His social visiting is, of necessity, for the greatest part to those in good temporal circumstances. His neglect falls on those who are not able to entertain him socially. And yet he is the servant of all men, and has been sent forth, not to seek enjoyment, but to do good. He may find rest, from time to time, from his labors, but he cannot place that rest to his credit as a partial discharge of his duties.

The sincere, earnest preacher, who probably appreciates his own mission, will adopt some system for visiting, as well as for the discharge of his other duties. He will endeavor to do justice to all the members of his charge. He will resist the temptation to visit the abodes of affluence and refinement exclusively or mainly. He will not be able always to do this without a struggle; for sometimes the temptation will come to him double-voiced, the one voice appealing to his love of ease, and the other to his fear of provoking the displeasure of the powerful, in his efforts to deal impartially by the poor. He will discover that other preachers, older, more influential, and, perhaps in his own estimation, more pious than himself, have not resisted it, and he may be induced to ask himself the question, why he should strive to do better than they.

But he will, nevertheless, stand firm as a preacher and an exemplar of righteousness, and a feeder of the flock of Christ. He will cultivate the fear of God rather than that of man, and not conceive that he has discharged is duties when he has gratified his own tastes, or pleased those persons who may desire to appropriate his attentions in the greatest measure to themselves. He will, if he makes any difference at all, make it in favor of those who most desire his attentions. He will remember the injunction, "Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate," and will make the poor, the sick, the friendless, and the bereaved the objects of his especial sympathy and care. He will try to take his Master as his example.—Mathetes.

WORTH KNOWING.

I know that many horses suffer at this time of the year for the want of the antidote God has provided for them; i. e., horse radish. Put from one-half to three-fourths pound into their feed, if they will not eat it without. Most of them will. Try it, and see the effect. They need it as much as a cat does catnip. We should help all that we can that are suffering under the curse. HIRAM MUNGER.

☞ At a late meeting of "Liberal Christians," in Boston, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe affirmed the sentiment that "the orthodox churches of the day are so busied with acting over the tragedy of Christ's death, that they care little for the secret of his life." That "the doctrine of the atonement of Christ is but a heathen sacrifice to a heathen deity"; and claimed that only a few "liberals" have found out that "God is the friend of man."

Correspondence.

From Bro. I. I. Leslie.

BRO. GRANT:—Our dear Bro. Wadsworth has at length reached here. He arrived today in a very feeble condition. He has been two months on the way from New Orleans here; a distance of about six hundred miles. He will not be able to leave here at present. His health is greatly impaired by his labors and exposure to heat and cold; lying out, as he often has at night, and carrying a heavy load of tracts and his blanket through the day. I fear he has greatly over-worked himself, and that he will never fully regain his former health and strength. His nervous system has been greatly taxed, and there are indications of congestion of the brain. He is greatly changed in appearence since he left here, a year ago, having grown thin in flesh, and looking weather-beaten and burned by the sun. His hands have been burned to a blister, and are yet sore. He needs medical treatment, rest and clothing, before he can go on in his work. I trust to be able, under God, to get this dear servant of Christ up again to health, that he may still continue to scatter light and truth in the dark portions of the land. We shall do all we can for him here.

If any of our brethren and sisters feel like helping this dear servant of Christ, they can write to him here in my care.

Yours, hoping for rest soon, I. I. LESLIE.

Memphis, Tenn.

[Do not forget Bro. Wadsworth. Let us make him comfortable, if possible.—ED.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

BRO. GRANT:—As this is the first time I have been able to write for the Crisis since I was sick, it is with heartfelt thanks to my dear brethren and sisters, who have so nobly exerted themselves in behalf of the Star-of-Hope Mission, while I was sick and prostrated, nerves weak, and mind affected. The Lord found first one friend, and then another, to stand by the cause, and help in so many ways (what Paul calls "helps"); first, he put it into the heart of a friend to take me South with her, as I was not able to go alone, which did me some good; but the heat was too great for my weakness, and I returned home with two other friends.

Not only did the Lord raise up friends to care for me personally, but he put it into the hearts of others to send in the means to keep the table, buy the oil, and keep the laborers comfortable, while I was unable to labor. O how good the Lord is. He can work and none can hinder.

We have received blessed letters under these trying circumstances, such as this from Lowell:—"Sister Smith is sick, and I think we ought to do something for her; and if you will help, I will." So they went to work, and in a little while sent a letter with something for rent. Another dear sister, and son, who are living in California, whose hearts beat strong for the Star-of-Hope, sent a letter with kind words and aid for rent. A number of others, some for rent, some for the poor, some to be used where most needed; and all this as an extra effort from those that love mission work.

I have thought, in the past, it was a great care to have the responsibility of this house on my shoulders; but I have learned, I think, in this sickness, to cast all my cares on Jesus, for he careth for me. The work is his, the money is his, the power his, and the glory belongs to him. How glad it made the laborers, when I was away sick, and they knew not but what we must give up the mission, or else get in debt, to have the blessed letters of personal effort and encouragement, and something inside to relieve the poor and pay expenses. Our laborers have been the past winter from garret to cellar, in alleys and lanes, through snow and cold, to carry food and raiment to cold and starving ones, and their letters have encouraged their hearts to still do it; and God has blessed, and in return given souls for their hire. O it is the best thing in the world to work for God. Many poor ones, now sleeping in Jesus, were sustained in their last day of suffering by what was sent in some of those kind letters.

Also from my dear sisters of the Union Female Missionary Association, in the hours of deepest trial, came the noble response for this home, to keep the doors open for the speedy coming of the Lord. Language fails me, my dear brothers and sisters, to express to you how I feel towards you, for your christian sympathy with me in my mission work; and it shall be my greatest endeavor from this time forward, by the grace of God, to become more devoted to God and his cause than ever.

As there are so many who send us letters and donations, and are desirous of hearing how we prosper, and would like us to answer personally, we have concluded not to publish them in the Crisis; hence it is important that those who send us money should give us their names, so we can direct to them.

I wish to correct a mistake made by some, in reference to what Bro. Hastings said in the March number of the Christian; viz., "Any parcels or barrels of clothing, etc., sent to the Repository will be duly forwarded. Nothing more should be sent to New York for the present." He simply meant those sent to his own address, and not mine. Some of his barrels have been sent here en route for the South. Yours in the highways and hedges,

New York, April 29th. A. E. SMITH.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. H. A. King writes from Pittsburg, Pa., March 29th:—"Bro. Jonas Wendell, of Edinboro, Pa., has been the instrument in God's hands of doing a great work in Pittsburg. I received a letter from him last week calling for help, as he has the use of only one arm, and several wished to be baptized. Although other duties were pressing, I felt that it was the Lord's call, so I came Saturday night, to be here on Sunday; and I feel well repaid in forming pleasant acquaintances with many of God's dear children, who are rejoicing in the discovery of many hidden treasures in God's great storehouse of truth. After the afternoon services, six noble soldiers of the cross came forward and were buried in the likeness of Christ's death, and arose to walk in newness of life. The Christian Baptist church (formerly called the Disciple church) kindly tendered us the use of the baptistry in their church, which we gladly accepted, as the Alleghany river was very high and muddy. In the evening, Bro. Wendell extended an invitation to all who wished to unite together as a band of brethren and sisters, to manifest it by rising to their feet; when about twenty arose; and before they sat down, he extended the invitation to all who believed he had preached the truth, and were willing to sustain it, when about two hundred arose, including nearly all, and I am not sure but every one in the hall; and the number would probably have been much larger, had not the congregation been previously dismissed, many having left the hall on account of the lateness of the hour.

Bro. Wendell expects to remain another week, when he thinks Bro. Brown, of Edinboro, will come and continue the meetings, and perhaps settle as the pastor of the church. Among the many places where Bro. Wendell has been blessed in raising up a church, there is none more important than this, as Pittsburg is a great centre, where many railroads meet; and our preaching brethren going East and West can call upon our devoted Bro. John Best, corner of Fifth (extension) and Chatham streets, and spend a Sabbath to aid in building up the church here."

Bro. D. A Bean, Sutton, N. H., writes:—"Although I have never written for the Crisis, my pen must now move to give vent to the pent up feelings of my heart. Bless the Lord, O my soul. I felt to say last night when I opened the Crisis and read the letter from Sr. Smith, God has had mercy on us, or rather on the poor, as he had on Paul.—Phil. 2: 27. Then this morning, when reading Bro. Leslie's letter, I thought, can it be possible if God blesses the labors of one of his dear children, who have gone out to enlighten the ignorant, and are laboring to ameliorate the condition of the poor and suffering, that jealousy or selfishness should arise in the heart of any one? God forbid that it should be so; but rather let us pray that God would open the hearts and hands of those who have the means, that they may give, and do it with a cheerful heart, for 'God loveth a cheerful giver.' I do believe, as Solomon says in Prov. 11: 24, 'There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty.'

Truly, God's children have been praying for you, Bro. Grant, or your health and strength would not have remained so good amidst all your exposure to the cold and your abundant labors. How God has blessed you in winning souls to him, and scattering light and exposing error. My prayer is that God may hasten the day when all shall be brought in that will come, and be prepared for the great advent; when the wheat shall be gathered in, the earth purified, and Christ gather his children together to dwell with him on the new earth. Shall I be there? It is the greatest desire of my heart that I may be accounted worthy. Dear brothers and sisters, let us scatter up and down this world, let us pray for each other, that we may be able to overcome all the perils of these last days, and be ready to enter into 'the marriage supper of the Lamb.'"

Bro. E. Cotton writes, March 25th:—"I saw in the last "Crisis" a request for preachers to write more, as the brethren would like to hear from them. I would say to the dear brethren scattered abroad, that I have been laboring in western Pensylvania this winter. Edenboro, Bloomingvalley, Pittsburg, Concord, Union, Bearlake, and Pinevalley. I am now at Athens. Preached here every evening for nine evenings, and on the Sabbath seven arose for prayers. I expect some of them will go forward in baptism next Sabbath. I am filled with comfort. I am exceeding joyful, as I travel from town to town, and county to county; for my heart burns with love to God and man. Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, and good will to man.

I have sold quite a number of Bro. Sheldon's books (Adventism), and Bro. Blain's 'Death not Life.' I have given away a large quantity of tracts that Bro. Himes sent me. Got six to take the Crisis, and four to take the Voice. I am all ready and waiting for Jesus to come. I am glad I can tell you the past year is the happiest year of my life."

P. S. "Where I have labored since Nov., twenty-two have started to seek the Lord. A number have found peace and comfort in believing."

Bro. A. B. Swanesburg, Shelburne, N. S., Mar. 22nd, writes:—"While looking over a number of what are called religious papers, and which are being sent out broadcast in the world, and while I see so many making such mighty efforts, compassing sea and land to get subscribers for the same; and not only so, but trying to promulgate doctrines which are not in accordance with the Bible, philosophy, or common sense, those things awaken me to a sense of my duty; and while I feel, and not only feel but know, that the Crisis is the best printed weekly in the world, and the best setter forth of good, sound Bible doctrines, and has but one exception in the world, and that is the blessed word of God itself, the question comes home to me, What are you doing to advance those truths it sets forth? I have to answer, with a shamed face, Not as much as I might; but by the help of the good Lord, I will make a greater effort than ever to advance the glorious light of the gospel, that is now enveloped in gross darkness, brought on by human tradition and superstition. May the good Lord help us all to make a bold push for God and his truth."

Bro. Joel Haworth, Emporum, Kan., writes:—"Being encouraged in the Crisis of March 17th, I will endeavor to write a few lines to encourage the brethren of like precious faith, and to let them know that even away out in the far western Kansas, there are some who are trying to stand up for Jesus, and are looking for his coming kingdom. I have been a local preacher in the church of the United Brethren. I am now cast out into the cold. The United Brethren have only allowed me a good moral character. Of this I am proud. These afflictions I suffer for Jesus' sake, in trying to hold up the gospel banner, while teaching that man is mortal, and that Jesus is coming soon to set up his kingdom.

When I look forward to the near approach of the time of the coming of the saints, it fills my heart with rejoicing, and with love to God and all mankind. My prayer is, Lord, send forth more laborers into the harvest field. If there are any of the dear brethren of like precious faith who could come to Kansas next summer, come and help us. Call and see me."

Bro. John Bigelow writes:—"I am, as I have been for some years, much interested in the Crisis, as conducted by you, and also in the communications of many of your correspondents, especially that class of thought presented by Bro. Colegrove. I think we need all the light from the watchmen that can possibly be shed on coming events. Those who can read the signs of the times should speak, in order that we may be found waiting and watching for the ushering in of the kingdom of God. We are certainly living in a time when the Scriptures are fast having a fulfillment; and it will be wise in us to heed the injunction of the Savior: 'So ye in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors.'"

Bro. M. R. Steele, Canandaigua, N. Y., writes:—"We have been blest with a revival here during the winter, and some thirty young persons are rejoicing in hope."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, April 11. The Pope's jubilee was celebrated at Rome with great splendor. The Pope said Mass at St. Peters, and the Te Deum was sung in the presence of the Cardinals, Foreign Ambassadors, notabilities from all parts of Europe, and an immense congregation. At night the city was illuminated.

A letter from Rome says:—"For a long time past so many visitors had not been seen here as are now collected; in fact, the last comers have great difficulty in finding lodgings. Taking into account the high price of apartments and of the cost of living, there is no exaggeration in putting down the daily expenditure per head at 30fr.; as there are at present more than 30,000 strangers here, a sum of nearly a million of francs is put every day into the pockets of the Romans. All kinds of pleasures and amusements are offered to those generous guests; there are monster concerts of five hundred performers, who sacrifice their taste for the national music by executing the compositions of the German masters; hunting parties, races, and archæological excursions are organized; an illumination of the Coliseum and the Forum is announced, and on the 4th of April Mme. Ristori will appear for the first time at the Great Apollo Theatre and give a series of performancas.

Londonderry, Ireland, April 20. Serious riots occurred here yesterday between the Catholics and the Orangemen. During the collisions between the two factions the police charged upon both. Firearms were freely used, several of the rioters being wounded and two killed. The riot at one time assumed fearful proportions, but the efforts of the police and the appearance of the military from the garrison finally succeeded in restoring quiet, and the city is now tranquil. The military will remain on duty for a day or two.

Geneva, April 29. It is rumored to-day that the Swiss Government has requested Joseph Mazzini to leave the country. Mazzini lives at Lugano, near the Italian border, and his connection with the recent conspiracy at Florence and Milan has probably led the Italian Government to make such a request of Switzerland.

St. Petersburg, May 1. The Russian Council of State propose to grant more power to the municipal Councils throughout the Empire, enlarge the number of voters and to modify the press law.

London, May 2. Advices from Paraguayan sources represent that President Lopez with 10,000 men is preparing to take the offensive.

Paris, May 1. The protocol for a conference between France and Belgium has been signed.

DOMESTIC.

New York, April 29. By the way of St. Thomas, the 15th of April, we have late advices from Maracaibo. The populace of that city was in a fearful condition for want of water. Not a drop of rain had fallen for three years. A letter from a respectable firm says that the town is about to be deserted. Merchants and all are about leaving on account of the total lack of water.

The Isthmus Canal Project.—We have intelligence to-day by the Aspinwall steamer of a character to revive the apprehension, that the French may, after all, get the start of us in the matter of the much talked of Isthmus Canal. The Congress, it seems, has ratified the contract with M. Chevalier. This has drawn forth a spirited protest from Mr. Felix Belly, who some years ago obtained a concession for making a canal, and whose concession is held to be valid by the French Law Courts, as shown in a recent trial. Nicaraguans are very sanguine about this canal, and now fully believe that M. Chevalier, backed by the French Emperor, will be able to carry out his contract, but those who look upon the canal across the American continent with an impartial eye must see that great as may be the difficulties in Darien in carrying out the grand project, they are three-fold greater in Nicaragua, where the distance between the two oceans is so very much larger, and where neither the river San Juan nor the Lake of Granada offer the facilities which projectors at one time thought they did. Meanwhile we have nothing more as to the final disposition of the American Treaty, at Bogota. The Congress, there, are doubtless hanging back to see if better terms cannot be made at Washington than those offered by Mr. Cushing.

The Aurora Borealis, April 16th.—The latest sensation of the day is the aurora borealis, or Northern Lights exhibition, last Friday evening. Before such an exhibition, man's most pretentious and ingenious efforts at gorgeous display, pale into utter insignificance. The exhibition, as will be seen by our telegraphic dispatches elsewhere, extended over the major portion of the country, and excited both awe and delight throughout the length and breadth of the land. Many will be the awful predictictions of evil to come that will be hazarded to-day on the basis of last night's show of celestial pyrotechnics. In 1837 there was a great aurora, which was very generally a source of terror to the ignorant.

The display last night was most remarkable, rivalling that seen in this region in January, 1837. The bank of auroral vapor, the streamers, the arches, the corona, and the undulations or merry dancers, the whole set off by a peculiar light, were all observable last night, and will form for many days, the subjects of conversation, thought and speculation.—N. Y. Express.

Solar Eclipse.—Astronomers are making extensive preparations for observing the total eclipse of the sun, which will occur, according to astronomical calculation, on the 7th of Aug. It is the only total eclipse that will be visible in N. America in the present century. At Boston the event will happen about sunset. The centre of the line of totality passing through the city of Springfield, Illinois, and quite near Des Moines City, Iowa. Both of these stations, as well as many others, will be occupied by Coast Survey parties. Congress has appropriated $5000 to defray the expense of observations. Prof. Winlock, Director of Harvard Observatory, is making arrangements for viewing the eclipse and noting its features at Shelbyville, Ky. The obscuration will last between two and three minutes.—Boston Journal.

Bicycles a Failure.—The New York Sun, whose editor is a practical manager of the velocipede, affirms that, as a means of locomotion, it is practically worthless. He says the question was fairly settled against it on Tuesday in a trial on the Union Course. The track was in fair condition, and was therefore far more favorable for traveling by velocipede than the ordinary roads of the country, despite which fact a mile in about six minutes was the highest rate of speed that was attained, and even then the rider was almost exhausted and could not have gone a quarter of a mile further. Leaving out of the question, then, the fatigue to the traveler and the generally rough nature of country roads, the velocipede is found to be a failure.—Boston Journal.

Southern Travel.—At a meeting of railroad superintendents at Louisville, a combination was agreed upon by which a through train will be run from New York to New Orleans in seventy-six hours and a half. The new time table will also extend to Boston. There will be but a single break between the two cities, at Louisville.

The New Massachusetts Liquor Law.—The Legislature has finally agreed upon a prohibitory liquor law which has passed its third reading. It is fully as stringent as the old law which was repealed a year ago. It prohibits the sale of all liquors except cider, and that it forbids to be drank where sold. The salary of the State Liquor Agent is fixed at $4,000 a year. Towns of less than 3500 inhabitants are allowed to have a liquor agent, who is limited to fifteen per cent. profit. Heavy penalties of fine and imprisonment are attached to the adulteration of liquor. The Government appoints annually an analyzer and inspector of liquor at a yearly salary of $3,000.—Ex.

Legislative Corruption.—The Commercial, alluding to the buying and selling of votes at Albany, asks,—"Where is this terrible condition of things to end? There seems to be no security against the money power of the country. Statutes are bought the same as pork and potatoes. Honest legislators are overwhelmed by the power of venality and swept down by the tide of corruption. The evil grows worse and worse every year. Our system of legislation is most disgraceful, and there is no prospect that any improvement will take place until the people are aroused to take more interest in the affairs of the country. We are drifting to a terrible condition of things."

Passing Events.

☞ It seems that the Bible can now be circulated among the common people in Spain, and the British and Foreign Bible Society have decided to issue successive editions of Valera's version to the extent of one million copies. Whatever may be the result of the circulation of the Bible in that country, it is quite certain to be connected with a general revival of literature, for wherever the Bible goes all other kinds of books follow.

☞ The miners' strike in South Yorkshire, England, has assumed very formidable proportions; 1700 men are now out of employment, and between 5,000 and 6,000 persons are dependent upon them for support. They are at present maintained by the Miners' Union, which has a fund of £10,000, and by contributions from other trades.

☞ Look at the plum and cherry trees and cut out all the black knots you can find. If past recovery, cut them down and burn them up. A tree in a garden well covered with it is as bad among the other trees as a man infected with the small pox among men.

☞ A Rome correspondent says that among the recent converts to the Roman Catholic church in that city are "Etham-Selim, a Turk, son of the Pasha of Salonica, and Mrs. Strong, a leader of fashion in New York."

☞ Mr. A. T. Stewart's property on Broadway, N. Y., alone is worth about five millions. Mr. W. B. Astor's real estate on Broadway is worth about three millions. The Lorillard estate has eight millions invested in that thoroughfare.

☞ Among the presents sent to the Pope on the fiftieth anniversary of his consecration to the priesthood was an ivory watch, of exquisite workmanship, made in France, which is a perfect timekeeper.

☞ New and durable homesteads on the American plan are being erected on Mount Zion, and the children of Abraham are dwelling there.

☞ One of the New York papers says that the very purest milk that can be obtained in that city contains fully one-third of water.

☞ The first newspaper printed in America was issued in Boston, April 4th, 1704. Only one copy of it is preserved.

☞ The Spanish Government has recently sent an order to Bridgeport, Conn., for the manufacture of ten million metallic cartridges.

☞ A writer on adulterations in food says there are fifty substitutes for coffee, and one hundred and twenty-nine for tea.

☞ European mail advices state that the whole length—3600 miles—of the core of the French Atlantic cable, was completed April 16th.

☞ The Pope will be seventy-seven years old on the 13th of May.

☞ Letters from Rome say that there is much sickness among the Americans now in that city.

☞ Rome is so full of visitors that late comers have great difficulty in finding lodgings.

☞ An inch of water, expanded into steam, fills the space of 1,494 inches.

☞ The world's crop of tobacco is estimated at 432,400 tons.

Notice.

As so many of our brethren have spoken to me for lots for tents, on the camp-ground at Alton Bay, N. H.; and as Bro. Woodman, who has furnished us with lumber for a number of years so reasonable, is now cutting out lumber; if our brethren will make out a bill of what they want and send it to him, be will have it ready for them when they wish to build.

To those who have had any fears of the campmeeting being moved from Alton Bay, I would say, that from the assurance that I have had from Mr. Merritt, of Boston, that the fare shall be reduced from Boston, I think the meeting will continue there until the Lord comes. J. G. Smith.

P. S. Bro. Woodman's address is—Jeremiah Woodman, Alton, N. H.

☞ Take Notice.

The Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee are requested to meet on the camp-ground, Monday, May 17th, on the arrival of the first train of cars. J. G. Smith.

Notice.

The Lord willing, the annual conference of the State of New York will be held at South Butler, N. Y., commencing Thursday evening, June 3d, 1869. A cordial invitation is extended to all the lovers of Jesus, and of his soon coming back to earth again. Let all the churches send delegates, and make arrangements for the present needs of the cause. Come one, come all, and come in the name and love of the Master. Ample provision will be made for all. Come at the commencement of the meeting.

N. B. Brethren will leave the cars on the New York Central R. R. at Savannah depot. We have made arrangements with the stage proprietor to carry all coming to the place of meeting and back for fifty cents each. The stage will leave on the arrival of the trains, each day, during the meeting (Sundays excepted), about ten o'clock A. M. and six P. M.

N. B. Brethren will ask for return checks of the driver when paying fare.

Per order of Com., B. P. Stevens.

Change of Address.

As I am at the Repository, to remain as long as it shall please the Lord, perhaps all summer, I take this opportunity to remind those who desire my hymn books (Spiritual Melodies), or who wish to write to me, that they may address me at Boston, Mass., care of H. L. Hastings. I hope that some of those who have had my hymn books on sale, have got some money for me by this time, and that they will forward it to me as above, without delay. I. K. Lombard.

Notice.

Our Brn. of this place, having engaged Metropolitan Hall, with the intention of having regular religious services every Sunday, have requested us, as their committee, to extend an invitation, through their Crisis, to our ministering brethren, who are in full faith and fellowship with the leading and prominent doctrine advocated in the above named paper, to give us a call as often as they can make it convenient. Men of deep and earnest piety are needed. The hall being under our control, can be opened any time during the week, whenever any of the brethren wish to send an appointment.

Eld. Thomas Rines.

Facts and testimonies concerning Papal Rome in its present condition, of a very interesting nature. Illustrated with good engravings. Per dozen, by mail, $1.06; single, by mail, 12 cts.

3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. 4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.
5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.
6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.
7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.

WHAT IS FAITH?

"Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."—HEB. 11: 1.

Oh! faith is not a mere belief
That Thou can'st aid in bitter grief;
Oh! no, far greater blessings, Lord,
Are promised in thy gracious word.

'Tis cleansing in thy blood each stain,
And knowing pardon, plead again;
'Tis deep remorse, yet grateful song;
'Tis utter weakness, yet so strong.

'Tis living in thy blessed sight,
Where'er I breathe by day or night;
'Tis drinking in thy tender love
From all below, from all above.

'Tis calm assurance "all is well,"
Though how or where, I cannot tell;
'Tis hearkening when no voice I hear;
'Tis smiling, though I weep and fear.

'Tis grasping thee when all are gone;
'Tis viewing thee when quite alone;
'Tis pillowing on thine unseen arm,
Supported there and free from harm.

'Tis stepping light, though burdened sore;
'Tis hating sin yet more and more;
'Tis fighting hard, and yet at rest;
'Tis broken-hearted, and yet blest.

'Tis loving with unuttered love,
Though hard the heart and slow to move;
'Tis laboring, though it's all so small,
I count it laboring not at all.

'Tis telling thee my every thought;
'Tis finding all I ever sought;
'Tis treading on through life's lone walk
In sweet companionship and talk.

'Tis hurrying to a glorious end;
'Tis pressing toward my bosom friend;
'Tis meeting Him—come, Jesus, come!
'Tis folding tent, and reaching home.

My Father, I must wait on thee
For faith like this, 'twas bought for me;
Beneath the cross I seek, I claim,
Such living faith in Jesus' name.

PENCILINGS OF A PILGRIM.

DRESS.

"I don't think dress has anything to do with religion; therefore I wish people would let the subject alone." Such is the verdict of many a sensitive person, whose conscience is a little warped by disobedience. Let me assure all concerned that religion has something to do with dress; and those who expect to shine with the redeemed will do well to look the facts squarely in the face. But some are ready to say: "Get the heart right, and externals will adjust themselves." This is partly true and partly false. If the above statement is invariably true, then we are forced to the conclusion that there are but very few right hearts among all that profess the religion of Jesus. It is hardly safe to conclude that every instance of improper attire proves the existence of a wicked heart. The logic thus employed to evade the whole subject of dress, is altogether too sweeping and uncharitable; for it decides that in every case where the externals do not adjust themselves to the Bible standard, there is an utter want of saving grace.

Again: If it be true that the only thing necessary is to aim at heart-work, without ever touching externals, why did not the apostles observe this rule of action? Why did they specifically and repeatedly urge home the duties of christians on every point of practical life? Why did they spend their useless breath in denouncing superfluous ornaments, and describing the kind of dress becoming the professors of godliness? Aye, why did the Sovereign of the universe so far interest himself in the subject as to utter earnest prohibitions, and lay down positive rules for the regulation of this very matter? Is it modest for ministers to ignore the whole subject of dress, as unworthy their attention, when God has given us more legislation on this very point than he has on the subject of stealing or murder? Still more surprising is it that some who lay great stress on a literal interpretation of the Scriptures, should be so blind and indifferent whenever they run against those passages that deal out a staggering blow to pride and vanity. And an honest-hearted man is almost horror-stricken, when he sees individuals who sing and talk and dream about the speedy coming of Jesus, and yet look as though they were rigged-up—not for Paradise, but—for Vanity Fair. Strange-looking candidates for a world of spotless purity. Flowers there will be on that ever-blooming shore, and jewels, too, that shall sparkle forever; but not the odorless flowers that are made of painted rags, nor the heathenish ornaments that are manufactured of galvanized pewter.

Away with all this frippery of fashion and tinselry of vanity. When inspiration interdicts the wearing of "gold or pearls or costly array," let christians leave such trappings to those who have no better God. So far from aping all the fashions and fooleries of a godless world, christians are commanded to "come out from among them and be separate." They are neither to drink into the spirit, nor adopt the false philosophy of wicked men; but to tread a narrow, self-denying path, as "strangers and pilgrims." Christians should regulate their dress, not according to the laws of Paris, but of Paradise. They are expected to be a "peculiar people," having renounced the vain pomp and glory of a world that is perverted by sin and governed by pride. Whether we eat, or drink, or whatever we do, we are to "do all to the glory of God." How can we spend our money for artificial flowers, breast-pins, finger-rings, and other useless appendages, and yet ask God's blessing on all we do? How dare we thus fool away our time and money and christian influence, when God's claims are so broad and the wants of humanity are so pressing? It is a fearful thing to rob the treasury of the Lord to serve the goddess of Fashion. If the money now spent for outward adornments was poured out for the furtherance of God's suffering cause, what glorious achievements would be the result.

The ostentation of the christian church is enough to neutralize nearly all her efforts. It saps her vitality, cripples her influence, and makes infidels. Common sinners know that such conformity to the world as most of the churches exhibit, is utterly inconsistent with christian character. When they see religious societies trying to vie with each other in the splendor of their attire, until a professedly christian congregation looks more like a blooming flower-garden than it does like a band of Christ's disciples, no wonder if it becomes a serious question whether there is any reality in religion. The religionists of the day seem to have forgotten that the following prohibition was ever uttered: "Be not conformed to this world." O that the voice of God might be heard and cheerfully obeyed. Let us dress just as we would be willing to have Jesus find us, when he comes to reap the world's great harvest, and gather his loved ones home.

MASONIC SECRECY.

The strength of Masonry is in its secretism, and this secretism is attempted, or sought to be maintained, by oaths and obligations with the most terrible penalties attached. Added to these, the members are constantly admonished on the subject, and strictly charged to observe "silence and circumspection" with reference to all their secrets. The work of this Anaconda begins in the ante-room, where the candidate is made to promise on his honor as a man that he "will cheerfully conform to all the ancient established usages and customs of the fraternity." And in the oath of the Entered Apprentice Degree, the candidate swears that he will "always hail, ever conceal, and never reveal any part or parts, art or arts, point or points, of the secrets, arts and mysteries of ancient Free-Masonry, which I have received, am about to receive, or may hereafter be instructed in, to any person or persons in the known world," etc. Let the reader note the words, "which I have received;" and pray, what secrets has he received up to the time of taking this oath? True, he has passed through some preliminary ceremonies, but, as yet, he is in darkness as to the great arcana of Masonry. And he now swears to "always hail" that of which he is utterly ignorant. He knows not what is to came after. It may be good, or it may be evil; but good or evil, he swears to "always hyil,"—always salute it! Masons will not say a word against Masonry, unless they disclaim or renounce their obligations; and why? Because they have sworn to "always hail," salute, or praise it. How indiscreet, how deceived, how infatuated, how blind must a man be, to assume such an obligation as this with reference to a system of which he is ignorant! Let every man who reads this, and especially every christian, ponder well its meaning. But he not only swears to "always hail," but to "always hail" the "part or parts, art or arts, point or points, of the secrets, arts and mysteries of ancient Free-Masonry!" He "hails" separately and collectively every part, art, point and mystery in the institution, from bottom to top, or from the lowest to the highest degree; and all these he swears "ever to conceal, and never to reveal." He is never to "reveal" them himself, and if any member should renounce the institution and reveal its secrets, he is always to "conceal" the fact by not acknowledging that they have been revealed. And this is just what Masons do; they will not confess that the secrets have been divulged, because they are sworn to concealment. They also swear that they "will not write, print, stamp, stain, hew, cut, carve, indent, point or engrave it on anything moveable or immovable, under the whole canopy of heaven, whereby or whereon the least letter, figure, character, mark, stain, shadow or resemblance of the same may become legible or intelligible to myself or any other person in the known world, whereby the secrets of Masonry may be unlawfully obtained through my unworthiness." And if they violate this oath in the smallest point, they imprecate upon themselves the penalty of having "the throat cut," "tongue torn out by the roots," and "the body buried in the rough sands of the sea."

This is Masonic secretism, or, rather, is the foundation oath, made of solid steel, in which the "poor, blind candidate" swears away his liberty to approve or condemn the institution as its character may be developed before him. No alternative is left him. He must "always hail" it, right or wrong, good or evil, christian or unchristian; for there is no modification or qualification in the matter. Nothing is left to the candidate's option,—he swears unconditionally and irrevocably.

Is such an oath lawful in the sight of God? Can a christian take it, and not stain his conscience with guilt? In the Master Mason's oath the obligation to secrecy is extended as as follows: "Furthermore do I promise and swear, that a Master Mason's secrets, given to me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, when communicated to me, murder and treason excepted, and they left to my own election."

As before remarked, the obligation of secrecy is here extended, and the candidate for the degree of Master Mason swears, in addition to his former oaths of secrecy, to keep securely and inviolably the secrets of a Master Mason, given him in charge as such, and he knowing them to be such, murder and treason excepted, and they left to his own option. The reader will thus see that the web of secrecy is woven around the candidate in the most complete and thorough manner. He is now bound, not only to conceal the secrets of Masonry, but also the secrets of a brother Master Mason, no matter what they may be, if given him in charge as such; for no exceptions are made but "murder and treason," and even these may be kept at his option. And all this he swears to do, under the penalty of having his "body severed in two in the midst, and divided to the north and south,"—"bowels burnt to ashes in the centre, and the ashes scattered before the four winds of heaven," etc. What a fearful secretism is this, to which he pledges himself while in ignorance of the secrets which may be confided to him! The Master Mason may have violated the chastity of his wife or daughter, not "knowing them to be such," and should he communicate the fact to him, he is bound by his oath to keep it secret. He has truly sworn to his own hurt, and must not change. The "Past Master's oath" contains the same injunction of secrecy, and therefore it is not necessary to quote it; the same is true of the "Most Excellent Master's oath." The oath of the Royal Arch Degree has the following: "Furthermore do I promise and swear, that a companion Royal Arch Mason's secrets, given to me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, murder and treason not excepted." In previous obligations these were excepted, but left to the option of the party; now no exception is made, but all secrets, no matter how dark or damnable, are to be kept securely and inviolably. What a fearful form of secretism is this! Does it not convert every Royal Arch Mason into an accomplice, or make him accessory to the crimes communicated to him as the secrets of a Royal Arch brother? How many such secrets are locked up in the hearts of Royal Arch Masons, the day of judgment only will disclose! In the oath of the "Knights of the Red Cross," we have this obligation of secrecy. The candidate swears, "I will always hail, forever conceal, and never reveal any of the secret arts, parts or points of the mysteries appertaining to this Order of the Knights of the Red Cross," etc. The Knight Templar's oath contains a similar obligation of secrecy. The fifth Libation is the crowning obligation of secrecy, and covers all the preceding degrees in Masonry. It is also called "the sealed obligations," because, we suppose, it seals all the obligations previously taken in the different degrees. It is drank from a human skull, and reads as follows: "This pure wine I now take in testimony of my belief in the mortality of the body, and the immortality of the soul, and may this libation appear as a witness against me both here and hereafter; and as the sins of the world were laid upon the head of the Savior, so may all the sins committed by the person whose skull this was, be heaped upon my head in addition to my own, should I ever knowingly or wilfully violate or transgress any obligation that I have heretofore taken, take at this time, or shall, at any future period, take in relation to any degree of Masonry, or order of knighthood. So help me God.

Comment upon such an obligation as this is unnecessary. It is profane and wicked in the highest degree, but it is a part of the great system of secretism which Masons must "forever hail!" May God have mercy on the poor deluded christian who has been hoodwinked and led to this fearful height of wickedness.

The oath of the "Thrice Illustrious Knights of the Cross," contains the following obligation of secrecy: "That to the end of your life you will not, either in the consideration of gain, interest or honor, nor with good or bad design, ever take any, the least, step or measure, or be instrumental in any such object, to betray or communicate to any person or being, or number of the same, in the known world, not thereto of cross and craft entitled, any secret or secrets, ceremony, or ceremonies, or any part thereof appertaining to the order and degree, known among Masons as the Thrice Illustrious order of the Cross; that you will not, at any time or times whatever, either now or hereafter, directly or indirectly, by letter, figure or character, however or by whomever made, ever communicate any of the information and secret mysteries heretofore alluded to; that you will never speak on or upon, or breathe high or low, any ceremony or secret appertaining thereto," etc. "I swear to keep sacred my brother's secrets, both when delivered to me as such, and when the nature of the information is such as to require secrecy for his welfare."

The oath of the Knights of the East and West has the following: "That I will never reveal, to any person whomsoever below me, or to whom the same may not belong, by being legally and lawfully initiated, the secrets of this degree, which are now about to be communicated to me, under the penalty of not only being dishonored, but to consider my life as the immediate forfiture, and that to be taken from me with all the tortures and pains to be inflicted in the manner as I have consented to in my preceding degree.

The oath of the "Knights Adepts of the Eagle or Sun," and the oath of the "Knights of Kadosh," both contain stringent obligations of secrecy. The following is the oath of the "Knights of Kadosh:" "I promise and swear, never to reveal the secrets of the Grand Elected Knights of Kadosh, or White and Black Eagle to any person. I swear to take revenge on the traitors of Masonry." We forbear any comments at present on these obligations of secrecy. They clearly show the extreme lengths to which the passion for secretism will lead men.—Secretism, pp. 10–13.

THEOLOGICAL DISCUSSION.

"Do the Scriptures teach that man is wholly mortal, and that there is no intelligent entity which leaves him at death, capable of enjoying happiness or suffering pain"?

A discussion upon this question took place at Barber's Hall, Locustville, commencing Dec. 14th, and continuing six evenings. Eld. Griswold, of Hopkinton City, and John Slocum, of Wyoming, were chosen moderators. The disputants were Rev. A. Durfee, affirmative, and Dr. Allen Morron, negative; each speaking twenty minutes, and making three speeches an evening. Elder Durfee opened the question on the first evening, handsomely laying the foundation for his argument with that masterly skill and forethought of an old debater. Dr. Morron was a new man in the community, and after introducing himself by way of admonition to his Baptist friends, not to fear a free and open discussion upon the teachings of the Bible, but rather court it—especially, when such isms as Spiritualism and Adventism were springing up around them—went at the question with that confidence, that to his hearers it seemed he would soon annihilate his opponent. Each maintained their positions well on the first and second evenings. The Dr. claimed that the words spirit, soul and life, nephesh, ruach and psuche, as rendered in the Hebrew and Greek, must be taken in connection with words and sentences preceding and succeeding in those ancient languages, in order to arrive at a correct understanding of the intentions of the writers and translators. Elder Durfee, upon the other hand, showed that the words soul and life did not have that direful import as claimed by his friend Morron, but were made to read soul, life, breath, etc., by the translators, in order to avoid repetition. The third night Elder Durfee had the inside track, and it was admitted by those opposed to him in sentiment, that he bettered the Dr. on argument on that evening.

Eld. Durfee challenged the Dr. to show him one passage in the Bible where it said immortal soul; the Dr. replied by challenging Eld. Durfee to prove the existence of a God by the Bible. The contest waxed warmer as the debate progressed. The Dr. claimed, if he brought proofs to sustain the negative, he gained the question. He alluded to the texts of Christ preaching to the spirits in prison; also the transfiguration of Christ, and said he was willing to rest the whole argument on those two passages alone, to prove the immortality of the soul. Elder Durfee replied and explained the text of Christ preaching to the spirits in prison, etc., in a clear and satisfactory manner to our minds; also of the transfiguration. He spoke of Daniel's vision, and John's on the isle of Patmos, and then referred to Matt. 17: 9, and said he would leave it with Christ and the Dr.

So the contest continued through the six nights of the discussion. Greek met Greek.

Eld. Durfee held himself close to the question, quoting largely from the Bible to sustain his position; and at times, turning to the obstacles thrown in his path by the Dr., would with Herculean strength of mind toss them aside as a child does his toys. The Dr. at the same time quoted much from the Scriptures, but would wander off and draw conclusions from reasoning outside of the Bible; citing Socrates, Pythagoras, Damon, and others, as authorities to prove the existence of an entity that leaves the body at death, conscious of pain or happiness; which we believe was foreign to the question as stated, for the proofs must come from the Scriptures.

The general opinion among those who have no sympathy with either class is, that Eld. Durfee maintained the position he assumed; whereas Dr. Morron failed to overthrow Eld. Durfee's arguments, and did not prove from the sacred oracles that the soul was a separate entity from man, susceptible of pain or pleasure. Rev. James Dockry introduced a series of resolutions at the close, stating that the debate had been conducted with frankness and candor by both parties, and that each had maintained his position well. The contestants, after thanking their hearers, advanced to the centre of the platform, and indulged in a hearty shake of hands, applauded by the audience, and we trust parted in good friendship. Eld. Durfee is cool and calm as a debater, sound in his reasonings, and logical in argument. Dr. Morron is little more fiery at times; a man of great intellectual powers and retentive memory; a fluent speaker, quick to see a point and turn it to his advantage with powerful reasoning faculties.

THE RETURN OF SPRING.

We hail thee, lovely Spring,
We hail thy genial rays,
We look for thee to bring
More bright and sunny days.

We hail again the sound
The feathered songsters bear,
We hail the music of those notes
They warble through the air.

We watch to see the daises
Spring from their mother earth,
And all the plants of nature
We welcome into birth.

Yet when our eyes behold them
So beautiful and gay,
We feel a thrill of sadness;
To think how short their stay.

Alas! we know 'tis certain,
And oft it brings a sigh,
The loveliest of all earth's charms
Must shortly fade and die.

We hail that blessed era
The prophets had in view;
We hail the Nobleman's return
To make this old earth new.

The tokens of his coming
The watchmen plainly see;
We hail the resurrection morn,
Hail! immortality.

EXEMPLARY.

It is a fact worthy of note, that the imperative duties devolving upon the ambassadors of truth in these last days should be performed with great alacrity, and a zeal truly commendable. In this Paul, the inspired, is exemplary, and his writings abundantly prove our averment. "For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God," is the statement made in Acts 20: 27. Now if this inspired apostle preached the whole gospel as essential to salvation, truly non-essentials are not implied; although some of our modern theologians assert to the contrary. As God has now commanded all men everywhere to repent, and as it is our chief desire to have them comply, we should with christian fidelity and all meekness produce Paul's reason: "Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." It is true, there are some in this age of the world who, like those in the days of Paul, "mocked, when they heard of the resurrection of the dead"; but for the sake of those who will hear us again of this matter, it behooves the messengers of truth to faithfully herald the gospel of the kingdom, and thus follow Paul, who was verily an exemplary servant of Christ. DON'T BE PASSIVE.

The last dominant power of the old Roman empire demands reverence. The last proclamation to the church is the third angel's message: "If any man worship the beast or his image," etc., and yet Bro. Colegrove feels the need of apologizing in giving vent to this flame of light, which is like fire shut up in his bones, lest some sensitive ones should get out of the traces. My brethren, nothing could better please our enemy than to keep us in a passive condition on those truths that would unmask his real designs. There is a present as well as a past and future, and our days are wonderfully prophetical. Let our surroundings be carefully studied, morally, religiously, and politically, and we shall see the fulfillment of prophecy recorded in every publication of passing events, and nothing more prominent than the eighth headship, bearing the harlot woman to the judgment. My dear Bro. Colegrove, we believe you are at the fire box; touch the magnetic, or prophetic wires, and let the true locality of danger be announced. It is said that the electrical phenomena of the 15th inst. caused the fire bells to ring, greatly to the annoyance of firemen. It designated no particular ward. Let it not be so with us. My Bro., tell "the beast," tell "the number of his name"; ring out the true wisdom of God, and let the brethren say, Amen. H. PRATT.

COMMON POLITENESS.

It is not polite for an organist, who desires to display his skill, to keep the congregation waiting from ten to fifteen minutes, by playing on the instrument, before the minister can begin his services.

It is not polite for a person who has a good voice for singing to be too forward in making a display of his or her powers.

It is not polite, when in company, to slight the illiterate or the poor. They should be made to feel, for the time being at least, that they are not inferior to any present.

It is not polite to call at a dwelling, and request to see the lady of the house, and, in disobedience of her request, display your books, your jewelry, or your wares, and urge her to purchase.

It is not polite when a stranger preaches, for half the congregation to absent themselves from church.

It is not polite for a minister to "play fantastic tricks" in the pulpit and preach himself, "when sent with God's commission to the heart."

It is not polite when called upon to pray in public, to touch upon some particular objects, for the sake of giving a thrust at some neighbor present.

It is not polite to pass by a neighbor in trouble, when you can render him assistance.

It is not polite to disturb your neighbors who have retired for the night, by making any noise whatever. Loud singing and thumping on a piano should be avoided, when the hour for rest and sleep has arrived.

It is not polite to allude to the misconduct of a person in the presence of his child or his relative.

It is not polite, in visiting neighbors, to carry your children with you, when they would be likely to annoy and trouble others.

It is not polite to answer angrily or unkindly one who may have asked, unintentionally or thoughtlessly, an improper question.

It is not polite to scold on any occasion; more especially when an accident occurs.

It is not polite, when you borrow good money, to return the amount in uncurrent bills or ragged currency.

It is not polite to put a person to unnecessary trouble who is ready to deny himself for your accommodation.

It is not polite to interfere when two are conversing, no matter if you think either to be in an error.

It is not polite to throw water or rubbish from a window, beneath which people are constantly passing.

NIGHT WHISPERS.

How precious, under all circumstances, is the word of the Lord to the believing, trusting heart. At one time it comes in the stillness of night and whispers to the listening ear, "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." At another, when the heart is bitterly oppressed, and knows not what course to pursue, it comes so soothingly with these words—"Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." How instantaneous the relief this cordial gives! The path of duty is now so plain; shut up to acts of kindness only, leaving all avengement to Him who will do justice to all concerned.

How easy now to pray for our enemies, to turn to them the other cheek; to give the cloak also, and go the second mile. We forget the sin and love the sinner, whether he be a worldling or a misguided brother or sister in Christ. How this proves the religion of Jesus to be from heaven and not of men. It helps us trace all evil to its one source—the father of lies, and to know that the erring one is deceived by his delusions, and therefore knows not what he does; and, like Jesus, we can say, "Father, forgive them."

THE SPIRIT OF LOVE.

"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not."

"Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love."

Reader, do you know the power and the beauty of the language above quoted? Do you understand and feel in your heart the love that is a witness and proof of your acceptance with God, and a sure passport to immortality, and the untold bliss of saints in glory? Do you know that Jesus loves you? And do you love him because he first loved you? You have no reason to doubt his love.

Such proof of love as he has given is beyond comparison greater than any your best friends can ever show. Even the love of a mother cannot be compared to the love of Christ toward you.

"Can a mother's tender care
Cease toward the child she bare?
Yes, she may forgetful be,
Yet will I remember thee."

Let us apply to ourselves the question asked of Simon, the son of Jonas, "Lovest thou me?" Think for a moment of what he has done for you. Though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor. Though he was the rightful heir of all things, yet for your sake he became so poor that "he had not where to lay his head." More than this, he was bruised for your iniquities, and the chastisement of your peace was laid upon him.

"I am thy Redeemer; for thee I must die;
The cup is most painful, but cannot pass by;
Thy sins like a mountain are laid upon me,
And all this deep anguish I suffer for thee!"
"'Tis done! the dreadful debt is paid,
The great atonement now is made;
Sinner, on him your guilt was laid—
For you he spilt his blood.
'For you his tender soul did move;
For you he left the courts above,
That you the length and breadth might prove,
And height and depth of perfect love,
In Christ, your loving Lord."

Reader, if you have a good hope of salvation, all this language finds a response in your heart. If you have not this hope, let me assure you there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby you must be saved. "The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance."

Every good thing you ever possessed, or can ever hope or desire to possess, comes from him. He says to you, "Son, give me thy heart." Awake from this state of indifference, "repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." Have you wandered away from the path of peace, after having found him precious to your soul? Still he says, "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely; for mine anger is turned away from him."

A SINGULAR TRACT.

The following is one of a series of penny tracts, published in England. It is entitled, "What I was, and what I am":—

"Dear reader, I once resided with 2 Tim. 3: 4, and walked in Eph. 2: 2, and my continual conversation at that time is recorded in Eph. 2: 3. I heard one day that an inheritance had been purchased for me, and a description of it reached me. You find it at 1 Pet. 1: 4. One who resides in Heb. 4: 14 has purchased and paid an extraordinary price for it; but to tell the truth, I did not believe this report, as I was entirely unacquainted with the man, and long experience had convinced me that strangers never give favors through love alone, and friends seldom give any favors that cost much. However, my prospects at Eph. 2: 12 were as bad as they could be; so I called at 2 Tim. 3: 16.

I found the house I sought for at 2 Cor. 5: 1, and the invitations to it, which you will see put up at Isa. 55: 1, 2, and by John 7: 37, are wonderfully inviting to the poor and needy. The house has only one door, and it was sometime before I saw the door at John 10: 9.

My permanent address will now be 2 Cor. 5: 1; but if you call any day at Heb. 4: 16, you will meet me, and many others, who are daily in the habit of meeting there. If you call, attend to what the servant says at Luke 14: 22, 23; and you may depend upon what that servant says."

THE FIRST LIE.

Can any little child tell me where and by whom the first lie was spoken in this world? One says, "Cain told it." One says, "Gehazi." No; there was a sad falsehood spoken before either of those told by Cain or Gehazi. It was the worst lie ever spoken, and it did more harm than any other.

It was spoken in the garden of Eden. Did Adam speak it? No. Did Eve? No. Who did? The serpent. Can serpents talk? No. This serpent spoke because he was made to do so by Satan. Who is Satan? He is a wicked spirit. He was once an angel in heaven; but he disobeyed God, and he was cast out of that blessed world with many more angels who did wrong as he did. He does not love God. He does not love any holy or good being. He never does any thing good. He is pleased with wicked and evil persons and all wrong things. He likes to see little children and men and women do wrong. He is glad when you disobey your parents and are angry. He is glad when you speak lies and use bad language. He wants you to be like himself. He wants to keep you out of heaven. He is sorry when you are obedient and truthful, and when he sees loving thoughts in your heart toward God, your heavenly Father, and Jesus Christ, your Savior. He wishes you would never pray, and never read the Bible, and never go to God's house. He does not like the beautiful hymns you learn, nor to hear you sing them with praise in your heart. He would be pleased if there were no Sabbath school, and no church, and no preaching, and no Sabbath day.

You will remember all the story. He took the form of a serpent; and, I suppose, the serpents then were more beautiful than they are now. He spoke in a pleasant voice to Eve when she was standing looking upon the forbidden tree. He asked her about it. She told him that God had bidden them not to taste the fruit, and had said that they should die if they ate it. Then Satan told the first lie. He told her she would not die, and that God knew that by eating that fruit she would become wise, and know good and evil. She knew a great deal of good now. What a pity that she should learn any thing evil! But Satan persuaded her that it was very desirable to know both good and evil, and very excellent to be wise. He spoke that falsehood, and Eve believed him.

Dear children, remember that when you speak what is not true you are like Satan. Jesus, when he was in this world, called him the devil, and said he was the father of lies. He puts wicked thoughts into your hearts. He is glad when you do not speak the truth. How can you be sure to resist his temptations? By praying to the Lord Jesus to keep you from his power. Pray every day that Satan may not be allowed to persuade you to sin in any way, and especially to tell lies; and when you feel inclined to hide any thing from your father or mother or teacher, pray in your heart that you may be able to speak the whole truth bravely. A beautiful hymn says,

"Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees."

A WORD TO "LITTLE ME."

BY HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Newburyport, Feb. 8th, 1869.

Rev. and Dear Sir:—Will you please give the readers of your sermons, published in the Boston Traveller, your views of "tale-bearing." My attention has been directed to this subject by hearing a church-member speak freely of the private affairs of a family where she had been for a time an inmate, exposing not only their familiar conversations, jests and remarks, but matters sacred to the family, and things that are embittering people against this family. I observe that all, even the oldest and best, listen eagerly to this tale-bearing remark upon the things told of, and repeat them to others again and again. I have often asked myself, what is right regarding these things, but get no satisfactory answer; for I am not very old in experience, so I take the liberty to ask you, if you will be so very kind and obliging as to answer, through a sermon; and perhaps, you will do good to others besides your humble friend, little me.

A SCHOOL-GIRL.

Our young friend asks a sermon. The subject is worthy of ten sermons; but we can give only an article.

The disposition to pry into the privacy of domestic life is, unfortunately, very common, and is always dishonorable. The appetite for such knowledge is to be regarded as morbid, and the indulgence of it disgraceful.

A family have a sacred right to privacy. In guarding the delicate relations of the household, secrecy becomes a virtue. Even if by chance the private affairs of a household are laid open to a stranger, honor would require him to turn from them, and if a knowledge of them were forced upon him, they should be locked in a sacred silence.

A double obligation of silence and secrecy rests upon one who is a guest in a family. The turpitude of a betrayal of family history by a visitor, is far greater than theft would be. To pocket half a dozen silver spoons would do far less damage, produce far less suffering, and be less immoral, than tale-bearing. It is a thing so scandalous that it should degrade a person, and put him out of society. To betray the secrets of the household is not only an odious immorality, but it is a sin and a shame to be on good terms with those who are known to commit such outrages. They are miscreants. They put themselves out of the pale of decent society. They should be treated as moral outlaws.

These hungry-eyed wretches who sit in the unsuspicious circle of parents and children, treasuring their words, spying their weaknesses, misinterpreting the innocent liberties of the household, and then run from house to house with their shameless news, are worse than poisoners of wells or burners of houses. They poison the faith of man in man. If one opens his mouth to tell you such things, with all your might smite him in the face! There are two actions which justify you in instantly knocking a man down; the one is the act of pointing a gun at you in sport, and the other is the attempt to tell you a secret which it is disgraceful for him to get, and for you to hear. Make no terms with such people. Tale-bearers have no rights. They are common enemies of good men. Hunt, harry, and hound them out of society. They are the worst pests save one, and that is the listener to the tale-bearer!

There could be no tattling if there were no one to hear. It takes an ear and a tongue to make a scandal. Greedy listening is as dishonorable as nimble tattling. The ear is the open market where the tongue sells its ill-gotten wares. Some there are that will not repeat again what they hear, but they are willing to listen to it! They will not trade in contraband goods, but they will buy enough of the smuggler for family use!

These respectable listeners are the patrons of tattlers It is the ready market that keeps tale-bearing brisk. It is a shame to listen to ill of your neighbor. Christian benevolence demands that you do not love ill news. A clean heart and a true honor rejoice in kindly things. It should be a pain and sorrow to know of anything that degrades your neighbor in your eyes, even if he is your enemy; and how much more if he is your friend?

"Little Me" shows by her letter that she has a good and honorable heart. Let her persuade others to her way of thinking. And as a help to the good work, we will give her some wholesome texts from the sacred Scriptures to make sermons out of.

"Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy people."

"A tale-bearer revealeth secrets; but he that is of a faithful [honorable] spirit, concealeth the matter."

"The words of the talebearer are as wounds that go down into the innermost parts of the belly."

The Hebrews thought that the affections had their seat in the entrails and bowels, and by this phrase, "go down into the innermost parts of the belly," they signify how sharp and exasperating to the deepest feelings of our nature, are the cruel offices of a common tattler.

"Where no wood is, the fire goeth out; so where there is no talebearing the strife ceaseth."

As if he had said that so much of the strife of society arises from tattling, that if that were cured there would hardly be any cause of quarrel left.

Commend me to that religion which makes a man humane with his tongue, and honorable with his ear.

Perhaps the Boston Traveller will copy this article, and then "Little Me" will see how heartily we have entered into her case.

ACT IN THE PRESENT.

Hearts gazing mournfully back through past years,
Bringing sad memories laden with tears;
Life's hours wasted, talents abused,
Bright opportunities blindly refused.
Close up the record fraught with such pain,
Years that have vanished return not again.
Grasp then the present, be earnest and bold,
Fleeting its moments more precious than gold;
Watch and fight bravely against sloth and sin,
Pray for the Spirit, the victory to win.
Cometh the future veiled and slow?
Go forth to meet her, for weal or for woe.
Bringeth she gladness?—praise thou the Lord;
Bringeth she sadness?—bow to his word.
O'er Past and o'er Future dim shadows recline,
Heart, be thou mindful, the Present is thine.

UNIVERSAL RESTORATION---ITS RISE IN ORIGEN.

Origin had exceeded the views of the earlier fathers on the nature of the human soul. He had equalled, if indeed he had not exceeded, the view of Socrates and Plato. Jerome's charge against the school of Origen, that he and his followers held the souls of men and the angelic natures to be a part of the divine substance and nature of God himself, and therefore endowed with all its attributes, seems borne out by the writings of Origen. He certainly held the most exalted notions of the dignity and nature of the soul. It had with him an existence long anterior to that of the body, if it was not indeed a creation from eternity; it was wholly incapable of death or dissolution; it possessed an immortality of which nothing could deprive it. Here was Origen's axiom, an indisputable first truth with him. It was in connection with this that he held the scriptural truth to which his opponents had shut their eyes—the abolition of evil; it was with this, as a main feature of his system, that he looked on hopefully to the times of which the Scriptures are full, when all things should again be very good.

How were they to be brought about? Not by the casting away of the barren branches, leaving only fruitful branches on the tree.* Not by the disappearance out of the realms of life of the wicked, leaving in the land of life only lovers of God and of Christ. Not by the destruction of a single unit from the multitudinous creation which occupied in God's world a rank higher than the brutes. This could not be with Origen. With him, if it was not "Life from eternity to eternity," it was at least "Once living always to live." Death might come and close the eye of the bright-plumaged bird; death might come and still the roar of the young lion that shook the earth; death might lay its unresisted hand upon that leviathan, so fierce that none "dare stir him up;" death might even for a space paralyze the strength of man's body, and corrupt the beauty of his countenance, and mingle dust with dust; but to the divine soul of man death and destruction could not come. It was stronger than death; mightier than destruction; pain could not weaken it; fire consume it; it was indestructible. How, then, could the glorious picture of prophecy prove more than a fond conceit? Only by converting hell into a universal purgatory, where evil was destroyed and the evil doer purged—where sin was blotted out, while the sinner was preserved.

But Origen, while he only became acquainted with the Hebrew language in his old age, was a Greek scholar from his youth. He had the advantage, which Augustine had not, of being thoroughly acquainted with the language in which the gospel was inscribed. He knew the meaning of its terms, and among the terms which described the future punishment of sinners, who in this life rejected Christ, were all the terms of the Greek language which describe the utter destruction of organization, the utter loss of life, and being, and existence. What was to be done with these?

Were they to be explained away? This is what the holders of Augustine's theory have done. They put an insufficient, an unnatural, or a positively false meaning on the terms of the New Testament. With them death means life, and life means happiness, and destruction means preservation, and so on. Having put these convenient meanings on the phraseology of Scripture, they can look placidly upon a thousand passages, which contradict what they teach from platform, and pulpit, and press, and instil into children's minds almost with their mother's milk. Origen could not, or would not, do this. He gives, as any Greek scholar not possessed with the spirit of Augustine would do, their proper force to the terms of the New Testament—the same meaning which Plato, or Euripides, or Demosthenes, or Cicero, would attach to them.

We will give an example of this. Every one is familiar with the solemn warning of our Lord, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him, who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." We remark in the English version the change from "kill," in the first clause, to "destroy," in the second, a change exactly answering to the Greek original, which uses apokteino in the first clause, and apollumi in the second. The maintainers of Augustine's theory attempt to take advantage of a change, which is in reality only a heavier blow to their system. They explain "destroy" as a term of inferior force to "kill." Listen to Bengel, from whom better things might be expected. He tells us that the word "destroy," and not "kill," is used when the soul is spoken of because "the soul is immortal;" "cannot die."* Now any one who came unprejudiced to this passage of our Lord, would acknowledge that every law of right reason would lead us to conclude that the force of the term in the second clause must, at the least equal that in the first, else the warning is diminished in its intensity. The real reason why our Lord varied his phrase, was because "destroy" in the Greek was a term of far greater power than "kill." Let us hear the Greek scholar Origen on the true force of this word destroy. He is commenting on 1 Cor. 3: 9., in connection with Jeremiah 1: 10; "See what is said to the people of God: 'Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building;' therefore the words of God over nations and kingdoms are, 'to root out, and to throw down, and to destroy' (apollumi.) If it be rooted out, and that which is rooted out be not destroyed; if it be thrown down, while the stones of the overthrown are not destroyed; that which is thrown down still exists. It is therefore the result of God's goodness, after the rooting out, to destroy what is rooted out, after the throwing down, to destroy what is thrown down." Such is the mighty power which Origen, a Greek scholar, gives to this word "destroy." With him it means blotting out of existence.

But it will be asked, if such be the true force of the words applied in Scripture to future punishment, how did Origen defend his theory of universal restoration, with these meeting him in the face? Very easily. Origen never found any difficulty in Scripture. If it was for him, well and good. If it was against him, he made it without any ceremony speak as he wished.

Every reader of Scripture knows that its solemn warnings are addressed to the sinner in person: "O wicked man, thou shalt surely die." Death, destruction, perdition, loss of life—all the multiplied phrases and illustrations of the Bible are there directed against the persons of the wicked. Origen's simple mode of neutralizing their force is by directing them against their sin. And so his point is gained. Their force cannot be too strong for him, so he does not attempt to diminish it. The Augustinian, directing them correctly against the sinner, robs them of their meaning. Origen, directing them against the sin, leaves them their proper sense. It is difficult to say against which side the charge of perverting Scripture lies heaviest.

We meet with Origen's free and easy mode of treating Scripture everywhere throughout his writings. The object of the fire of hell with him is thoroughly to root out and destroy wickedness of every kind. Iniquity, and evil thoughts, and false dogmas, and the scandals which offend, are the fuel for the unquenchable fire of hell. On these it preys with its relentless force. Till these are thoroughly extinct, completely eradicated, blotted out of all being, the fire of hell burns on. But this process, which is destructive of evil, is a purgation to the evil doer. While the sin which has hindered his entrance into his Father's kingdom at an earlier period is being diminished to its extinction, the sinner is growing into the likeness of God which has been defaced. His evil is being taken away from him. The process complete—they who had suffered and been purged in hell take a place, a lower one it is true, but still a place in glory.

Origen's view required the admission of two things in order to establish it. Neither of these two things will the genuine reverer and follower of Scripture allow to him. He required first, as the very foundation of his system, that the Platonic dogma of the essential immortality of all souls should be admitted. He found no difficulty on this point in his age. He was condemned indeed for carrying his view of the nature of the soul too far, for making it in fact identical with the substance of Deity, but his theory of the immortality of all souls passed almost undisputed in his day. Platonism had overshadowed the church. We now ask for a better proof of the immortality of all souls than heathen philosophers give us. Finding Scripture not merely silent, but putting its decided negative on Plato's theory, we reject it as a tradition of men. We think that Platonism had its element of truth. It was the longing of the heart for what man once had and lost through sin. We know that Platonism finds its glorious response in Christianity—in that gospel of Christ which brings, as its inestimable gift, eternal life to those who believe in the Son of God. But the system of philosophy which controverted the school of Plato, had also its element of truth. While our sympathies are with Plato in the mighty argument of life and death, we must needs admit that Lucretius reasoned more truly than the greater sage of Athens. If human reason and speculation alone were to decide the question, reason would decide in favor of Epicurus and Lucretius. The longings and aspirations of the soul would, indeed, always enlist some on the side of its immortality; but it would not be on reason they could rest, but on some undefined indistinct shadowy yet dearly-cherished hope, coming, they could not tell whence, shining, they could not be certain whether with true or fatuous light, but which they would and must follow, for everywhere else there were only the shadows of death. To this unbroken darkness the philosophy of Lucretius led. It had its miserable element of reality. It spoke with truth of an eternal death for such as Lucretius was, souls that would not seek the life.

The other requirement of Origen was liberty to alter the application of Scripture to suit his views. Neither can we admit this; while against the followers of Augustine we bring the heavy, sore, awful charge of altering the meaning of the plainest language of Scripture, in order to keep alive those for whom God has reserved death; against Origen we must bring the equally grave charge of so dealing with Scripture as to make it absolutely worthless as an authoritative teacher of truth. What it says of the sinner we have no right to apply merely to his sin. If hell has within its terrible womb the elements of utter death and destruction, it is for the wicked that they are there. It is they themselves who die, and perish, and come to a fearful end.—The Rainbow. (To be concluded.)

WILL THIS VERY SAME BODY LIVE AGAIN?

Jesus says, "I am the resurrection, and the life."—John 11: 25. It seems very strange to me, in this enlightened age of the world's history, when many are running to and fro, and knowledge is being increased on every side, that men of strong reasoning powers will come out boldly and say that there is no resurrection of the very identical body that has been laid away in the tomb. Said Jesus, "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."—John 5: 28. "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection."—Matt. 27: 52, 53. "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves."—Ezek. 37: 12, 13. In the face of all this testimony, there are those that deny that the body will come up, to see and be seen. It seems very strange to me, that men who claim to be preaching the everlasting gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to a dying world, should deny the resurrection of the dead. The dead are to "hear his voice" and "come forth" from their dusty beds. "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust." Thank God for the promise.

What a joyful hour that will be, when we shall meet to part no more in that bright world to come. Hallelujah to the Lamb. Some would destroy our hope of seeing our fathers and mothers, and all the loved of earth, by bringing in very strange delusions. I cannot see the difference between those that deny the resurrection of the body entirely, and those who claim that God will make another, and give it the appearance of the old one; then, of course, it is not the old one that we followed to yonder grave-yard, but one that looks like it in every way; then it is not my mother who has gone back to dust again, who, if this theology be correct, will never see light; but on the contrary, if I am alive when Jesus comes to judge the world, he will make or create another body for mother, or father, or perhaps my beloved child, and call it by the same name, and make it talk just like them, and sing the same songs, and in that way deceive me. I do not think that God is the biggest hypocrite and deceiver there ever was in the world. But if this doctrine be true, then he is more of a deceiver than the devil ever was; for God says by the mouth of Isaiah the prophet (Isa. 26: 19), "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise." Does it not look very plain, that the resurrection of the very identical body that went into the grave, is what is meant, and not one like it? Please turn and read Jer. 31: 15–17, and see if a resurrection is not taught in these verses. Praise God, "they [the children] shall come again from the land of the enemy," and we shall see them. No more Rachels then weeping for their children, and refusing to be comforted. Glory to God and the Lamb for ever, our children will be in the kingdom. Then we can sing, We will weep no more.

This new-fangled doctrine compares the resurrection of the dead to the wheel of a wagon, to illustrate the point. The wheel gets burnt up, and some one, in the absence of the owner, gets a new one made, just like the old one in every way, and puts it on the wagon, and the owner comes and finds his wagon all right, with another wheel in the place of the one that was burnt up; and the owner makes the inquiry, Who has done this? and one that stands by says, Sir, that is your old wheel; but the owner says that it can not be, for it was burnt up. He makes his claim so good, that the one that stands by says, Sir, I made that wheel, and, sir, it is the same wheel, with this exception; it is not the same wood, iron and paint; but, sir, it is wood of the same kind,—oak, perhaps; the same kind of iron and paint; but still, sir, it is not the same, because, as you say, the old one was burnt up; but, sir, it has the same identity as the other, and will do the same work. Is not this limiting the power of God to that of a wagon maker? If that is the God of the Bible, then I had better cease to love him with all my heart, and worship myself, as I can do as well as that myself; and yet we read that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to die that we might live.

I believe in a God who has power to raise the dead, and then give them life. Bear in mind, the raising of the dead is one thing, and the life is another; but Jesus says that he is both; and though you should dissolve my body with certain acids, and then cast it into the sea, and it should remain there six thousand years, I believe our God is the greatest chemist in the world, and he will bring back every particle of matter that constitutes me what I am when dissolved; and he will do it with great ease. Our chemists can bring back different kinds of substances which they have dissolved, and separate them from the gases or acids which have eaten them up.

O Lord, increase our faith in thy power. Hear what David says, Ps. 139: 14–16: "I will praise thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made; marvelous are thy works, and that my soul knoweth right well. My substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being imperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them." Also read Matt. 10: 30;—"But the very hairs of your heads are all numbered." Shall we then say, Not the same body? Read again. 1 Cor. 15: 12–20, "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is not Christ risen; and if Christ be not risen, . . . your faith is also vain; . . . ye are yet in your sins." "Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified" that the dead shall be raised. "Be not deceived," but "awake to righteousness, and sin not." "But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? . . . . Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." Is there any thing in the material of the body which is not subject to death? If so, then can the body quicken itself? or is the power through which we obtain a resurrection out from around the dead, wholly in the hands of Him who has conquered death, and promised by virtue of his power a resurrection of the dead, in harmony with the prophet, where he says, "Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise"? If the identical body does not come up, but one made of the same material, then there is no resurrection of the dead.

If our own identical body does not come up, pray tell me what it is that is to be rewarded for the deeds done in the body, if the body is not there, to be rewarded for itself? We find in 1 Cor. 15: 42, that it is the same "it" that is sown that is raised. The "it" stands for the body. "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. . . . It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." It is the same body, having a spiritual birth, or being born of the Spirit. Well may we say, O what a glorious hope is ours, when it is founded on the pure word of God. "Thy word is truth."

Dear saint of God, if you have got this hope in you, may it purify and make you just right in the sight of God, and may it be to you like fire shut up in your bones, making you to rejoice in the signs of the times, and to be kind and tender-hearted, suffering long, bearing each other's burdens, with Christ-like meekness; and under all circumstances suffering wrong rather than doing wrong; always reflecting the true light of the Bible; praying. "Thy kingdom come," and looking for the sign of the Son of man in the heavens; for "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory," and not till then. God grant that both reader and writer may be accounted worthy to obtain a crown of life in the kingdom of God's dear Son; and if you do not love this Jesus, who has died for you and me, then do learn to love him. Come to Jesus; yes, come to Jesus, and he will give you life. Do come to this Jesus, and you will find rest for your soul. Accept of offered mercy. Flee to Jesus, and he will save you from the wreck of earth in the day of God's wrath, when he shall arise and shake terribly the earth, and the works that are therein shall be burned up. My God, save us, is my prayer. From one that loves all whom Jesus loved.

MORTAL OR IMMORTAL?

The following sensible remarks are from Zion's Herald, (Methodist.) The article is from the pen of S. R. Bayley, New York.—Ed.

Is man physically mortal or immortal by nature? Mortal, it is certain. This is, without question, the natural condition of all material organisms. Springing from their germs, they advance to maturity, and becoming old and losing vigor, they are not able to withstand the powerful action of the forces of nature which are ever working within and around them. They, therefore, of necessity "die and return to the dust," whence they have derived their origin. This was the case in both the vegetable and animal world before the existence of man. . . .

Thus, before the creation of the human race, countless myriads of both vegetable and animal organisms perished. Then came man, possessing also a material organization, which, in common with all such organizations, was naturally mortal, as we see by the unnumbered millions of such organizations which had already perished by decay.

But in the case of man, a direct interposition of Divine power prevented the operation of this natural tendency to mortality. The "tree of life" was placed within his reach, which, by some peculiar property of which we cannot now comprehend the nature, preserved him from death, while he was permitted to partake of its fruit. Whether holy or sinful, he could not die while he had access to that tree. Therefore, so soon as God decreed that man must die, he was driven from the garden and thus deprived of the fruit of that tree which would otherwise have preserved him from death, and rendered him immortal in a sinful state. There was then nothing to prevent that mortality from occurring to which all material organization tends. To "die and return to the dust" was the inevitable consequence.

This is the simple and plain account of Scripture, taken in connection with the no less plain record of the rocks upon which God has written, in entire accordance with the Bible account, the history of the progress of creation and of death. Coming to nature and Revelation in the docile spirit of "little children," as true wisdom instructs us to do, with no disposition to mystify the plain teaching of the record, there seems no mystery save the universal one which, as a veil, hangs over the mode of existence and operation in both the material and spiritual world, and no less in one than in the other.

For the World's Crisis.

COME QUICKLY!

Hasten on, hasten on, gray old Time, roll away;
Let thy chariot wheels hasten to bring the glad day,
When from sin, and from sorrow, and death we'll be free,
In the year of release, in the world's jubilee.

When death will be vanquished its king will be slain,
Never more, never more o'er the earth shall he reign.
Jesus, come, Jesus, come, come quickly, dear Lord,
For our enemies mock, yet we trust in thy word.

And the signs thou hast given to cheer thine own band,
Are almost fulfilled, and the day is at hand.
In that day, in that day, thine own people will sing,
Lo, this is our Lord, we have waited for him.

He has come now to save us, and we will be glad,
Rejoice in salvation, and praise our dear Lord;
To Him who redeemed us, to the Lamb that was slain,
Be the praise and the power, Hallelujah! Amen.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT.

God's anger is fierce and endures long.—"And the Lord's anger was kindled against Israel, and he made them wander in the wilderness forty years until all the generation that had done evil in the sight of the Lord was consumed."—Num. 32: 13. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Take all the heads of the people and hang them up before the Lord against the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Israel."—Num. 25: 4. "For I have kindled a fire in mine anger which shall burn forever."—Jer. 17: 4.

God's anger is slow and endures but for a moment.—"The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger and plenteous in mercy."—Psa. 193: 8. "His anger endureth but a moment."—Psa. 30: 5.

Num. 32: 13, is cited to convey the idea that the Lord's anger against Israel lasted for forty years. But the words of the text only imply that they were made to wander in the wilderness forty years, because of their sins against Jehovah. It marks the duration of the punishment rather than God's anger. He was angry with their sins, and pronounced upon their guilty heads the decree of punishment, but no rational man would therefore conclude that God's anger lasted until his decree was fulfilled. Num. 25: 4, simply speaks of the "fierce anger" of Jehovah, without reference to its duration. There is certainly no inconsistency here. God is "slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy," but when his wrath is kindled by man's rebellion, it may be "fierce," though it "endureth but a moment." Jer. 17: 4, is a mis-quotation. The Bible reads, "For ye have kindled a fire in my anger which shall burn forever."—Even our infidel compiler must admit that this correction makes a "material" change in the idea. He must either be very careless or very dishonest, who conveys the idea that it it was God who kindled the fire. Our correction removes all obscurity from the text, for no grammarian can for a moment suppose that it is God's anger which is to burn forever, when the word so plainly states that it is the fire which Judah had kindled.

17. God commands, approves of, and delights in, burnt offerings, sacrifices and holy days.—"Thou shalt offer every day a bullock for a sin offering for atonement."—Ex. 29: 36. "On the tenth day of this seventh month, there shall be a day of atonement; it shall be a holy convocation unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls and offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord."—Lev. 23: 27. "And thou shalt burn the whole ram upon the altar; it is a sweet savor; . . . . . an offering made by fire unto the Lord."—Ex. 29: 18. "And the priest shall burn it all on the altar to be a burnt sacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savor unto the Lord."—Lev. 1: 9.

God disapproves of, and has no pleasure in them.—"For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt offerings or sacrifices."—Jer. 7: 22. "Your burnt offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto me." Jer. 6: 20. "Will I eat of the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats? Offer unto God thanksgiving, and pay thy vows unto the Most High."—Psa. 50: 13, 14. Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and Sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting. . . . . To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me, saith the Lord? I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts, and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he-goats. When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand?"—Isa. 1: 11, 12, 13.

Under the dispensation of the law, God commanded and approved of sacrifices and burnt offerings, but there was a time when the Jews depended alone upon burnt offerings to find favor with God, while they neglected and even despised his other requirements. Hence in Jer. 7: 22, we find a strong idiom of the original Hebrew, which does not show that God holds burnt offerings in contempt, but that there are other things that he appreciates more highly; the true ellipsis of the text expressed in our tongue is the following: "For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them (alone) . . . . concerning burnt offerings and sacrifices." This idea is fully explained by the following verse, "But this thing commanded I them saying, Obey my voice (in all things, not merely in relation to burnt offerings) and I will be your God and ye shall be my people; and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded, that it may be well unto you." See 1 Sam. 15: 22, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

Psa. 50: 13, 14, expresses the same idea, viz:—That thanksgiving and the fulfillment of their vows was more acceptable to the Lord of hosts than even the burnt offerings of the Mosaic dispensation. Jer. 6: 20, and Isa. 1: 11, 12, 13, are fully explained by the context. It is the refusal of Jehovah to accept offerings from those who had rebelled and gone far from his commands. These are the declarations of the Most High, that sacrifices are not acceptable from those who continually work iniquity. Had the skeptic read the whole of the two chapters he has here quoted from, he could not honestly have cited these texts as contradictions of God's law.

19. God accepts human sacrifices.—"The king (David) took the two sons of Rizpah . . . . and the five sons of Michal; . . . . . . and delivered them up into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them in the hill, before the Lord. . . . . And after that God was entreated for the land."—2 Sam. 21: 8, 9, 14. "And he (God) said, Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt offering."—Gen. 22: 2. "And Jephthah vowed a vow unto the Lord, and said, If thou wilt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into my hands, then it shall be that whosoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering. So Jephthah passed over to the children of Ammon to fight against them; and the Lord delivered them into his hands. . . . . . And Jephthah came to Mizpeh unto his house and behold, his daughter came out to meet him. . . . . And he sent her away for two months; and she went with her companions and bewailed her virginity upon the mountains. And it came to pass at the end of two months that she returned unto her father, who did according to his vow which he had made." Judges 11: 30–39.

God forbids human sacrifice.—"Take heed to thyself that thou be not snared by following them [the Gentile nations;] . . . . for every abomination to the Lord which he hateth have they done unto their gods; for even their sons and their daughters have they burnt in the fire to their gods."—Deut. 12: 30, 31.

The enemy of the Bible can produce no evidence that the act of David recorded in 2 Sam. 21, (and which the context greatly mitigates,) or the rashness of Jephthah, was acceptable to God. Why does he assume that which he must know he cannot prove? That he should quote Gen. 22: 2 to sustain his position, betrays more weakness than we expected to find, even in the ranks of skepticism. Has he ever read the touching history of Abraham and Isaac—or does he supppose his readers to be ignorant of the patriarch's trial, and the glorious triumph of his faith on the sacred brow of Mount Moriah? It is a golden record of the love of that God who pitieth them that fear him "as a father pitieth his children." Truly the God of heaven "forbids human sacrifice."

STRONG DELUSION.

"Will a man rob God," and give his glory to the dead? Alas! too true. "Ye shall not surely die," was the lie which first filled our once beautiful world with sin and death. O strong delusions of Spiritualism. Lord, save the feeble lambs of thy fold. The devil and his angels know something, but "the dead know not anything."—Eccl. 9: 5. Was the sweet singer of Israel deluded when he said, Man's "breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish"? Consequently we cannot communicate with our long lost loved ones, who have no thoughts until the resurrection of the dead. The apostle Paul also gives testimony to the fact that "if Christ be not risen" "from the dead," "then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Thus the man becomes unconscious, and surely must remain so "until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began"; and if Christ be not risen, then "the restitution" can never come. Then, says the apostle, "let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." Yes, and says Dr. Watts:

"Without one cheerful beam of hope,
Or spark of glimmering day."

Job also, 14: 12, "So man lieth down, and riseth not; until the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Again, he says: "Thou changest his countenance, and sendest him away; his sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." As the above word of God is true, then Spiritualism is a fearful and fatal delusion. Yes, just as fatal now, as in the garden of Eden.

Isaiah also sees and describes them thus—8: 19,—"And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter; should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?" Shall we ask our dead friends for knowledge instead of asking our God? O horrible delusion! 20th ver.,—"To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." 21st ver.,—"And they shall pass through it, hardly bestead and hungry." "Hungry," because they are refusing the present truth and light of God's holy word. Says the prophet, "And it shall come to pass, that when they shall be hungry, they shall fret themselves, and curse their king and their God, and look upward. And they shall look unto the earth, and behold trouble and darkness, dimness of anguish; and they shall be driven to darkness." They love darkness now, and darkness will be their everlasting portion."

The Revelator also sees and describes them, Rev. 16: 13–16,—"And I saw three unclean spirits, like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon [Pagan Rome], and out of the mouth of the beast]Papal Roman Catholic church], and out of the mouth of the false prophet" (Mohammedan notions). In the bosom of the three above-named powers, this doctrine of the deathless spirit of all men was nourished and grew to manhood, and became the father of our modern Spiritualism. He calls them "unclean spirits"; and is not modern Spiritism unclean? It is so truly, if doctrines of devils are unclean. "For they are the spirits of devils working miracles." And do Spiritualists now perform miracles? They positively do. But by what means do they work miracles? by seeking unto God? No, but by seeking unto the dead, who "know not anything." And here they could do nothing, but Satan, always ready, steps in to help and deceive them, as in the garden of Eden.

Says the Revelator, "Which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." Has Spiritualism thus gone forth? It truly has; and even now, they are threatening a great revolution in the world, publishing it in the Banner of Light, saying, Away with your laws and by-laws; and are now looking to the departed spirit of David Allen as the future "Savior of down-trodden humanity." This they have published in their Banner of Light, showing to the kings of the earth and the whole world just what they in tend to do. But right at this time and state of things, the Revelator saw that our blessed Savior from heaven would speak, saying, "Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments [God's word and righteousness], lest he walk naked and they see his shame."

Now, ye waiting saints of God, let us all praise his holy name that we have been kept from these strong delusions and spiritual darkness, so that that day shall not come on us "as a thief." Yours in hope of immortality, when the Lord shall come, Henry Harris.

FORGIVENESS.

The duty of forgiveness is one that we owe to each other, as long as we are conscious of faults and failings in ourselves. If we had never done wrong we might have the privilege of remaining inexorable; but can we come "boldly to the throne of grace" with hatred in our hearts? Have we none of that forbearance to give one another that we so earnestly entreat from God?

We certainly cannot expect pardon for our sins, until we have fully and freely forgiven those who have injured us; we can then come and offer our gift and go in peace, because we have the promise if we forgive men their trespasses, our heavenly Father will for give us.

The spirit of Christ and the spirit of retaliation are antagonistic; they cannot dwell together; therefore if we have the love of God in our hearts, and his spirit to teach and guide us, we shall have no room for envy, hatred or strife. We must have the meek and quiet spirit of Jesus, or we are none of his; and if we are followers of him, we shall want to be more like him. He went about doing good; he was always ready to help the poor and needy; he had a kind and cheering word for the desponding, and in his life and death he exhibited the most beautiful example of kindness and forgiveness the world ever beheld.

And as he is our example, we should endeavor to walk in his footsteps, striving to live out the great principles of the gospel,—love toward God and our fellow men.

When we reflect on the many afflictions which abound in this life, where so much is suffered in common, and so little to be enjoyed, it is surprising that any will give room to anger or jealousy; but rather we should overlook errors in our brother, without imputing them as crimes, remembering we too are liable to err; we too have sinned, and have need of forgiveness; and while we are told to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but to reprove, with all long suffering and forbearance; as often as our brother repents and asks forgiveness, we are to forgive even until seventy times seven.

May we all exercise that "meek and quiet spirit" which characterised him whom we profess to love, and by imitating his example here, we may be accounted worthy to stand before him when he shall come.

Goffstown, N. H. Jennie E. Whipple.

THE CRASH COMING.

Bishop Coxe, of New York, has come to the aid of Dr. Cummings, of London, in support of the latter's theory touching the end of the world. A lecture of his delivered at Buffalo, on the "Connection of Science and Revealed Religion," is full of astonishing statments that may or may not be facts. We learn from it that the crust of the earth is just twenty-one miles thick; that the world's conflagration has already begun, as the internal fires are tending to its annihilation; that earthquakes have multiplied since the Christian era, and indicate a speedy collapse of our system; that, if the Lisbon earthquake had been a little more severe, the shock would have driven out that portion of its surface; and, most wonderful of all, that "on the first day of the present century a little planet was discovered by Kelper, in our system, and since then a large family of these planets have appeared, which are parts of an exploded world. Some of these fragments fell on the earth in the shape of meteors. If Kelper's planet exploded, why not ours?—Ex.

THE PROSPECT.

We think there has been no time in twenty years, when the people in the different churches, who love the Bible, have been so willing and anxious to hear about the coming of Jesus, the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked, as at the present time. The truth is, that those who really love the Lord are starving for the want of the very truths on which we are feasting; and many are so hungry, they are willing to break loose from all sectarian fetters and follow Jesus through evil as well as good report. When people love the truth more than friends and reputation, they have but little difficulty in finding and embracing it.

The prospect is now very encouraging. We have only to present the truth in love and kindness, and we shall see happy results. All harshness towards those who do not see as we do will only tend to destroy our usefulness. So long as the Lord bears with them, we should manifest a gentle spirit towards them. If he, in his holiness, can endure their unbelief, certainly, we in our low condition ought to be as forbearing. Only think how much the Lord has had to overlook in us; let us show the same spirit to others.

The truth has suffered much by the heat of its defenders; and their severe expressions against those who differed from them in doctrinal opinions. Be firm, but kind. Defend the truth; but do it in love, and we shall soon have many more to help in the good work.

DISCUSSION AT GROTON JUNCTION.

A few days since (April 21st and 26th,) we gave two discourses on Spiritualism at Groton Junction, Mass., giving evidence that the whole system is of the Devil, should be shunned by all good people, and all who wish to become christians. A gentleman by the name of Gibson Smith, who has been preaching some for the Unitarians in the place, took occasion to review our first discourse, and at the second one, he gave a challenge for discussion, which was accepted. Mr. Smith claims to be the first one who embraced Spiritualism in this country. We discussed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That philosophy and the Bible prove that man enjoys a conscious existence after the body is put off, and that he communicates to the living on earth at the present time." He had not proceeded far in the discussion before he took occasion to reject the Bible as containing reliable evidence to prove a point; but said he had "infallible evidence" outside of it to prove his position; but we failed to see it, even in the least degree. After rejecting the Bible as reliable evidence, he spent most of his time in seeking something from its pages to prove his position; but found it not. His Bible argument consisted in presenting the usual passages quoted to prove that man is an immortal being; but his witnesses all turned against him, and left him nothing but philosophy, which, when carefully examined, declared most emphatically that man is a mortal being, as taught in the Scriptures. We found a complete harmony between the Bible, philosophy, reason, facts, and common sense, all declaring that man in death is wholly unconscious; and must remain so till the resurrection of the dead, at the coming of Christ; therefore, he can make no communications "to the living on earth at the present time."

Quite a number became satisfied that we have the truth, and saw the harmony of the Scriptures in their beautiful simplicity, as never before. We are more and more satisfied that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is wholly unscriptural; and the fact can be most clearly shown that it originated among the heathen nations, and was afterwards grafted into christianity by persons this side of the apostles and apostolic fathers. We now see its ripe fruit in Spiritualism, which is only the old heathen systems revived. It is Buddhism with variations.

Mr. Smith admitted that the Bible taught the sleep of the dead; but he would not accept "the old Jewish writers" as authority. He claimed he could produce 'infallible proof' from 'philosophy;' but on examination, it was found to speak in the clearest possible manner in favor of the Bible doctrine that man is wholly mortal, and after death will be for ever unconscious, if there is no resurrection of the dead. He admitted the brain is the organ of thought, and that when it is injured so as to prevent correct thinking, "the mind cannot act till that injured instrument is repaired." This was admitting all we claimed; hence, when the brain is buried in the ground, the man can think no more till he is raised from the dead.

After listening to his remarks, we were forcibly reminded of the following caution of Paul: "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ."—Col. 2: 8.

Mr. Smith remarked that a spirit could "put his hand right through a table." We thought we should prefer friends of more tangibility than such an imaginary shadow of a being. It is strange that intelligent men and women will take up with mere mental, psycological pictures of their friends; produced in the minds of demons, and suppose that their real friends are actually present. This is one of the fruits of believing in the immortality of the soul. As Mr. Smith assumed that matter could not be organized so as to feel and think, his theory forced him to claim that all animals have an immortal soul; even cats and dogs, rats and mice, lice and bed-bugs.

BIDDEFORD.

We spent Sabbath, May 2nd, with the church in Biddeford, Me. The day was very stormy and windy; but our meetings were real seasons of refreshing. The church is alive in Christ. At half-past nine we met for a love-feast, and had a blessed season. It was a feast indeed. At noon seven were buried with Christ in baptism. Although the storm raged without, we had great peace within. The truth is spreading in that city.

A SUGGESTION.

We wish to make a suggestion to those who are laboring in southern fields, endeavoring to spread the truth among all classes. If we would benefit our fellow beings, we must first gain their confidence and sympathy, by showing them that we are their friends. When an opponent is defeated, it is not honorable to insult him with the fact. It may please a corrupt human nature, but it is not a christian spirit; and when manifested, it only serves to create or increase the hatred of the oppressed. If we would benefit the defeated, we should show them kindness, and cease to mention their misfortune, and the causes which produced the result. Common politeness, unaided by christianity, requires this of the true gentleman.

Upon the foregoing remarks we base our "suggestion," which is this: let those who write reports of their labors and travels in the South avoid saying harsh or severe things concerning the people who reside there, by reflecting upon the past, if they wish to exert the best possible influence for good, and remove partition walls that have been erected between the white and colored population, the North and the South. If we thrust at them with the feeling—"It is good enough for you," we at once destroy all our christian influence, close the doors against us, and may thus be the means of their final ruin. This is just what Satan desires.

It is noble and Christ-like to be kind to those whom we may think have done us an injury; to return good for evil; and especially to show favors to the conquered. The time has come when great good may be done in the South, if the spirit of Jesus be manifested by all who go there to publish the glad tidings. It is not to be expected, after what has taken place for the last seven or eight years, that those who go there from the North, to carry the glad tidings that Jesus is soon coming, should be received with open hearts at once; but if they manifest at all times the sweet, gentle spirit of Christ, keeping free from all political matters, knowing no North, no South, no party interests of any kind; but only Jesus crucified, and coming again, they will find open doors, open hearts, open hands, and plenty of warm friends who would make any sacrifice in their power for their comfort.

We have good reason to say that no people would appreciate kind treatment, and return it more heartily than those who reside in the South; but if those from the North manifest the domineering, overbearing, or triumphing spirit, it will only serve to make bad worse, and shut against us the hearts and doors of the very ones we wish to benefit.

A brother who has traveled extensively through the South, as a missionary, and been happily successful, writes:

"Please tell the brethren to avoid mentioning how the people of the South used the blacks. It don't do any good. Neither do the blacks like to hear about their misfortunes. They know all about it without being told. There is no trouble for me to have access to the blacks, if I first introduce the subject to the whites; that is, first relate to the whites my business, and then invite them to join in with me. They will assist me, and invite me to call again. But if I go slipping around to the black people's house first, the black people will think me an imposter, as they have been so often imposed upon by men who pretended to be their friends. Again, if we go to the colored people first, the white people give us the cold shoulder. But in passing through, extend the invitation to all. As the whites and blacks do not mix now, since the war, it is best as it is, to be separated; for their ways and habits are so different; still, after all, without charity we 'become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.'"

We sometimes have complaints like the following: "There were several words left out of my article." "Your compositors put in some wrong words," etc., etc. There is no doubt about the truth of these statements. It often happens that we are unable to make out some word in a sentence, because it is not written plainly. We ponder over it some time, guessing what it means; but can not decide. We then hand it to others who are skilled in deciphering dark sentences and words, but they can not tell. Now what is to be done? The sense and connection of the sentences depends upon that word; but neither the editor nor the compositors can make it out. In such a case, there is but one alternative left, and that is to strike out the whole sentence. Next comes the censure, or complaint, "You left out some words."

At other times we succeed, as we suppose, in guessing what the writer means, and supply words to express the supposed idea; but we are soon informed, "You put the wrong word in such a place." We assure our contributors we endeavor to do the best we can. We hope they will take pains to write as plainly as possible. We take pleasure in having every thing right, as far as lies in our power; but do not claim infallibility. Pray for us, that we may have wisdom from the Lord to do all to his glory.

A NEW SECT.

A new sect has started in Italy, and is known by the name of "Free Italians." It is directly the opposite of Catholicism. It "submits to no authority of Bishop, Synod, nor Council." It is known to be anti-Catholic, and is considered as an important movement. It is the result of hating the harlot.

The foreign correspondent of the Boston Journal, writing from Florence, March 18th, says:—

"A most remarkable religious movement is going on in Italy. It is outside of all the attempts of other nations to evangelize this country. It originated among the Italians themselves. Men who are identified with the attempt to introduce Protestantism into this country look on this movement with anxiety. It is anti-Catholic, and so far sympathizes with all outside movements. It has no creed but the Bible. It has no name, though the body is generally known as the 'Free Italians.' It has no government, and submits to no authority of Bishop, Synod, nor Council. It allows no order of men as preachers. Its meetings are conducted in the style of a Methodist love-feast. Any one reads a portion of Scripture who feels like it; gives out a hymn of praise, or gives an exhortation. Leaders it has none. But the most prominent man among this new sect is a member of Parliament, and the only Protestant member in Victor Emanuel's Government. This sect deny the name of Plymouth Brethren, which some have applied to them. But they resemble closely that remarkable people who are spreading themselves all over the world. The present bias of this peculiar people is Calvinistic. It may turn out rationalistic."

PLANCHETTE.

"The Religio-Philosophical Journal," published in Chicago, says: "Planchette is, indeed, revolutionizing the world." The Spiritualists call it "a flank movement," by means of which they have succeeded in introducing Spiritualism into a large number of families, where the doors had been previously closed.

"FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION."

As we approach the end of the present dispensation, the general standard of religion is being continually lowered; and we see more and more of the form without the power. All sorts of schemes are devised to reform the world, without any special connection with Jesus. The religion of the day is largely a humanitarian system, and not a christian one. From a literal Savior, who pardons sin, they have turned to "Jesus principles," nearly all of which are opposed to the teachings of our Savior. They are Satan's counterfeit currency; but it is passing freely at the present time. Indeed, people have become so accustomed to the false, they hardly inquire for the true; but seem to think themselves all right if they are only with the majority, on the popular side.

The following is a notice of a meeting of the "Free Religious Association," in Boston:

"On Friday, May 28th, a general Convention, with three sessions, will be held in Tremont Temple, for addresses, essays and discussions on questions of special religious interest at this time. Rev. O. B. Frothingham, President of the Association, Ralph Waldo Emerson, David A. Wasson, Lucretia Mott, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Prof. Wm. Denton, Rabbi Isaac M. Wise, Rev. F. E. Abbot and Rev. Rowland Connor are among the speakers positively expected to address the Convention at some one of the sessions.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary."

Some of these speakers are known to be prominent Spiritualists.

A NEW GOD.

The Spiritualists, by the aid of the spirits of demons, have originated a new God—a God composed of a set of "principles." They have given up the God of the Bible, who is a personal being, and invented one to suit their own infidel notions. In the "White Banner" of March 31st, 1869, we find the following from Mrs. M. A. Blackwood, a medium:—

"We recognize no one form of God, no personal combination of principles; but one great mass of principles or essences, or life-producing power, pervading all things, producing all things; wherefore we say, this being the cause of life, and all forms of the manifestation of life, by the different conditions and attractions of principles acting on each other, producing all these different forms, that this pervading power, wherever manifested, is God, Father and source of all these manifestations. This life principle, then, is our Father and our God. We, therefore, worship the great principle of life, which permeates all things, filling all space, from whose presence none can flee, from whose control none are exempt."

This God of the Spiritualists is no more a personality than is magnetism, or electricity; and has no more to do with judging us, rewarding or punishing, than the wind. This "is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son."

ARE WE COMING TO IMPERIALISM?—The "Round Table," discussing the question, "Are we drifting into Imperialism?"—reasons in this somewhat discouraging strain:

"In plain sooth the age of sensuality, of unchecked corruption, of dense, crass ignorance is coming down on us like night. A free press should have given more notes of warning than it has; but the press dislikes, in a free country, to print unpalatable truth, even when it discerns such truth, and the journals that profess 'fearless devotion to principle' are notoriously the ones whose articles betray the most laborious solicitude to catch the applause and flatter the prejudice of the greatest number. Meanwhile, at what are called our 'great centres,' coarse brutes, who ought to be digging railways or drawing hand-carts, lay down the law for the whole community, and, by dint of vast wealth, amassed under circumstances almost impossible in any other civilized country, degrade the social tone, and spread in every direction an unbridled rage for the pleasures of the senses. Intellectual elevation or ambition is scoffed at, and those who strive to inculcate a taste for better things are either hated or despised. Nothing is thought of but the delights of the table, of fine clothes, of showy dwellings and equipages—in a word, of physical raptures of every description. If there is a pretence at anything else—whether in the pulpit, in the theatre, or in literature—the pill must be gilded so as to appear 'sensational.' All this is so widely admitted, so shamefully notorious, that its recital is trite enough; we repeat it merely in elucidation of the subject under discussion. It is impossible, when people think all things of their bodies and nothing of their minds, that either a democratic or any other pure form of government can long be maintained. Unless a great change comes over American people, it will not be maintained by themselves. They are rushing toward the precipice at railway speed, and the universal corruption that good men deplore, is the prelude of a decomposition which is as certain as fate."

PROTRACTED MEETING AT LOWELL STREET CHAPEL.

In accordance with a law just passed by the Mass. Legislature, the Lowell St. Chapel, Boston, must be demolished to make room for the erection of a new depot by the Eastern and Lowell Railroads. Many will feel sad at this announcement, whose hearts have been made glad while hearing the word of God preached in its purity at this place, so full of sacred memories. Many have here found Christ to be precious as a Savior; many have here been reclaimed from their backslidings, and started with quickened zeal on the heavenly journey. Such will feel sad at the demolition of the old lighthouse. We had expected to occupy the Chapel until earth's future King should come to bid us welcome to a sanctuary not made with hands, whose walls shall never be demolished. But, alas! earth's history is made up of changes, partings, and disappointments. We long to moor our bark on Eden's changeless shore.

A protracted meeting will be held for a few weeks at the Chapel, commencing Sunday, May 16th, to continue Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings, as long as may seem to be duty. Elder A. A. PHELPS, of Rochester, N. Y., will be present to preach the word. Short sermons may be expected each evening, to be followed by exhortations, prayers and spiritual songs, as the Lord may lead. Let there be a general gathering of the friends of Jesus residing in Boston and its vicinity. If these are the last meetings we can hold in the Chapel, let them be the best in its history.

Earth's days of probation are fast passing away. We have but a short time left in which to lead the perishing to Christ. Let us all wake up, and keep awake.

SAD NEWS.

Our beloved sister in Christ, the wife of Elder John Couch, is dead. She breathed her life out sweetly, in full assurance of a better resurrection, last evening (Sunday, May 9th), at five o'clock. Bro. Couch is in deep affliction, and desires to be remembered in the prayers of the church. A. ROSS.

TO THE BRETHREN.

Truly it may be said of our worthy brother, J. B. Wadsworth, "In labors more abundant, in journeyings often, in weariness and painfulness, in fastings often," etc. During the past winter, omitting particulars, he has suffered from the pressure of necessity. He complains not, reports himself to the Lord, as well as to the brethren, to whom he is indeed commended by his faithfulness. His privations induced disease, and he has been very ill; is now at Memphis, where the fruits of loving hearts may be deservedly sent, to be gratefully received. He is indeed "one of a thousand"; a man "after" the Lord's "own heart," and our own too. Let our hearts and hands be open to opportunities, which will cease ere long. His address is John B. FELLOW SERVANTS.—No. 3.

"To Timothy my dearly beloved son. . . . . . Only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is profitable to me for the ministry. And Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me."

Union in labor—associated in the ministry. Let these points be constantly observed by the ministers and brethren, then there will be less of the sects "I of Paul," and "I of Apollos."

True, some ministers of equal faith and ability will meet with different reception among the people. Their likes and dislikes will be manifest. What shall the ministers do? Each prefer the other. Discountenance all preferment of themselves among the people. Allow no partiality to be tolerated for yourself. Permit no idolizing of yourself among the people. If any will worship others, gently reprove them. Some have strong native sympathy which acts upon the sympathy of others; this often produces great revivals of (religion, it is thought) sympathy; it cleaves to the special preacher. "He is the man for me," and no other will do. Such cases will come up, and when a man will allow the people to act out their preferment, and hang upon him, and refuse to have others to minister to them, he is spoiled, and they are spoiled, until they learn better.

Shake off the people; teach them better; let them cling to Christ. "He is your Master, and all ye are brethren." Never say, "They won't have any one else." If so, the blame is on you. I. C. WELLCOME.

REJECTING ARTICLES.—Perhaps the most unpleasant duty an editor has to perform, is the rejection of articles. Our readers can have but little idea of what their paper would be, if every contribution were published. And yet scarce one is rejected without causing unpleasant feelings. We have sometimes thought to publish one paper made up wholly of "rejected" articles, for the benefit of the afflicted ones. We think in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred, the writers would all agree that we were just in rejecting every article thus marked—except their own!—ED.

FROM BRO. J. B. WADSWORTH.

BRO. GRANT:—I came here the 22d of April, and would have written you sooner, but most of the time have been in great agony with pain in the left shoulder and side, very painful in breathing. I am not able to write much now, simply to say to the brethren and sisters, to those who have given their addresses for sample copies, that I am too unwell to write in detail of my travels from New Orleans here; but will add that my treatment by the people was far better than I could have expected under existing circumstances. Both black and white have been sadly imposed upon, and I will in my next letter state how. There are many impositions practiced through the country. The people have been greatly molested by horse thieves, and many other little tricks played, which I will not mention now. I have had all these to contend with. The white people, in some neighborhoods, are taking great interest in the colored people, assisting them in their churches and schools, while some are opposed to it. The colored people in the country seem to be doing better than those in cities. Many are getting $15. per month and board. I saw but few suffering for food and raiment, but spiritual help is needed.

I think that Memphis is the wickedest city I have visited in all of my travels. Prayer is wanting in this direction. I must say, in the midst of so much wickedness, there is a great work in progress here. This church, since I was here last spring, has increased far beyond my expectations. The Lord is surely preparing a people for his soon appearing. Seven were baptized last Sabbath. Many are inquiring, "What must I do to be saved?" Fifteen or twenty came forward last night in in our little prayer-meeting. The church numbers about one hundred and fifty members, and a full school. The teachers are head and ears in business. I went with Bro. Cole last Sabbath to the jail. The prisoners all plead not guilty, though they confessed that bad company brought them there. Bro. Cole is sowing good seed. May it be brought forth to the glory of God. I thought I should soon go home to N. O., but Dr. Leslie says that my health will not admit of it just now. I may defer it till winter, and scatter the gospel in Georgia and South Carolina next summer and fall; but unless my health improves beyond what it has been for the past six months, I shall have to locate, or get me a wagon.

Some friends, with whom I met on my way from New Orleans here, gave me some questions to be answered through the "Crisis." I will not put them now, but will in a week or two, when I am stronger in mind and body. I hope soon to hear from my new acquaintances, who have promised to let me hear from them through the "Crisis," or "Voice." I hope to be able to write in a week or two.

Yours in much love, J. B. WADSWORTH.

REPORT OF TRAVELS.

Dear brethren and sisters, I thank the Lord that I can say that I never felt more happy in my life than I am at this present time. The Lord is always true to his promise. I can assure all that read this letter, that I never worked harder in my life than I am working now. I have just arrived here, and am stopping at Sr. Sprague's, where I find a true sister to a weary pilgrim. I left Chicago the 8th inst., which makes me nineteen days on my journey, and two hundred and eighty-four miles from Chicago. I have walked through mud and snow, and on dry land; and I have been wet and cold, but my joy has been full. I have had all that my Master promised me,—an hundred-fold of joy and knowledge and happiness, fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, and the dear children to come and kiss me, and houses and lands, with persecutions. Mark 10: 29–30; Matt. 19: 29; Luke 18: 29–30.

Now, to many of you it may be profitable to know how I was first persecuted, and how I thank the Lord for it. A few days after I left Chicago, I arrived at a town where I was informed there were some brethren and sisters in the Lord. I called on one sister, and told her I was from Boston; that I came from Chicago on foot, and that I was going to walk to Boston to distribute tracts in the highways and hedges. "It is fanatical," was the quick answer. "I don't believe the Lord ever sent you. I have been in Boston, but I never saw you there." But, sister, I live in Chelsea. "Well, I have been there, and I never saw you in the meetings." But I am only seventeen months in the blessed service. "Well, I was there, and I never saw you." God bless that dear sister, is the prayer of my heart. The Lord will never lay this to her charge. I was to have persecutions. It has helped me wonderfully to search the blessed book, and see if it was fanatical.

Now I wish to say a word or two to those that use the word "fanatical." Every day, since I left Chicago, I have seen a watery eye, or a tear-drop, or heard some say they had learned more gospel truth in a few minutes than ever they learned in their lives; and my heart has burned within me on the road, while the Spirit of the Lord had been upon me. Dear Brn. and Srs., does this look like being fanatical? I am fifty-five years of age next March, a very poor scholar, and subject to the asthma and rheumatism; yet I am carrying thirty and forty pounds of tracts and books, with a change of clothing; and I am in better health than if I was indulging by the fireside. Now I ask any reasonable Bro. or Sr., if it is fanatical to serve the Lord when he calls? Ignorant as I was in the Scriptures when I left Boston, I have been able through the Spirit of my Master to teach before a large assembly in towns and villages, and been able to use the two-edged sword, stop the mouths of Spiritualists, and all opposers of the truth.

O how I thank the Lord that he sent Bro. Hastings with the tent to Chelsea; and through his preaching and Bro. Grant's, and others, I am this day what I am, clothed in my right mind. Do pray for me, brothers and sisters, that I may work in the vineyard as a good servant. The harvest is ripe, and the laborers are few. Let me say to some of the older brethren, Be careful, and don't switch the young brethren off the track. Leave off the word "fanatical." When the Lord sends his servants, he lets them know it.

I leave here to-morrow, Sunday, with about forty pounds weight, to carry by way of Niagara Falls. I give all my tracts, books and papers without any charge. I am determined that I won't leave a straw as a stumbling-block in the Master's way. My wants are well supplied. Before I started, Bro. Wm. Himes was very kind in giving me a fresh supply of tracts; and Bro. White, of Battle Creek, gave me some practical tracts to distribute. I sent twenty-six pounds to Detroit from Chicago.

Brethren and sisters, I want you all to pray that I may continue a good servant in the vineyard of the Lord. I have been to two prisons, one in Michigan City, and the other in Jackson. I gave some five hundred tracts in the prison in Michigan, and some papers and Testaments; but I was not allowed to give any in Jackson jail.

O how I can praise my Lord for what he has done for me. Once a gambler, a noted drunkard, and a ———; now a Christian, and almost a preacher. Truly the Lord has no respect to persons.

It has been often asked me how I can support my family, and afford to give so much time and money in the Lord's service? Let me explain to all such inquirers, that when the Lord sanctified me, he sanctified me all over. I gave my liquor and beer money, my tobacco money, fine-dress money, fine-furniture money, candy money, gold-jewels money, and doctor's bills, to the Lord, and my labor and heart to the Lord; and the Lord gives me a hundredfold in return. Praise his name.

I. J. MARESS.

For the World's Crisis.

"WHY DON'T YOU MOLD IT OVER?"

We were seated at supper the other evening. Wife said, "This is the last slice of our nice butter."

"Is the rest unfit for use?"

"The water coming in the cellar during our absence, spoiled it," was her reply.

"Mother," said our little boy, "why don't you mold it over?"

He had seen her mold dough over when too long risen, and seemed to think molding over would cure the butter as well.

I could but reflect though the taint in butter might not be removed by the molding process, in many other things it might, a few of which I will mention.

There was a time when the watchmen on the walls of Zion were humble men, a power with God; when they visited a family and called upon the Father of mercies for blessings, their prayers were felt. They had audience with the Infinite. Sinners trembled. Saints were strengthened. They lived where God honored them. Their presence was coveted; their conversation seasoned; their preaching was in demonstration of the Spirit and in power. They did not stop to stipulate as to the exact sum to be received for preaching the gospel, receiving always "whatsoever was right," and being "content with their wages;" daring to open their mouths wide, to cry aloud and spare not, to be fools for Christ's sake, to preach the preaching God bade them.

But now how changed, how powerless, how ready to talk anything, read anything, do anything almost, compared with former experience, catering to the opinions of the grand and opulent; theorizing, speculating, pleasing men more than God.

It seems as though we must be molded over; as though we needed it; and my prayer is, Great God, put me in the press, but give me strength to endure.

That little difference between brethren which has soured and separated so long; disgracing the cause we profess to love so dearly; interfering with the free course of the Spirit; affecting every preacher who comes to your place, ought to be molded over. A few words of exhortation might prove effectual to save the cause in your place from disaster, and precious souls from ruin. Suppose it would cost you some personal feeling and effort of mind; you will feel far better for making the attempt, even should you fail. Do not suffer the responsibility to rest upon you any longer. Why not mold it over now?

That frame of mind when you were tempted to believe that God knew all your needs without being told; that the internal desires were regar dedby him, and not the utterances of the lips, which prompted you to cast off fear and restrain prayer, needs to be molded over, right away. That taint is spreading rapidly. Do attend to it immediately. Mold it over thoroughly. You cannot live as you are. Things are growing worse and worse rapidly. Oh! may God help you to eradicate that taint from your family and home, at once and forever.

Then, those motives of prudence which have been operating upon your mind, and have caused you to feel that you cannot do quite as much this year for the cause as you have in the past, may need molding over. Very likely you have done more than any one else in the place, although others are worth two dollars to your one. You are laying up treasures in a secure location; they will be for you to enjoy by-and-by. Do not shut up your bowels of compassion now, and if there is any tendency that way, mold it over at once. Do not let the devil cheat you out of the treasure already laid up, by stopping the accumulation. No, no; mold that feeling right over, and take hold of the work again. And may God help you to be faithful unto the end, and receive the crown of life.

BRIDLE YOUR TONGUE.

"Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips."—Psa. 14: 3.

The tongue is indeed an unruly member. It requires as much or more watchfulness and attention than any other member of our body. The Psalmist realized the importance of this, and felt his inability to keep himself; consequently besought God to set a watch, and keep the door of his lips.

That there is great importance attached to this subject we only have to look at the word of God. Jesus has told us that by our "words" we shall be justified or condemned; and that for every "idle word" that men shall speak, they shall give an account in the day of judgment. James has said, "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." It is a solemn fact that there are multitudes, who profess to be the disciples of Jesus, who talk much in meeting; who make long prayers; who give perhaps of their substance to feed the poor, yet destroy their influence for good, and cut themselves off from any title to the kingdom of God, by not bridling their tongues. If they think they are possessors of pure Bible religion, they are deceived. Listen to one who was inspired with the Holy Ghost. "If any man among you seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain."

Dear reader, have you considered the importance of this subject? Have you been striving to possess pure religion? or have you been deceiving yourself by giving liberty to that unruly member—the tongue, in speaking evil of your neighbors, or of your brother? When you are with the wicked, do you join with them in laughing and telling foolish and unprofitable stories? O, be careful; remember you profess to be a follower of Jesus. Remember what Paul says in Phil. 3: 20, 21. "For our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Do you wish to be found ready when the Master comes? Do you love life, and do you want that eternal life which is promised to the righteous? Listen, then, to the exhortation of Peter: "He that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile."

How sweet it is to lie down at night, and feel that we have spoken no unkind word or said evil of any one during the day. We can then call upon God with confidence, knowing that our hearts do not condemn us. Brethren and sisters, let us awake to righteousness and sin not. Let us see to it that our words are always seasoned with grace. Let us bridle our tongues. May God help us to pray with the King of Israel, "Set a watch, O Lord." and resolve as he did, "I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue. I will keep my mouth with a bridle while the wicked is before me."

We must be holy if we expect to be made immortal. O that we may learn of Christ, who was never known to speak an unkind or an impure word. Soon he will come again. Let us be prepared to hail him with joy.

J. W. THOMAS.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. L. F. PEVERLY, Dixfield, Me., March 31st, writes:—"Allow one, who has learned to love those that preach the coming of Jesus, to say a few words in favor of the blessed hope; for I do believe it to be the fullness of joy to all sincere believers of God's word, so far as it can be enjoyed here. I do thank my heavenly Father that I ever had the privilege of attending a meeting where I could hear the Bible preached in its simplicity. Ten years have I tried to serve God, and all this time, I verily thought I had an immortal soul. But by a careful study of God's word, I find there is but one who possesses immortality; and that I am to seek for it 'by patient continuance in well doing.' There is quite a difference between God's teachings and the traditions of men. Last fall some of Father's faithful ones came here to declare the precious truth. I became very much interested in their meetings, and daily prayed that their labors might be owned and blessed, little thinking these prayers would be answered on my own unworthy self. I felt that the doctrine they presented was far preferable to what I was believing. I resolved not to let human creeds or human opinions hinder me from searching into the matter. Neither did I feel it my duty to go to my former teachers for information. But determined to search the Scriptures for myself, and see if these things were so. I have prayed long and earnestly that I might be led into the truth. This has been my winter's work: and the result of it is, there is one Methodist that believes in the speedy coming of Christ, and the destruction of the finally impenitent. I do not believe this merely because Bro. W., and G., and H., said it was true; but because God declares it shall be so. I hear those who believe with me called 'unlearned,' 'ignorant,' 'deluded and crazy;' yet I bless the Lord for the day I embraced this delusion. Oh, it fills my heart brim full of joy. It makes me love my Bible and the blessed Jesus better than ever before.

I long to have some of Father's faithful ones come here and preach the pure, unadulterated gospel. O if I could see that old tent going up again here in Dixfield, I know I should shout a heartfelt 'Glory to God!' If those dear brothers could know how glad they have been instrumental in making one heart, they would not feel that they had labored in vain. I believe there are others here who are seeking into these truths. May God help them to find the precious truth, and acknowledge it to his honor and glory."

SR. R. M. ROWELL, Winona, Minn., Mar. 18th, writes:—"In compliance with a call from the friends in Wisconsin, I left Winona, Feb. 5th, and crossed the 'Father of waters,' now fettered securely in his icy chain. I arrived that evening at Bro. Pettingill's, in Lewis's Valley, where I was kindly received, and hospitably entertained. Saturday morning I made a short call on Eld. Hough and wife, in Mendora, and pressed on to Sparta, where I found a pleasant home at Dea. Barker's. I preached in the Court House in Sparta three times the next day, Feb. 7th. Eld. Adams was present, and rendered valuable assistance in the opening and closing exercises. Monday, Bro. Hough came on from Mendora, and requested me to arrange so as to stay a week longer in the State than I had at first intended, and so be with them a Sunday in Mendora. Monday evening I was deeply interested in a discourse from Bro. Adams, in the Court House.

Feb. 8th, I preached in Portland, on my way to Springville. Feb. 12th, spoke in the hall in Springville on temperance. Feb. 14th, preached there morning and evening, and it did my heart good to see the dear friends come in with whom I had taken sweet converse when I labored here before. Surely God hath some faithful ones, that have not defiled their garments, in this place. Monday afternoon we had an interesting meeting at Bro. Hamilton's. This was for the convenience of the old people, and my heart was deeply touched, as I spoke to them from the words of Jacob,—Few and evil have been the days of the years of my pilgrimage.' Many of the friends followed me in exhortation and prayer. A good preacher of the Wesleyan Methodist order opened and closed, and I truly felt the Lord was with us, and our coming together had not been in vain. In the evening, I spoke again in Springville. There was a large congregation, and deep interest. Feb. 16th, I spoke in Harmony, in Bro. Hagerman's neighborhood. Spoke in the school-house to a goodly number. Feb. 17th and 18th, I spoke to the people again in Springville, to full houses. Thursday evening closed my labors here for the present. O that I could but remain a little longer with this earnest, anxious people. I tried to encourage the saint, and warn the sinner, and besought them all to be ready for the coming Bridegroom.

Feb. 19th, I preached in Portland again, in Bro. Rogers' neighborhood; next day went to Sparta. There is a faithful, earnest band of brethren in Sparta, who are letting their light shine all through that region. God bless them in their labors, and add to them daily such as shall be saved. Feb. 23d, I went to Mendora, where I preached every evening until Sunday. Sunday morning, the Methodist preacher occupied the hall, after which I occupied it. Eld. Hough was present at every meeting, and assisted in the exercises. It is wonderful how much work that man accomplishes. As one sister said, 'he will never rust out.' Sunday evening was an unusually interesting time. About sixty believers sat down together to the table of the Lord, and every brother and sister, I think, without exception, arose in their place and testified to the goodness of God, and their determination to enter the kingdom of glory. What a wonderful work Bro. Hough has been instrumental in doing in this region of country. It must be seen to be appreciated. Monday morning, in company with Sr. Page, Eld. Hough, and my husband, I went on to Onalaska, where I preached in the evening to a crowded hall, with great liberty. This closed my present trip in Wisconsin, and I arrived home next day, with the expectation of remaining there for the present, but the friends in Wisconsin have sent for me to return, and I expect to start to-morrow morning, Mar. 19th, for West Salem, where the friends have procured a hall for a series of meetings."

Bro. Wm. Sheldon, Brodhead, Wisconsin, writes:—"I think I am improving, but I have so often thought so, and said so, I will wait awhile, before speaking too confidently. Heart disease is hard to cure, and time is required to do it. But I hope my water-cure and hygienic treatment, under the care of an Eclectic physician, may help me."

[We hope Bro. Sheldon's many friends will remember him in his affliction, and see that he is not burdened with anxious care about the means to support himself and family.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, May 5th. The London Times this morning has another leading article on the Alabama treaty recently rejected by the United States Senate. The writer sharply criticises the speech of Senator Sumner, and concludes as follows:—"The question is one of law, and not of feeling. It remains to be shown that Great Britain can be held answerable for any infraction of law or excess over the ordinary practice of both countries."

Madrid, May 5. Salustrano Olozoga and his friends demand the establishment of a Directory. It is believed that Gen. Prim is not unfavorable to the scheme.

Florence, May 5. The Ministers have tendered their resignations to the King. Menabrea is engaged in forming a new Cabinet.

The Famine in India. The Times of India says there is still a severe famine in some locations in Central India, especially about Sepree. Hundreds are said to flock to the station in every stage of starvation. There are some fifteen hundred paupers, many of whom are past work. Day by day bodies are found of those who have fainted and died before they could reach the relief house which the few English have started. At Goona, the Friend adds, similar scenes are going on.

Terrible Famine in the North of Europe.—Our advices by mail, from the countries on the Baltic sea, tell of a terrible and widely extended famine now existing there. A letter from one of the central districts of Esthonia says that the distress is indescribable.

From the 23d of May to the 18th of August, last year, no rain fell, and the summer crops were scorched. Bread can now be scarcely got, even at the most exorbitant price, and, as the roads are impassible by reason of the extraordinary wet weather, no help from abroad can reach the people. The debilitated condition of the population and their herding together in the larger villages in the hope of getting food and shelter, has engendered disease, which is making fearful ravages.

"All heart for work is gone out of the peasants," says the letter. "Their once fresh and hopeful faces show only the blankness of despair. Children are deserting their parents, parents their children; some wander about the country, begging and plundering; others sink into lethargy, and swell the aggregate of want, crime and [illegible] gathered there, and perish in scores by famine and disease. Crowds have to be turned away for want of [illegible] faces haunt me night and day."

DOMESTIC.

New York, May 5. A Washington dispatch says Henry M. Turner, one of the colored members driven out of the Georgia Legislature, is in town, and will leave for the north in a few days. It is his intention to speak in New Jersey and other States, and urge the ratification of the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution. He declares that affairs in that State are in but little better condition than during last summer. Assassinations of loyal men are quite common, though not so frequent as formerly on the main lines of travel. He himself has been compelled to have an armed guard at night when at home in Macon, and recently, while traveling in the southwest part of the State, was in the habit of going after dark from one house to another, in order that his whereabouts might not be known.

Havana, May 5. News from Hayti to the 12d ult. has been received. The blockade of Aux Cayes has been raised. The revolutionists were gaining ground in the south. The Dominiques had recaptured the towns of Torbeck and Port Salute. The French steamer from St. Thomas, May 1st, reports two Peruvian monitors still in port. News had reached St. Thomas from St. Domingo, through rebel channels, that the troops of President Baez had been defeated in a pitched battle, and the troops of Cabral were advancing.

The Great Iron Highway.—The Last Rail Spiked, and the Last Blow Struck.—Boston, May 10. The last rail on the Pacific Railroad was spiked and the last blow struck at 3 h. 11 min. 4 3-10 sec. P. M., Boston mean time, to-day. The wires of the Western Union Telegraph Company were so arranged as to transmit instantaneously over its lines from San Francisco to Plaister Cove, Cape Briton, a telegraphic signal produced by each blow, the last of which was given at the time above stated. This exact time was obtained by means of a chronometer from the establishment of William Bond & Son, used in connection with the telegraphic instruments.

The Ecumenical Council.—It is reported in England that a considerable number of Anglican clergymen have determined to attend the approaching General Council at Rome in order to "lay their difficulties before the assembled prelates of the Universal Church." Their "earnest desire," it seems, is to be united to Rome, but their chief difficulty is that they have perfect faith in the validity of their orders, and believe that it would be sacrilege either to submit to re-ordination or to revert to the position of the laymen. A special committee has been appointed at Rome to deal with the subject of Anglican orders. The result will probably be the secession of a large number of the English clergy to the Roman Church, accompanied by many of the laity.

New Church Movement.—A New York correspondent of Boston Journal says:—

"No little interest is manifested here by certain church movements, which are regarded as serious innovations. It is reported on good authority that Henry Ward Beecher recommends secular entertainments in his church on Sunday evenings, in the place of the usual services, and it is announced that organ concerts are to be given in the Hollis street church, Brooklyn, on Sunday evenings. The world moves and churches too."

The Pope a Peace Man.—A letter from Rome says that there will be only one political question presented at the forthcoming Ecumenical Council in Dec., which will be the endeavor of the Pope, as the head of the United Church, to persuade the different nations of Europe to disarm their present enormous and costly armies and fleets, and submit their differences to arbitration. Non-Catholic as well as Catholic Powers will be urged not to break the peace, and to give a guaranty or promise that they will not do so.

The Liquor Question.—The State Constable's order of Saturday is that the sale of ale and liquor over bars is to be stopped. The License Law (with the licenses left out) authorizes the arrest of a barkeeper as well as of the owner of a drinking-place, the language of the law being "whoever sells." The extreme penalty is $500, or imprisonment, or both. Thus far the order does not seem to have produced much terror in places where liquor is sold, and the sale to-day is as free as ever.

The Protestant Churchman, of this week, has the following:—

"True Generosity.—The Ascension is setting a good example to the other churches in New York. It is going to open the doors of its own stately and beautiful edifice, upon Sunday evenings, for all to come in upon equal terms and hear the gospel. For the nonce it is to be an entirely Free Church. Fifth avenue invites in its neighbors, and the names upon the pews are to lose their significance. No polite usher will inform the visitor that he has got into the wrong seat. No eye-glasses will be turned upon the stranger, in wonder, as to what he is doing there."

All right, except the "True Generosity" heading, which does not sound well. The Church of the Ascension is performing a simple duty in thus letting the poor in, as well as the rich; and we do not think, therefore, it will like to be thus inconsiderately presented as an example of "generosity," which implies a concession of something to somebody for the sake of being seen of men, as it were, rather than for the sake of Christ.

"Advanced Ritualism."—The New York Express says that a highly ritualistic service, a little ahead of anything heretofore attempted, even at St. Albans, was performed at an early hour on Monday morning at Christ Church, Fifth Avenue, being a commemoration of a very High Church Episcopal Association, known as the Guild of the Holy Cross. Quite a large number of persons were present. The church was in semi-darkness except the chancel, which was brilliantly lighted up with gas and wax candles. Over the altar was a handsome cross, on each side of which was a tall wax candle, and two more on the altar. The affair was not intended for the general public, and was in no way connected with the parish, but was designed for members of the "Kyrie." A printed circular containing the following and a copy of the hymns to be sung, was distributed to the "faithful:

[Confidential.]

"Catholic worshipers who may attend the private Commemoration of the Guild of the Holy Cross, are earnestly requested to comply with the well known Catholic Rules, as follows: To bow reverently at the Glorias, and at the Holy Name; to remain kneeling from the Confession throughout the service, only rising to commune, and again at the Hymn, 'Faithful Cross,' which takes the place of the 'Gloria in Excelsis' in the Post Communion Service; and not to leave the church until the Altar Lights are extinguished, and the Guild have retired."

The service is described as follows:

"As the organist commenced a voluntary, chanting was heard in the distance, and presently the vestry door was opened, and a procession entered the church, preceded by a little boy carrying a cross; after him came the choir and the clergy, then the officers and fellows of the Guild, wearing long black gowns, and chasubles, some of bright red, others blue, trimmed with white, and gray, trimmed with red; a large red cross was conspicuous on the bosom of each.

The procession passed down the side aisle and up the middle aisle to the altar, the members of the Guild occupying pews in the body of the church. The services consisted of portions of the regular morning service of the Episcopal Church, but they were accompanied with the peculiar forms and ceremonies which characterize those of the Roman Catholic Church. At the conclusion of the Litany and the morning prayers, another voluntary was played on the organ, during which a second procession emerged from the vestry, consisting of one little boy carrying the cross, and two others with long lighted wax candles, and they were followed by three priests in gorgeous vestment of cloth of gold, richly ornamented, and with black berettas on their heads. The priests read the Communion service, the commandments being intoned, and the responses made by the choir. After numerous genuflexions had been made before the cross, a book was presented to the chief priest, which he kissed; the priest who presented it then, preceded by the boy with the cross, went to the reading desk and read, or rather chanted, the Epistle of the day, kissing the book at its close. A hymn was then sung.

The same ceremony was then gone through with with another book, and the third priest chanted the Gospel for the day. After this three little boys entered, one, as usual, bearing the cross, another the candles, and the third the wine and bread, which were deposited on a table at the side of the chancel, after receiving the blessing of the chief priest. The communion service closed with the usual prayers.

One of the clergy then delivered a brief address, in which he spoke of the new movement in the church, and remarked that they must not despair if it had not done all that the most sanguine expected or the most ardent hoped."

After the discourse the sacrament was administered and the services closed with a hymn.

☞ It is said that the religious revival in Richmond, Ind., has been of such power that, while the police court usually has a weekly average of ten or a dozen cases of petty crimes before it, there have been no cases before it for the last two weeks.

Passing Events.

☞ The scientific people are making great preparations to "observe" the August eclipse of the sun. The "line of totality" is 140 miles in breadth, and extends from Alaska to North Carolina. Eclipse stations for scientific use will be made at various points along this line. The directors of the various observatories in the country are making arrangements for a thorough examination of every interesting feature of the event. The observations on the Pacific coast will be of more value, because of longer duration than those eastward. The duration of the total phase of the eclipse will vary from three minutes and forty-seven seconds to two minutes and twenty-three seconds, according to the geographical position of the station occupied.

☞ The news from Spain denotes the speedy commencement of a fierce internecine war, and a declaration made in the Cortes intimates that in case of trouble with the people, France will sustain the "government" of Spain, whatever it may be. But of course there is a mental reservation on the part of France that the "government" chosen must be one that will in every respect meet Napoleon's peculiar views. Prim and Serrano have quarrelled, the cable tells us. The greatest of men-patriots, we suppose we should say, will disagree when spoils and honors are in the way.

☞ Brain diseases are said to be on the rapid increase in England. In 1857 the number of deaths from softening of the brain was 776; in 1860 it was 1664, or more than double.

☞ A century plant is about to bloom in a nursery at Rochester, N. Y. Only three or four of these plants are known to have bloomed in the United States, one of which was in Boston.

☞ The Prussian journals state that a Protestant jubilee is to be held next autumn at Berlin, as a sort of counterpoise to the council to assemble at Rome.

☞ Mrs. Strong, a leader of fashion in New York, is one of the recent converts to the Roman Church. She is at present in Rome.

☞ The receipts for Niblo's Garden last week are stated as reaching $10,779,25.

☞ Northern Indiana never had a better prospect for a bountiful wheat crop than this spring.

☞ Maryland promises an abundant peach crop.

Notice.

As so many of our brethren have spoken to me for lots for tents, on the camp-ground at Alton Bay, N. H.; and as Bro. Woodman, who has furnished us with lumber for a number of years so reasonable, is now cutting out lumber; if our brethren will make out a bill of what they want and send it to him, he will have it ready for them when they wish to build.

To those who have had any fears of the campmeeting being moved from Alton Bay, I would say, that from the assurance that I have had from Mr. Merritt, of Boston, that the fare shall be reduced from Boston, I think the meeting will continue there until the Lord comes. J. G. Smith.

P. S. Bro. Woodman's address is—Jeremiah Woodman, Alton, N. H.

☞ Take Notice.

The Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee are requested to meet on the camp-ground, Monday, May 17th, on the arrival of the first train of cars. J. G. Smith.

Let us consolidate our strength, and work more vigorously and harmoniously in the cause of Christ. Time is flying, and the judgment is coming. Let us work while the day lasts, and all pull together, in the same direction, and our exertions will be crowned with abundant success, and God be glorified. Wm. Sheldon, Sec.

Change of Address.

As I am at the Repository, to remain as long as it shall please the Lord, perhaps all summer, I take this opportunity to remind those who desire my hymn books (Spiritual Melodies), or who wish to write to me, that they may address me at Boston, Mass., care of H. L. Hastings. I hope that some of those who have had my hymn books on sale, have got some money for me by this time, and that they will forward it to me as above, without delay. I. K. Lombard.

Tent Meetings.

All those desiring Tent Meetings this season will please notify me at once, so I can arrange accordingly.

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.
5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.

Joyful we'll sing while journeying home,
Waiting for the kingdom to come,
Bearing the cross, united and strong,
Jesus our hope and song.

CHO.—Soon he's coming back to earth again,
Crowned as king with all his saints to reign;
Then life unending, joys evermore
Fill all this wide earth o'er.

Joyful we'll bear our trials severe,
Knowing that deliverance is near,
Pilgrims and strangers journeying along,
Jesus our hope and song.

Joyful we'll toil in the vineyard of the Lord,
Waiting for the promised reward,
Trusting his word, while journeying along,
Jesus our hope and song.

Come, sinner, come, forgiveness obtain
Through our Savior's worthy name,
Join in our band, while journeying along,
Jesus our hope and song.

For the World's Crisis.

WAS EVER ST. PETER A POPE OR BISHOP OF ROME?

As the papacy is founded upon the affirmative side of this question, it is important that we should know upon what authority this assumption rests. As good authority upon this point, we will give a few extracts from Archibald Bower's "History of the Popes, from the foundation of the See of Rome to A. D. 1758," which show upon what foundation the tradition rests that Peter, the apostle, was ever at Rome at all; or if there, that he was ever Pope of Rome.

But first, a few words in regard to our witness—Archibald Bower. Is his testimony reliable? He was a native of North Britain; born near Dundee, in Scotland, Jan. 17th, 1685. He was educated at Douay in France, that school and fountain of Romanism and Jesuitism. From there he went to Rome, about 1700, and became a Jesuit. Here he enjoyed great advantages for knowing the system and practices of the popedom; for consulting the best historical documents; and for seeing, and knowing, and fathoming the real foundation on which the See of Rome rests. But while here, doubts began to arise whether St. Peter was ever at Rome at all; or if there, whether he was ever Pope of Rome. The more he investigated the matter, the worse things appeared to him, until he was compelled to flee to England in 1726. His great learning and his Italian training gave him great advantages in furnishing his "History of the Popes," for the benefit of the world. In vol I., pp. 1–4 of his history, he says:—

"To avoid being imposed upon, we ought to treat tradition as we do a notorious and known liar, to whom we give no credit, unless what he says is confirmed to us by some person of undoubted veracity. . . . Now that St. Peter was at Rome, that he was Bishop of Rome, we are told by tradition alone, which, at the same time, tells us of so many strange circumstances attending his coming to that metropolis, his staying in it, his withdrawing from it, etc., that, in the opinion of every unprejudiced man, the whole must savor strongly of romance. Thus we are told that St. Peter went to Rome chiefly to oppose Simon, the celebrated magician; that, at their first interview, at which Nero himself was present, he flew up into the air, in the sight of the emperor, and the whole city; but that the devil, who had thus raised him, struck with dread and terror at the name of Jesus, whom the apostle invoked, let him fall to the ground, by which fall he broke his legs. Should you question the truth of this tradition at Rome, they would show you the prints of St. Peter's knees in the stove, on which he kneeled on this occasion, and another stove still dyed with the blood of the magician. The Romans, as we are told, highly incensed against him for thus maiming and bringing to disgrace one to whom they paid divine honors, vowed his destruction; whereupon the apostle thought it advisable to retire for a while from the city, and had already reached the gate, when, to his great surprise, he met our Savior coming in, as he went out, who, upon St. Peter's asking him where he was going, returned this answer: 'I am going to Rome to be crucified anew'; which, as St. Peter understood it, was upbraiding him with his flight; whereupon he turned back, and was soon after seized by the provoked Romans, and, by an order of the emperor, crucified. These, and a thousand like stories, however fabulous and romantic they may seem, we cannot, without great incoherency, reject, if we admit St. Peter to have been at Rome; since the whole is equally vouchsafed by the same authority, and has been upon the same authority equally believed by those who are called in, by the advocates for the See of Rome, to witness St. Peter's having preached the gospel in that city. . . . .

False and lying traditions are of an early date, and the greatest men have, out of a pious credulity, suffered themselves to be imposed upon by them. How many traditions, after having reigned for ages without control, were, upon the Reformation, when men took the liberty to examine what they believed, rejected by the church, ashamed to own them, and degraded into popular errors. But that of St. Peter's having been at Rome, and the first bishop of that city, was a tradition of too great consequence not to be maintained at all events, since upon that chiefly was founded the claim of his pretended successors to an uncontrolled authority and universal jurisdiction; a foundation infinitely too weak for such an immense superstructure.

And here I cannot help observing the little regard that the popes themselves have shown to tradition, though received by the greatest lights of the church, when it did not promote the honor or interest of their See. Of this we have a glaring instance in a parallel case; for as St. Peter, according to tradition, traveled to Rome, so did St. Paul, according to tradition, travel into Spain; the former tradition was received by the writers I have quoted above, and the latter by some of the same writers, namely, by Cyril of Jerusalem, and Jerome, and by Athanasius, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Gregory the Great, and many others; yet such a tradition was rejected, perhaps justly, by Pope Innocent I., who would not allow St. Paul to have ever been in Spain. Have we not an equal right to question, or even to deny, St. Peter's having ever been at Rome? Are not the authorities at least equal on both sides? Why, then, must the travels of one apostle be looked upon as an article of faith, and those of the other be deemed fabulous?

And truly, if we examine narrowly into this matter, the former tradition will appear no less groundless to us than the latter did to that pope; for, in the first place, neither St. Peter himself, nor any of the sacred writers, give us the least hint or intimation of his having ever been at Rome. We are told of his having been at Antioch, at Jerusalem, at Corinth, at Babylon; but of the great metropolis of the empire, where he is supposed to have fixed his See, not the least mention is made. And may we not, from that silence, question, to say no more, his having ever been there? I know that by Babylon, from whence St. Peter wrote his first epistle, Eusebius, Jerome, the venerable Bede, Occumenius, and Grotius, understood Rome; but this is a bare conjecture, and no better grounded than that of others, who thought that by Babylon was meant Jerusalem. The learned Dr. Pearson, Bishop of Chester, seeing no occasion here to recur to a figurative sense, is of opinion that the afore-mentioned epistle was written, not from Babylon in Chaldea, which then lay in ruins, but from Babylon in Egypt; and no man has taken more pains to make the world believe that St. Peter preached at Rome, and founded that See. But in this controversy, the silence of St. Paul in particular, if duly attended to, must be thought, by every unbiassed man, a far more convincing proof of St. Peter's not having been at Rome, than all the authorities that have been yet alleged are of his having been there. For that apostle, while at Rome, had frequent opportunities of mentioning his fellow-apostle and fellow-laborer; and yet, naming several others, he is quite silent as to him. From Rome he wrote to the Galatians, to the Ephesians, to the Philippians, to the Colossians, to Timothy, and to Philemon, without ever mentioning Peter, or sending any salutation from him; nay, it is certain that St. Peter was not at Rome when the apostle of the Gentiles wrote to the Colossians; for, mentioning Tychicus, Onesimus, Aristarchus, Marcus and Justus, he adds, 'These only are my fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God, who have been a comfort unto me.' Peter was not there when St. Paul wrote his second epistle to Timothy, where he says, 'At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me'; nor was he there immediately before St. Paul's death, when 'the time of his departure was at hand'; for he tells Timothy that 'all the brethren did salute him'; and, naming Eubulus, Pudens, Linus, and Claudia, he omits Peter, whom we may thence conclude not to have been there. . . . .

But there was no special reason why an apostle should constantly reside at any other place, nor does it appear that any did; St. Peter especially could not reside at any one place, since to him, as 'the apostle of the circumcision,' was committed the charge of converting the dispersed Jews in all parts of the world.

As for the appellations of the apostolic See, chair, throne, etc., given by the ancients to the See of Rome, they impart no more than that it was erected by an apostle; for they are bestowed indiscriminately on all the Sees in which bishops had been placed by the apostles, viz., of Ephesus, of Smyrna, of Alexandria, of Corinth, Thessalonica, Philippi, etc. The title of apostolic See, common to many, was, in process of time, by the ambition of the bishops of Rome, appropriated to their own. They had, as they thought, till the year 1662, a pregnant proof not only of St. Peter's erecting their chair, but of his sitting in it himself; for till that year, the very chair, on which they believed, or would make others believe, he had sat, was shown and exposed to public adoration on the 18th of January, the festival of the said chair. But while it was cleaning, in order to be set up in some conspicuous place of the Vatican, the Twelve Labors of Hercules unluckily appeared engraved on it. . . .

But to return to our subject, it may be inquired, If St. Peter was Bishop of Rome, who placed him in that See? Did our Lord appoint him? Did the apostles name him? Did the people choose him? Did he assume it himself? To these queries no answers have been yet given but such as are so ridiculously weak, that it is not worth my while to relate them, nor the reader's to hear them. Bellarmine, in one place, positively affirms that 'God commanded St. Peter to fix his See at Rome'; but elsewhere contents himself with saying, 'It is not improbable that God commanded St. Peter to fix his See at Rome.' If it is no more than not improbable, it is uncertain; it may be a mere conjecture, a dream.

St. Peter, either alone, or jointly with St. Paul, as we read in Irenæus, and in the Apostolical Constitutions, appointed other bishops of Rome. Now, when he appointed others, did he resign his episcopacy, or retain it? If he resigned it, he did not die Bishop of Rome, which shakes the very foundation of the pope's claim to supremacy; if he retained it, there were two bishops on the same See at one time; which Pope Innocent I. in his epistle to the clergy and people of Constantinople, condemned as an irregularity never known till his time. . . .

There is a great disagreement among the ancients about the first Bishops of Rome. Tertullian makes Clement, whom he supposes to have been ordained by St. Peter, the immediate successor of that apostle. He was followed therein by Ruffinus, and Ruffinus by the Latins in general; among whom that opinion universally prevailed towards the end of the fourth century. But Jerome, rejecting the opinion of the Latins, places Linus immediately after the apostles, Anacletus next to him, and Clement in the third place. . . .

It is very much to be doubted, as I have shown above, whether St. Peter ever was at Rome, and consequently whether Clement was ordained, by him, bishop of that city. His not succeeding him is a proof that he was not; for who can imagine that the people and clergy of those days would have thought of choosing any other, or that any other, though chosen, would have accepted of a dignity to which Clement had been named by St. Peter himself, and which he was actually possessed of at the apostle's death? Be that as it will, Linus is now universally acknowledged both by the Greeks and Latins for the first Bishop of Rome."

THE FIRST UNIVERSAL BISHOP.

No bishop of Rome, nor elsewhere, ever pretended to claim the title of "universal bishop" until A. D. 595, when, as Bower says, on p. 408, vol. I., "The bishop of Constantinople was now distinguished, all over the east, with the pompous title of ecumenical or universal patriarch; and Gregory found that he had so styled himself over and over again, in a judgment which he had lately given against a presbyter arraigned of heresy, and which, at the request of the pope, he had transmitted to Rome. At this Gregory (the Great) took the alarm, and forgetting all other cares, as if the church, the faith, the Christian religion, were in imminent danger, he dispatched, in great haste, a messenger, with letters to Sabinianus, his nuncio at Constantinople, charging him, as he tendered 'the liberty, wherewith Christ has made us free,' to use his utmost endeavors with the emperor, with the empress, and above all, with the bishop himself, his beloved brother, to divert him from ever more using the proud, the profane, the anti-christian title of universal bishop, which he had assumed, in the pride of his heart, to the great debasement of the whole episcopal order."

When Gregory found that all other means failed to "prevail on the patriarch to quit his new title," he wrote a long letter to him, loading the title of "Universal Bishop" with all names of reproach and ignominy he could think of; calling it 'vain, ambitious, profane, impious, execrable, antichristian, blasphemous, infernal, diabolical," etc., and added—"If none of the apostles would be called universal, what will you answer on the last day to Christ, the head of the church universal? You, who, by arrogating that name, strive to subject all his members to yourself?" But in the days of Boniface VIII., who was elected Pope in 1294, he, according to Bower (vol. I, p. 409), issued a decree saying, "We declare, say, define, and pronounce it to be of necessity to salvation, for every human creature to be subject to the Roman pontiff"!

CORRUPTION IN THE ELECTION OF POPES.

In A. D. 532, on the death of Boniface II., Bower says (vol. I, p. 333): "The death of Boniface was attended with the usual commotions in the city; and many aspired to the vacant dignity, sparing neither pains nor money to attain it. For, in spite of the many laws, both ecclesiastical and civil, simony still reigned without mask or disguise; votes were publicly bought and sold; and notwithstanding the decree lately issued by the senate, money was offered to the senators themselves; nay, the lands of the church were mortgaged by some, and the sacred utensils pawned by others, or publicly sold for ready money. The contest lasted from the 17th of October to the 31st of December, when John, surnamed Mercurius, was preferred in the end to all his competitors."

What shall we say to such a successor of St. Peter as this? But once more. We will pass to 537, while Silverius was occupying the papal chair. Justinian and his wife Theodora were divided in matters of religious faith; Justinian on the side of the pope, and Theodora against him. The taking of Rome by Belisarius offered a favorable opportunity to the empress Theodora of executing a design she had long contemplated. She therefore wrote a letter to Silverius the pope, "earnestly entreating, or rather commanding him" to espouse her cause. "This letter gave the pope the greatest uneasiness," as "he was well acquainted with the violent temper of the empress"; and he said to his friends, "I am now sensible that this cause will, in the end, cost me my life." There was one Vigilius "still at Constantinople, whither he had attended pope Agapetus. He was a man "ambitious beyond measure, and ready to trample under foot, not only the canons or laws of the church, but every principle of honor, virtue, or religion, that stood in the way of his ambition. The empress, therefore, who was no stranger to his character, resolved, upon the receipt of Silverius' letter, to have the pope deposed; and the deacon (this Vigilius), who had long aspired to the papal dignity, and who she well knew would stick at nothing to earn it, chosen in his room. She sent for him accordingly," to "let the deacon know, that now her servant Belisarius was master of Rome, it was in her power to dispose of the Roman See to whom she pleased; that she was determined Silverius should be removed, and that she would cause him to be substituted in his room, provided he would engage and promise, in writing," to espouse her cause. "If you agree to these terms, said the empress, I will transmit, by you, an order for Belisarius, enjoining him to drive out Silverius, to place you on his See, and will present you besides with seven hundred pieces of gold. To these terms Vigilius agreed, without the least hesitation; and, having thereupon received the promised order for Belisarius, set out immediately from Constantinople on his return to Italy; where he no sooner landed, than, repairing to Rome, where Belisarius then was, he delivered to him the order from the empress; and, at the same time, to engage the general to act in the affair with more expedition and earnestness, promised to pay him, as soon as Silverius was deposed and he installed in his room, two hundred pieces of gold out of the seven which he was to receive. The Bibliothecarian writes, that Belisarius betrayed at first some reluctancy to execute the empress' order; but that he soon stifled all remorse, and quieted his conscience, saying, 'The empress commands, and it is my duty to obey; but he who seeks the ruin of Silverius (meaning Vigilius) shall answer it at the last day, and not I.'

"Silverius being driven from his See, in the manner we have seen, Belisarius ordered the people and clergy to proceed to a new election, and recommended Vigilius, who was accordingly chosen, and ordained on the 22nd of November of the present year, 537. He was at this time deacon, or, as he is styled by some, archdeacon of the Roman church, by birth a Roman, and sprung from a noble family, his father having been distinguished with the consular dignity. He had promised to the empress, as has been observed above, to condemn the Council of Chalcedon, to admit the Acephali to his communion, and to approve their doctrine. This promise Belisarius now challenged, not forgetting the two hundred pieces of gold, which he was to pay him as soon as he found himself in possession of his See. But Vigilius, says the historian, fearing the Romans, and restrained by his avarice, declined complying with either engagement." (Bower, Vol. I, pp. 344–348.)

This, as a sample, may serve to teach us on what sandy foundation the popes of Rome rest their pretended claim as the successors of the apostle Peter. But again. When the news reached Justinian, at Constantinople, of Vigilius' base treatment of Silverius, the emperor was surprised, "for he was an utter stranger to what had passed, the plot having been laid by the empress, without his privity; and executed, unknown to him, by Belisarius and his wife Antonina."—Ib. "As for the unfortunate Silverius, the usurper of his See no sooner had him in his power, that he delivered him over to two of his satellites, styled by him the defenders of the church, who immediately conveyed him into the abandoned and inhospitable island of Palmaria; and used him there in so cruel and barbarous a manner, that he died in a very short time."—p. 349.

But it was not long before this Vigilius, the usurper of the papal chair, was so in collision with Justinian the emperor, that he summoned him to Constantinople to answer for his conduct. "The Bibliothecarian writes, that, at his departure, the Roman people, highly incensed against him on account of the death of Silverius, and his unheard of cruelty (for he charges him with having killed his own secretary in a transport of passion, and having caused his own sister's son to be whipped to death), pursued him with curses and showers of stones to the Tiber, where he embarked, crying out, 'Hunger and pestilence go with thee! Evil hast thou done to us, and may evil overtake thee wherever thou art.'" (p. 355.)

Vigilius, arriving at Constantinople, "a warm dispute between the pope and the emperor" took place; and to screen himself, as soon as an opportunity offered, Vigilius privately withdrew, and took refuge in the church of St. Peter. "But the emperor was too much provoked to pay any regard to the sacredness of the place; and therefore ordered the prætor, whose province it was to apprehend thieves, robbers, murderers, and such like criminals, to seize on Vigilius, even in the church, and drag him, as a common malefactor, from the altar itself, should he there take sanctuary, to the public gaol. In compliance with this order, the prætor entered the church at the head of a numerous band of his own men, supported by a body of regular troops, to awe the populace, and prevent the disturbances they might raise on such an extraordinary occasion. The prætor no sooner appeared than the pope, who expected no such visit, not thinking the emperor would have come to such extremities, flew, in great consternation, to the shrine of the martyr St. Sergius, and embracing the pillars that supported the altar over the shrine, continued there. . . . But the prætor, not hearkening to them, ordered his men to seize the refractory bishop, who, seizing him accordingly, some by the feet, others by the hair, and some by the beard, strove to force him from his sanctuary. But as the pope, who was a man of an uncommon size, and of strength in proportion to his size, in spite of all their efforts, still kept his hold, the pillars gave way, and the altar fell down."

After this, "the Bibliothecarian writes, that he was once dragged through the chief streets of Constantinople, with a rope about his neck; that, another day, one of the emperor's officers, striking him on the face, reproached him with the murder of his predecessor. Vigilius still remaining determined in his opposition to the emperor, Justinian ordered sentries to be placed round the palace where he lodged, and all the avenues to be carefully guarded night and day by regular troops. The sight of the troops alarmed the pope to such a degree, that, looking upon every day as the last of his life, he resolved, at all events, to attempt an escape. He attempted it soon after; and climbing, by the favor of a dark night, over a wall that was building, but was not yet raised to its due height, got safe and unobserved to the sea side." (pp. 358–9.)

The contest between the pope and the emperor continued until Justinian "caused the pope to be seized, and conveyed, under a strong guard, to Proconnesus, an inhospitable island in the Propontis." (p. 366.) On the 13th of August, "Vigilius embarked, after a seven years' absence, on his return to Rome. . . . But he had not the so much wished for satisfaction of seeing Rome or Italy again. For, being taken in the voyage with a violent fit of the stone, a complaint to which he had been long subject, he put in at Syracuse; and, not being able ever after to bear the least motion, he continued there to his death, which happened not long after; that is, some time before the 11th of April of the following year 555, for on that day his successor, Pelagius I., was ordained." (p. 369) And as Bower says, "The annalist adds, that Vigilius, though now a saint, was nevertheless punished by Heaven for his former crimes; for, having hastened the death of his holy predecessor, by confining him to an island, he died himself, by a just judgment of God, in an island." (p. 370.) "Such was Vigilius while yet an intruder, and an anti-pope"; (Ib.) having "governed the Roman church seventeen years, six months, and twenty-six days." (p. 369.)

The foregoing historical facts clearly show us the grounds on which the popes claim to be the successors of St. Peter. Strange indeed that men can be so deceived! "The brightness of Christ's coming" will soon dispel this terrible delusion. As we have quoted above, from Pope Gregory the Great, this papal assumption is "vain, ambitious, profane, impious, execrable, anti-christian, blasphemous, infernal, diabolical"!

THE TONGUE.

"But the tongue can no man tame."—JAMES.

Thou hast long controlled me,
Mighty little tongue,
And thy words have often
My poor conscience stung.

I have tried to hold thee
Many times in vain,
Thou as oft would slip me,
And break my human chain.

Oft I've found thee talking
Of neighbors' bad affairs,
When my poor lax walking
Was just as wrong as theirs.

Sometimes I have caught thee
Full of joke and fun;
What but sin hath taught thee
To thus so nimbly run?

I must have thee broken;
Lord, thy grace impart;
Words thus loosely spoken,
Show a wicked heart.

Grace must be the bridle,
Grace through all my will;
Then from all that's idle
Tongue will be kept still.

HOW TO GET RICH.

It seems to be the anxious inquiry at the present time, with the great mass of the world, How can we become rich? and how can we do it without hard work? Hence, we see men stooping to all kinds of wickedness, even to taking the life of their fellow men; robbing, forging, stealing, counterfeiting, and many other ways. Let us pursue a course that is sure to prosper. The Lord has told us that if we seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, all these things shall be added unto us. It is evident, from the reading of the Scriptures, that no good thing is to be withheld from them that walk uprightly; and all things are to work together for good to those that love the Lord.

So far as I am able to judge, in regard to this matter, these promises are sent to all. The Lord is able to fulfill his promises; and, for the last twenty-six years, I have found him true to his word; and I am willing to trust him still. "But," says one, "this don't prove that one can get rich in this way." I think it does; for, says the apostle, in speaking of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness, "From such withdraw thyself." "But godliness with contentment is great gain." Which is the richest man, the one that has accumulated a half a million in money; or the one that has the riches of the Bible? Give me the latter. What little I have, I want in the bank of the Lord; and the interest will support me and mine. Glory to God.

"KAIDOO, THE HINDOO GIRL."

This little volume, written by Miss H. G. Britton, a missionary in Calcutta, is dedicated to the "Mission Bands of the Woman's Union Missionary Society of America for Heathen Lands." It gives a graphic description of woman's wretchedness in "the dark places of the earth, full of the habitations of cruelty." Let every American girl read it, and ask, What has made me to differ from these poor Zenana women? What can I do for them, and for Him who gave himself a ransom for all?

In the late war against rebellion, American women did much to save the nation, by their sanitary care of the sick and wounded, alike of the loyal and rebel armies. Christian women are now doing what men can not do in heathen lands, in teaching those women, excluded by the vigorous laws of caste from all intercourse with the world, and doomed to live and die in heathen ignorance and superstition. Christian women, to the rescue! Give the gospel of Christ to heathen women, and then they will take care of the men and the children.

In reading "Kaidoo," we are painfully impressed with the fact, that all false religions are based upon fear. The most horrible future punishments for sin are threatened; and their worst feature is, that they are everlasting. Annihilation is, indeed, looked for in India, as the eventual reward of extraordinary merit, but only as an exception. In general, "the wages of sin" is supposed by the heathen to be "everlasting misery." Accordingly, we find this horrible notion, so dishonoring to God, so contrary to the Bible, and so repugnant to enlightened reason, to be the chief support of Popery, with its idolatrous mass and prayers for the dead, adopted, with many other iniquities, from Paganism. Surely, then, the Christian doctrine must be free from such infernal admixture. Alas! No! Look at "Kaidoo," page 54, where the author says that the sinner, without an expiation, "must be miserable forever."

Never have I been so forcibly impressed with the monstrous character of this Satanic falsehood, as in this simple narrative from a missionary's pen. Here, above all places, we should expect to see the glorious hope of immortality through Christ alone set forth in strong contrast to heathen fictions. But, lo! the teacher herself needs to be taught. The very gospel itself is fearfully mixed with error; and the good missionary herself, who speaks of a heathen deity (page 58) as being worshiped only through fear, is unconsciously falling into the same error in her instructions, representing the God of love either as a hard master, unwilling, or, as a being of limited power, unable to prevent the eternal continuance of sin and suffering!

O, ye ministers of Christ at home. Ye noble missionaries of the cross abroad. How long will ye be bound by the theology of the schools? How long will ye be semi-Papists? How long will ye believe Satan rather than God? Satan says, "Ye shall not surely die"; ye shall only appear to die; but ye, i. e., your souls, shall live for ever. God says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." "The wages of sin is death," not eternal misery; but eternal life is the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Therefore eternal life is not inherent in man, without regard to his character and the atonement of Christ. How long will men wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction?

THE LAST.

If it were the constant aim and attainment of all the professed followers of Christ to perform every act of theirs, in word and deed, as the word of God teaches, and as well as they would if they knew it was the last, what a change there would be wrought among us. Proud and unsanctified hearts, given over to sin and uncleanness, might be cleansed and made a fit place for the Holy Spirit to dwell in, as when first Christ washed our sins away. Vain and idle words, for which we must give an account soon at the judgment-seat of Christ, would give place to a conversation ordered aright. All strife and contention in the church would cease, and it might truly be said of it, Behold, how they love one another; and, like a city set upon a hill, its light could not be hid; and like a well-watered garden, it would be living, growing, and fruitful. But, alas! how few there are who seem to be ready and waiting to know the Master's will and do it. There are many people who would like to do right, and mean to do right; but, somehow or other, they never get to that particular pitch of feeling where they can say, I will do right, and do it. And hence, their lives are spent to the last in knowing the right, but never quite coming up to the place where they can do it.

But, only a few live daily as if it were the last; and yet we have no promise of our life for a single day. Time is short, and life uncertain; and yet how apt we are to act as if we were always to remain here in this earthly state of things. The scenes of our mortal career are fast being numbered, and soon the last one will be ended,—how soon we cannot tell. We are doing work for the judgment. That day alone will reveal how well we have done it. Let us be decided to act in season, and to act wisely, as we shall wish we had done at the last great day. "For God has appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness"; and tokens abound to tell us that that day is nearing, and soon will be ushered in.

"O, christian, wake from sleeping,
And let your works abound;
Be watching, praying, weeping,
For soon the trump will sound!"

Gems.

— If you are God's wise men, the world will count you fools.

— Prefering our own wills to the will of God, is to make gods of ourselves.

— Few are wise enough to distinguish between shadow and substance.

— The christian is very frequently the only Bible the world will read. How sad that the copy should be so defaced.

— No man can be provident of his time who is not prudent in the choice of his company.

— How sad to have the world say of a christian: "May be he is a good man, but he is very hard and close in his dealings."

— Familiar thoughts shape the way to death; but if we think not of the subject, the event will be a sudden precipice.

— In order rightly to understand the voice of God in nature, we ought to enter her temple with the Bible in our hands.

— A christian, witnessing the conflagration of his property, exclaimed, "Glory to God! there go the fetters which bound me."

— He who has other graces, without humility, is like one who carries a box of precious powder without a cover, on a windy day.

— Oh, inconsistent professor! In the great day of judgment, doubtless, some shall rise up and charge thee as being the stumbling-block over which they fell into perdition.

— Grace tried is better than grace, and more than grace; it is glory in its infancy. Who knows the truth of grace without trial? And how soon would faith freeze without a cross! Bear your cross, therefore, with joy.

A THOUGHT ON THE FUTURE.

To think of summers yet to come,
That I am not to see;
To think that weeds are yet to bloom,
From dust that I shall be;
To think when heaven and earth are fled,
And times and seasons o'er;
When all that can die, shall be dead,
That I shall die no more:
O where will then my portion be?
Where shall I spend ETERNITY?

— Bowed knees and beautiful words cannot make prayer; but earnest desires from a heart bowed by love, inspired by God's Holy Spirit, and thirsting for God, the living God, will do it anywhere, or in any place, or at any time.

— God would sooner blow out the sun, and chase all the stars of night into oblivion, than that the least promise given to his saints should fail. How safe, how blessed, therefore, are those who have a perfect trust in him.

— Everything may be mimicked by hypocrisy but humility and love united. The humblest star twinkles most in the darkest night. The more rare humility and love united, the more radiant when they meet.

— When hearts are filled with holy affections, and home is happy, then do the young dwell in a charmed circle, which only the naturally depraved would seek to quit, and across whose boundary temptations to error shine out but feebly.

— It is a great advantage to keep quiet gracefully and naturally. Self-control is the best evidence of a cultivated intellect and a clear conscience. It is a great pleasure to meet those who wisely listen and observe; who review what is said without prejudice, and with or without advice commit no errors. Nothing is so difficult to do, nothing so rarely done.

COMMON POLITENESS.

It is not polite, in public assemblies, to occupy much time, when there are others present who are expected to speak.

It is not polite to make lengthy prayers to a weary audience, or to extend the exercises by singing long hymns to dull tunes.

It is not polite to refuse, or hesitate for a moment, to correct a mistake of your own, even though it be greatly to your disadvantage. Persons act dishonestly who knowingly receive double for what they pay, or, through mistake of the seller, give less for an article than it is actually worth.

It is not polite to refer to past errors or crimes, in the presence of one who has sincerely repented of his vices.

It is not polite to appropriate to your own use, without consent, the most trifling thing that belongs to another.

It is not polite for a young and inexperienced minister, in self-confidence, to attempt to preach on those doctrinal subjects which the most profound thinkers and the most devoted christians have discussed with diffidence and humility.

It is not polite to be slovenly in your dress, and careless and indifferent about your personal appearance.

It is not polite to refuse to pay an honest debt, or to withhold from another beyond a reasonable time, his just dues.

It is not polite to speak unadvisedly to another, or to thrust your opinion, unsolicited, upon a neighbor.

It is not polite to bore another, who has no interest in the matter, with your own troubles or personal adventures.

It is not polite to repeat your own compositions to those who have no desire to hear them.

It is not polite to enter a merchant's store, and take down his goods to examine, and not return them to their proper places.

It is not polite to be odd.

It is not polite to pry into a letter belonging to another, or to read it, if carelessly left open before you.

It is not polite for an editor, who, controlling a press, has the advantage of his neighbors, to abuse them in print, or hold them up to public contempt.

"This is for your health."—PAUL.

PORK UNCLEAN.

We read in the Scriptures that Moses was a wise man, and that the Lord commanded him to write and tell his people what they must eat and what they must not eat, saying unto him, "Stand thou by me, and I will make thee an instrument of communication with my people;" and that he wrote the law under the influence of inspiration, and must have told the truth when he declared in several places, as if to emphasize the fact, that the "Swine is unclean, and of him ye shall not eat, neither you in your day, nor your posterity forever!" In fact, the word scrofa, or scrofula, in the Latin, when translated into English, means "sow!" and hence, this terrible disease has received an appropriate name, from the early belief that the disease was peculiar to the swine, and, as Lugol in his essay on scrofula and its origin tells us, was derived from "sleeping with the hog!"

How any human being can pretend to be a christian, and reverence what the Scriptures so plainly and explicitly declare in reference to this vile and unclean beast, and then eat him, I have always been at a loss to understand! Let any one, whether he be Jew, Christian, or heathen, examine the carcass of this filthy brute while living, or dissect it after death, and he will soon find abundance of evidence that Moses must have been inspired, when he declared him to be unclean. Look at his skin, covered with mange, tetter, and scurf, from one extremity of the body to the other, and so irritable and itchy that the poor beast is often crazy to find some convenient log or fence to rub himself against, in the vain effort to obtain relief from its itching sensations. Examine the inside of his fore legs, a few inches above his feet, and look at the open sores or issues provided by nature to drain off a part of the vile, scrofulous ichor from his corrupt and filthy body. Fill a small syringe with quicksilver, and then introduce its pipe into the open mouth of these sewers, and inject the mercury, and it will run along these pipes, and enable you to trace them to every part of his body. Place your hand around the foreleg, near the body, and press down slowly toward the feet, and as you do so you will see the corruption flow from the open mouths of these pipes, like the drainage from a sewer.

Sometimes when a fat hog wallows in his filthy style, these little openings become filled up and closed, so that the scrofulous matter cannot escape from the system, when the animal at once sickens, and would soon die, did not his owner very humbly get over into his pen, and with a bucket of warm water and soap, wash and scrape them open, until they begin to discharge again, when the sick hog soon recovers from his illness, and is saved as food to satisfy the hungry cravings of some epicure. Is it not wonderful that christian men and women will eat these soused sore legs, and tell you as they smack their lips with a relish, that they are the sweetest and most juicy parts of the dirty beast?

Having examined the outside of the hog, if you still disbelieve that he is "unclean, and of him ye shall not eat" suppose you take a look at his interior, and the deeper you go, the dirtier you will find him. Dissect and examine carefully his neck, and look at the numerous gray scrofulous lumps, or enlarged lymphatic glands, filled with tubercular deposits, and if the animal is only old enough, many of these scrofulous lumps will be softened, and filled with greenish or yellow matter, as the result of scrofulous ulceration. Now remove and examine his lungs, and if the animal you examine is upwards of one year old, his lungs will nearly always contain numerous deposits of gray and yellow tubercles, and if not slaughtered too soon, as food, will die of true pulmonary consumption. Remove his liver, cut through it with your knife, and you will find numerous yellow lumps of scrofulous or tuberculous matter, often in a state of ulceration. Remove the small intestines, and examine the numerous purple colored and enlarged mesenteric glands, often greatly increased in size, and filled with scrofulous deposits, and enveloped with fat, which the butcher so unceremoniously removes, glands, tubercles, fat, and all together, and afterwards "tries out," in the big iron kettle, removing the scrofulous extract or essence, called lard, for the purpose of shortening pastry, and frying doughnuts, etc. Is it not amazing that christian women will insist upon it that pastry made out of such materials is far nicer than when made with good sweet cream and butter?

Verily it is true, as the great Lawgiver has told us, the "swine is unclean." Indeed, animal instinct teaches all the lower animals this important fact, and makes them avoid the hog as food. No beast or bird of prey will eat a dead hog. They may lie dead in the fields or by the roadside, and no animal will touch them, unless driven to do so by the pangs of hunger and despair. No domestic animal will eat raw pork, unless driven to do so by starvation. Instinct teaches them all that it is unclean. Indeed it is an old saying, that "dog will not eat hog, nor hog eat dog!" It takes a man to do that! But perhaps some will say that under the law the hog was unclean, but under the gospel it was purified.

Oh, no! the Savior of men did not come into the world for any such purpose; and besides, from the very nature of the circumstances, even the gospel could not make that clean which was in its very nature unclean. If the swine was unclean in the time of Moses, he remains unclean until this day. Now, Dr. Johnson tells us, "that if a man drinks beer, he will think and feel beer," and if so, then a man who eats hog will feel hoggish, and act like one! In other words, the whole nature and character of an animal may be changed by the quality of his food. If, for instance, you feed a tomato worm upon tomato leaves, it will grow up a great, coarse, clumsy worm; and passing through its chrysalis state, come out a butterfly with little beauty or attraction in its appearance; but if you feed the same worm upon different food, the leaves of the rose, and the petals of beautiful flowers, when it passes through its chrysalis state, and comes out a butterfly, it will be of surpassing brilliancy and beauty in its plumage and in its armature. And so of the silk worm. Feed it upon inferior diet, the leaves of the forest, and it will sicken and perish; but feed it upon the leaves of the mulberry, and it thrives and grows, until it finally wears its life away spinning its gossamer silken thread! The same is true of the hog; feed one upon hard corn, another upon swill, another upon distillers' slop, and another upon nuts and mast in the forest, and their flesh will be totally different, as any butcher will tell you. In fact, the diet any animal lives upon will modify its constitution and character for better or worse, as the case may be. Feed a human being on pork and garbage, and he will be inferior in health, constitution, and endurance; feed him upon beef and bread, and in constitution, health, endurance, and disposition, he will be superior. All of our prize fighters and athletæ, when they would secure great strength and endurance, eat beef and bread for food. Experience has taught them its superiority to pork and sausage.

But some will say, "Our grandfathers ate pork, and were healthy, and lived to a good old age." Well, suppose they did so, and our fathers did the same, and we still eat it, and if it was good diet then, we would be as healthy and vigorous as our grandfathers, and our children more so! Now, is it not quite notorious that the reverse of this is true, and that living upon this unclean and improper food, there has been a gradual deterioration of the race in consequence? Jews eat no pork, they reverence and obey the law, and are wonderfully blessed with remarkable exemption from scrofula, and its kindred diseases. As a race, they are distinguished for their clean, sharp features; and a "skin as clear and transparent as that of a Jewess," is a compliment to any lady's beauty. Scrofulous people may be distinguished for their muddy, sallow skins, and puggy, pear-shaped noses, covered with buds, pimples and blossoms, so commonly seen among gross livers.

Very few persons in this country have had a better opportunity to observe and study the habits of the American people in different parts of our country, for the past twenty years, than the author; to observe the diet of people in different localities, and witness its effects upon health and character. In Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine, and other New England States, the inhabitants send their beef cattle to Boston market, and live principally on pork as meat, the year round, and myriads of them are afflicted with scrofula, salt rheum, tetter, ring worm, "humors in the blood," consumption, etc. In the far west, pork is the principal meat consumed by the farmers and laboring classes; ham for breakfast, roast pig for dinner, and sausage for supper, and "hog all the time!" And what is the effect of this unclean diet upon their constitution, health, etc.? Look at many of their wretched wives and children, with their rheumed eyes and enlarged glands, sore ears, etc., for an answer. While the western farmer works in his fields in the open air, he is comparatively exempt from its baneful influence, and it is chiefly upon the health of his wife and children that its terrible effects may be seen. The late Dr. Brainard, of Chicago, told the author a few years since, that it was estimated by competent medical authority, that nearly one-fourth part of the entire population of the State were afflicted with scrofulous sore eyes, with enlargement of the glands at the edges of the lids, etc. This form of chronic ophthalmia is very common throughout the west.

How any human being can read what the inspired writer said in regard to the use of this kind of food, and then deliberately close the sacred volume, and presume to invoke God's blessing upon a plate of ham and sausage, swimming in grease, I am at a loss to understand. Whenever I see a christian do anything of that sort, it always reminds me of an intelligent and conscientious friend, a clergyman. Being seated at the table with one of his deacons, and having roast pig for dinner, the deacon requested him to ask a blessing. The clergyman looked steadily at the roast pig, and then raised his eyes toward heaven, and not knowing hardly what to do or say, when he remembered the law, "the swine is unclean, and of him ye shall not eat," finally exclaimed, "O God! if thou canst bless under the gospel what thou didst curse under the law, bless this pig!" Adam Clarke, the great commentator on the Scriptures, leaves us his testimony as to the value of pork, as food for christian men and women, for, says he, "Were I compelled to offer a sacrifice to the devil, then I would offer a pig stuffed with tobacco!" Indeed, no sacrifice to the devil could be more appropriate, since we never read any where in sacred or profane history of a hog being offered as a sacrifice to the one true and living God, or even to the false gods, except with the deliberate purpose of defiling the altar, and ignoring the sacrifice.—The Physiologist.

LINES.

To this poor sinful heart, full of doubting and care,
In the midst of temptations and many a snare,
Which the world and the flesh and the devil prepare,
O, Spirit of Jesus, now come.

To guide me aright in the way I should go,
To scatter the gloom that oppresses me so,
And to give me the peace that the world cannot know,
O, Spirit of God, I pray, come.

To set up thy kingdom by prophets foretold,
To gather thy sheep to the heavenly fold,
O, Zion's Deliverer, promised of old,
O, Savior of Israel, come.

To give us one sight of thy glorious face,
To fill us with rapture who've tasted thy grace;
To bring us at length to our Father's embrace,
Dear Christ, so-long-waited-for, come.

And down from the heavens, prepared like a bride,
Arrayed in such glory as God can provide,
O, city beloved, where saints shall abide,
O, golden Jerusalem, come.

Of the sweet hills of promise to catch a faint sight,
Antetypical Pisgah we climb with delight,
But what transport shall fill us on Zion's fair height!
Thy kingdom, O God, let it come.

THE ALARM BELL.

The question will be asked,—why use a heading so sensational or startling? Why introduce topics of a character so serious, and to very many perhaps obtrusive? Our answer is,—from a deep conviction that the issue is abundantly justified by the universally alarming situation of affairs, by the active and fruitful elements of present and coming evil, and by the unmistakable fact of an imminent and actually now advancing crisis of the ages. It is a period of revolution. It is an hour of preparation and of danger. It is a time of change, of trouble, of solemn and awful portent to the world. A vast and powerful confederation of evil is rapidly maturing, and the Prince of darkness is mustering his forces for a final and fearful struggle. As leviathan, lanced by the intrepid whaleman, lashes into foam the sea red with his life-blood, so Satan, wounded and enraged, because his time is short, is full of desperate cunning to mislead the world, and form his hosts into one vast compact of apostate power, which must be soon and suddenly broken by the coming Savior, Jesus the King and Lord of Hosts. It is of the utmost importance that the world and the church should be speedily and earnestly premonished and instructed. There is no time to be lost. There is a great work to be done, and it should be done with all promptness and energy and fidelity—done with due and prayerful deference to the divine will, and prayer for the divine blessing.

A VERY GREAT MISTAKE.

And what may this be? It is a sad, a flagrant and injurious mistake, and which has become popular, and acquired a mighty power over the professed church, to suppose that the gospel is to conquer and convert the world before the coming of Christ. Missionary and Bible Societies are doing and have done a good work, an important work, a noble work. But if any one conceives or believes that the earth is to became the possession of the Lord Jesus by these or kindred instrumentalities, the conception must be inevitably unrealized in the event. Our Lord is to gather out of "the Gentiles a people for his name," and "a great multitude of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues" are to stand "before the Throne and the Lamb;" but the word of God never teaches the world's conversion by any agency under heaven anterior to the coming of Christ, never, never. A celestial hierarchy is to be prepared, which shall enjoy glory and honor and dominion with Jesus Christ; but the world's conversion and a gospel millennium is an error, an illusion, a false and baseless imagination of men. We humbly and affectionately beseech all our dear brethren of all denominations to consider this subject thoroughly and well in the light of God's word, and as quickly as possible escape from and abandon the popular mis-teaching. Do good, indeed, with all your might, give liberally, save as many as you can, but remember, we beseech you, this Son of God who is to have the "heathen for his inheritance," will destroy the world of impenitent and wicked men at his coming, that "he will break them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." Do, brethren, search and see if it is not true. All the glory of a coming universal peace and brotherhood is after, and not anterior to, the coming of Jesus.

"LORD, WHAT WILT THOU HAVE ME TO DO?"

This may be and certainly is a very becoming and practical inquiry for every christian, and especially for every believer in the speedy coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Surely every one can do something. The widow gave her mite. Zaccheus gave one half his goods to the poor. There is no place in God's hive for drones. Miserliness is utterly inconsistent, we conceive, with a love and looking for of the blessed Prince. Is there one who professes to be looking for the coming of Jesus, who is covetous, who withholds more than is meet, in such a time of tremendous responsibility and interest as this? Is there one? Is there one who stands aloof from his brethren, who leaves them wondering and perplexed, who seldom or never cheers them by his presence at their gatherings for worship and praise, and who gives little or nothing for the cause? O, inconsistent and marvelous picture of isolation and parsimony? Who can find language to depict such a spectacle of strangeness? O, wonder of our times, that any such could be found, when the world is ready to fall into the gilded and deadly snare of Satan, and when the whole of God's elect should rise as one man to a discernment of the tremendous peril, and seek by all means to save some, and by all means, with all earnestness and singleness, to glorify God. Are you one, brother or sister? Then we beg of you to repent of this great sin. You are bought with a price. You owe all to God. Stand by the cause, then, with all your might. The crisis of the world is rolling on with the speed of the steam-horse. O, the most solemn and soul-thrilling developments are before us. How can you be silent? How can you be isolated? How can you be parsimonious? We venture to say, without a moment's hesitation, that the very least any believer in the immediate advent of the Prince of glory should do, could not be less than all his annual income above a sum necessary for his own and family's support. Is this too much? Is this too high ground for such glorious truth as we have, and for its favored friends and votaries? Is this too much? Does the suggestion of an allotment of this magnitude for Christ and his word cause pain, or doubt, or an inward shrinking and displeasure? O, it is joy to do good, if we have means that we can spare; joy to give to the poor, especially Christ's poor. Jesus will say, "Ye have done it unto me." What a charmed delight, and glory of grateful joy, will these words spoken by Jesus in the day of account pour into the electrified mind! Then do good with your available means. Be not covetous. Be not painfully sensitive and timid on the subject. Do not let us feel frightened at the thought of giving. Let not avarice, but love and liberality dominate.

READING ROOMS.

In our humble estimation, the intelligent christian, looking for the kingdom to appear, and appreciating in any just degree the unspeakably ominous state of the world, must exceedingly desire to know and observe the fulfillment of God's prophetic word in providence and among the nations. Interesting and valuable are judiciusly selected aids to the constant and prompt acquisition of knowledge in regard to passing events, in the light of prophecy. And we would venture to suggest that in every neighborhood where there is a company of christians rejoicing in the blessed omens of the nigh consummation, a reading-room would be an excellent auxiliary to the right kind of instruction. The current news of the day is a commentary on prophecy. The daily developments in the direction which God's Spirit has fore-signified, keep alive the believer's hope. He knows in some good measure what must come to pass; he sees also what, in harmony with the word, does come to pass. He detects with sometimes almost unutterable emotions the process and progress of those changes that loudly proclaim and immediately precede the looked-for glory. He observes the various phases of evil, the subtle and desperate devices, and the madly ambitious enterprises of Beelzebub and his minions. Special features in the great development of compacting ungodliness, he notes with a watchful eye. He is alive with eager interest in tracing the correspondence of the event to the prophecy. He is in sympathy with God's purposes, and the wonders of his glorious Providence. He stands on an eminence, and is a witness of the marvels of the last great epoch of this probation. On one hand he holds the chart, the map, the divinely inspired outline; on the other he sees the territory and transactions in accordance with the celestial, prophetic topography. What an honor to live, to look, to watch, and also to serve, in this sphere of wonders.

In many villages and neighborhoods, a little room might be provided, where, in addition to the best papers devoted to the exposition of prophetic subjects on America, might be placed a copy of "Purdon's Last Vials," "Baxter's Signs of Our Times," and other English periodicals. The intelligent and Bible-instructed reader will also be glad to glance at a copy of such secular papers perhaps as the "N. Y. Times," the "Imperialist," the "Catholic World," and perhaps even the "Banner of Light." The object of reading these publications last mentioned is to keep continually posted in the progress and aspect of every religious or infidel system. "To be forewarned is to be fore-armed." We are moving at a terrible speed toward a colossal formation and confederation of iniquity. The locomotive of progress is drawing the nations along Satan's selected highway to perdition. Twenty or thirty dollars a year, which might be contributed without serious sacrifice perhaps, would secure a supply of papers which would furnish a vast amount of information in regard to the drift of current events. And with all this, let the Bible be remembered and read as the great source and centre of light. It is a luminary of the purest and most powerful radiance. Through it, as through a microscope, we can survey the nearest and minutest events. Like a telescope also, it serves to bring near the more distant affairs of earth. As a mirror, it exposes its spotless and perfect surface, in which the works of God and man may be seen, and scanned and measured. Thank God for the volume of prophecy, a sure and certain word, an exalted and precious boon in our day; and in the face of the coming cloud of trouble, pregnant with storm, while the chariot of glory in which our King is seated, comes quickly along in majesty and splendor.

THE COMING STRUGGLE IN EUROPE.

That war is imminent in Europe seems to be very generally expected, while many may venture to hope that it may be averted. Forlorn and mistaken imagination! The war, we feel assured, must inevitably and quickly come. The parties to this terrible conflict are understood to be probably France and Prussia, with or without their respective allies. That these will be the principal combatants, there is hardly room for doubt. Both are first-class powers; both possess immense military resources, armies drilled and disciplined, with the most cunningly devised implements of destruction that modern art and enterprise can produce. Both are mutually watchful and jealous. Both are intensely ambitious of empire, and in the view of some the balance of power is delicately poised between them. Prussia is tersely said to be Bismarck, and France Napoleon. There is no doubt that this Bismarck has, in a manner, crossed the Emperor's path, and that he in a measure blocks his aggressive ambition and embarasses his schemes of dominion. Nay, this German obstructs the latter-day rise of Latinism, and the empire of the Latin race, on which the French imperial heart is believed to be set. Now, as to the result of this grapple of Titans, we feel perfectly confident. Prophetically, we understand that France, and the Latin kingdoms possibly confederate with her, will check and defeat the Prussian. This is evident from Daniel 2, and 10, if we do not misapply the prophecy. By the "willful king" we understand the Napoleon dynasty. And this marked prophetic character is to overflow and pass over, and enter also into the glorious land; to wit, Judea, and so rapidly prepare the way for the re-colonization of the Jews in that land, in unbelief, while this deceived Israel restored, with disastrous and infatuated error of faith, hail in him their Messiah. If the verse quoted does apply to the war in hand, then the king of the north makes the onset. Railroads, steam iron-clads, and horse artillery, go to compose the "ways and means" of the assault "like a whirlwind," dictated by the fiercely impetuous Bismarck. A very cunning item of Napoleonic policy will be such a menacing manœuvre as to draw down upon him the exasperated Prussian. Thus the onus of aggressive war is thrown on the northern power.

Aside from the prophetic record, we infer the success of France, from the superiority of certain concealed implements of war, understood to be, in part at least, the product of Napoleon's inventive study. If there are in his possession sundry mechanisms, in the way of artillery, that can demolish regiments and divisions, either at long or short range, then the world will find occasion for "wonder" at the prowess and achievements of Louis Napoleon. When this victory is won, the fate of Europe is linked with the will and ambition and dominion of the Bonaparte. The northern rival being demolished, Europe is prepared for a coming confederation of kingdoms—a confederation designed and adapted in great measure to dominate the world, not excepting the United States. And when the bugle sounds the march of the hostile legions, then, lo! the beginning of the end is come. The day of wonders has advanced. Mark, O christian, the meaning of this shock of arms, and the solemnity of the terrible moment that brings into collision the prophet Daniel's giants of the last days. The day of trouble, of judgment, and also of the glory of God in the kingdom of that glorified Lamb of God is at the door. And as the reverberation of the dreadful war of battle crosses the mighty deep, let us take warning of the pregnant issues of this prophetic conflict. May God in mercy arouse a dormant church, magnetized into illusive and misty dreaminess by the greatly mistaken and popular interpretation of God's word. Wake, O world! wake, O church! wake! wake! ere it is too late.

IS NAPOLEON ANTICHRIST?

We have canvassed this subject, carefully, we think, and while ever wishing to beware of precipitation, and to avoid rash and unwarranted conclusions, and dogmatism in assertion, we can truly say that an expectation, or a conviction entertained for years, is to-day unshaken, and in answer to the question above we confidently say,—so we believe. It is scarcely within the range of a reasonable doubt. This Napoleon third is the man. This Bonaparte revived is the apocalyptic therion that just precedes in developement the descent of heaven's mighty messenger to crush the hydra that has afflicted and cursed for ages, and shall for a moment envelope the world. And in view of this startling reality, we are constrained to confess a kind of sad surprise that it is not very largely recognized among our Brn., but on the contrary by a considerable number of them resolutely and perseveringly denied. We are sorry for this, because of the preciousness and importance of truth, and the deep and pressing significance of the imminent compact of evil, and its prophetic apostate head-ship. If our brethren still cry nay! to our shout of the coming peril, we can but resolutely hold on our course in trying to pre-monish the church of her organizing foe. When prophecy tells us of the stupendous clash, the monstrous organized intensification of evil force, comprehended in such terse and alarming language as the "great day of God Almighty," when Jesus shall presently overcome and consume the mightiest host in battle array that earth ever saw, we can feel a motive to watch the crystalizing forms and powers of evil. Of that evil, we believe and insist that Napoleon third is to be the apostate official, ecclesiastico-secular head. The day is near. It is the time of preparation now. Inexpressibly vast issues are at stake. Beelzebub is busy. Let us not slumber. Church of Christ, be on thy guard. We shall continually advert to this theme of thrilling and speechless interest. Brethren, let us be candid and teachable. Let us not feel determined to maintain our prepossessions at all hazards, if they are really defective. May both the Spirit and Providence of God instruct us.

THE MILLENNIAL REIGN.

"And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years."—Rev. 20: 4.

Three inquiries arise from this text.

1st. Who are those that are said to have lived and reigned with Christ?

2nd. How will they reign with Christ?

3d. Are the thousand years literal or symbolical time?

As to the first inquiry, an answer can be found in the verse whence the quotation is taken, which reads thus: "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." Then those who live and reign with Christ are those to whom judgment is given, which includes not only the martyrs, but all that fear God, both small and great. The resurrection of the martyrs is mentioned to define the character of the resurrection, and not to restrict it to them; for the Revelator immediately adds, "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."—vers. 5, 6.

Thus those who have no part in the resurrection with the martyrs, will be exposed to "the second death"; so the mention of their resurrection defines this as the resurrection of the just. For the apostle Paul, who was one of those who were beheaded, said in view of his martyrdom, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also which love his appearing."—2 Tim. 3: 6–8.

This clearly proves that the martyrs, and all the saved, receive their reward at one and the same time, namely, at the personal appearing of Christ, and so proves that the millennium cannot commence before then. And to this agrees the word recorded in chap. 11: 15–18,—"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever. . . . And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the timo of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them that destroy the earth."

It will be remembered that "the souls" seen "under the altar" cried, saying, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?"—chap. 5: 10. In the previous quotation the time of their avengement is brought to view, as at the sounding of the last trump, when these souls will live again; and as this is when all God's servants are rewarded, the living of these souls can only be by a resurrection of the dead at Christ's coming. Hence, when John says, "I saw thrones, and they sat on them, and judgment was given unto them," it is judgment in their favor, and against their enemies, when the Lord comes.

Second, they will reign on thrones of judgment. For these, and those that were beheaded, who had not "worshiped the beast [Catholic imperial Rome], nor his image [Papal Rome], neither had received his mark in their foreheads [the Ash-Wednesday mark of the cross], nor in their hands" [the mark given to the bishops of Papal Rome]. it is said "they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." In the address to the Laodiceans, Christ says, "Him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."—chap. 3: 21. So not till the resurrection can any one overcome as Christ did, and cannot reign until then. And they will reign on thrones of judgment, and be associated with him in the judgment against the wicked, that reign ending with the destruction of all the resurrected wicked by the second death, when the thousand years are finished.

Third, the thousand years is literal time. For if the first and second resurrections are literal, the thousand years must also be literal time. But if the resurrections are symbolical, the time must be also symbolical, and so each day would symbolize a year, making three hundred and sixty thousand years; which would make it necessarily in the future, in either case. But this assuming that things are to be understood as symbolical, in the absence of any evidence from the Scriptures, is making an interpretation to rest on one's own ipsi dixit, and does away with the inspired rule—"No prophecy of the Scriptures is of any private interpretation." Because there is symbolical language used in that chapter, it by no means follows that this is; and unless language can be proved to be symbolical, in any given case, we have no right to assume that it is such. And there is no evidence of it in this case, and so the time and the resurrections divided by the time are literal.

But it is said that certain passages conflict with this view, and 'Dan. 12: 2 is cited as one. The most critical translation of this passage, by such scholars as Professors Bush and Whiting, reads thus: "And many of the sleepers in the dust of the earth shall awake; these to everlasting life, and those to shame and everlasting contempt." Here the dead are divided into two classes; those who wake unto everlasting life, at the time when Daniel's people are delivered; and the unawakened, or remainder that sleep on, destined to awake after this time. For, when it is said, "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," it has reference to their waking up at the time stated in the preceding verse. And the many of them that sleep, etc., subtracts many from the whole, and leaves some unawakened; and those that do then awake are said to awake to everlasting life—"these to everlasting life."

The phrase, "these to everlasting life," implies that they will awake to life; and so the phrase, "and those to shame," etc., implies that they will wake to shame, which justifies the following paraphrase: "And many of the sleepers in the dust of the earth shall awake" at the time specified; "these," who awake then, "to everlasting life"; and those who do not then awake, shall afterward awake "to shame and everlasting contempt."

Paul gives the order of the resurrections, and says, "They that are Christ's" will be raised at his coming, which clearly implies that the remainder will be raised afterwards, and thus justifies the interpretation here given to Dan. 12: 2. And since the Revelator separates them by an interval of a thousand years, we ought to accept a plain declaration, rather than an inference which contradicts this plain testimony. But we are told that Paul taught that the wicked are to be "punished with everlasting destruction," "when he [Christ] shall come to be glorified in his saints" (2 Thess. 1: 9–10), and that, therefore, their destruction by the second death cannot take place a thousand years after he comes. But Christ is to be specially glorified in his saints during the millennium, for they are to reign with him during this period, and the reign is that of judgment on the wickedness of the wicked. "Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world?" said Paul to the Corinthian church; "and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?"

But how can they judge, unless there is some investigation made into the sins of the wicked? And will not this take up the thousand years, when the apostles "shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," as Christ said they should? And if they, and all his saints, are to be associated with him in the judgment, will not this be the special glorification spoken of by Paul, when the wicked shall be punished with everlasting destruction; that is, at the end of Christ's judgment reign of a thousand years? We read in verse 7, that "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on those that know not God"; and the Greek words rendered "taking vengeance on," are—disousin ekdikesin, which literally means, giving judgment against. And the judgment then rendered, or given against them, they are to pay afterward; for we read in the same connection, in v. 9, "Who shall pay judgment with everlasting destruction . . . . when he shall come to be glorified in his saints." See "Emphatic Diaglott.

So the judgment rendered against them when he is revealed from heaven, they are to "pay" after he comes back to earth; for the heavens are to receive him till the times of the restitution of all things, etc.; and since all the living wicked are to be destroyed in the day when the Son of man is revealed (Luke 17: 29–30), to pay judgment with everlasting destruction when he comes, involves their resurrection after the day when he is revealed, when he shall come back to earth in its recreated condition. So the adverb "when" applies to the time when he is to be glorified in his saints; which applies in a special manner to the millennial reign.

"When the Son of man comes in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." Matt. 25: 31–32. When he sits upon the throne of his glory, the apostles are to sit with him on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel; but this judgment reign can not continue for ever; and since some are to reign with Christ a thousand years, and since they can not reign with him till he comes back to earth, and they overcome, as he did, by a resurrection from the dead, the time when he sits upon the throne of his glory can not but be the millennial reign. And since his sheep are rewarded first, they will get their reward at the resurrection of the just at Christ's appearing, while the wicked will receive their reward at the end of the millennium; for the Revelator says, "The rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished."

This thousand years interval between the resurrection of the just and unjust can not be set aside by any Scripture evidence, for there is nothing therein that conflicts with it directly. We can assume that certain passages conflict therewith by deducing certain inferences from the language, which may be understood to conflict with it; but no positive evidence can be found to disprove that there is to be such an interval. Because "the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of condemnation," this does not prove that they will all be raised in an hour of sixty minutes. The apostle John wrote and said, "Little children, it is the last hour; and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last hour." See Greek Testament of 1 John 2: 18. And if "the last hour" covers all the time from then till the present, why should not the hour, in which all that are in the graves are to come forth, cover a lesser period of a thousand years? There is a much greater propriety in interpreting this in harmony with the thousand year interval between the first resurrection and the second, than in interpreting in opposition thereto. For if the resurrections are literally understood, the years are also literal. But if the resurrections are symbolical, then the years are likewise, and so would symbolize three hundred and sixty thousand years; each day of the thousand symbolizing one year.

Besides, if we assume this to be symbolical, there is no rule in the Scriptures for their interpretation, but leaves it subject to the caprice of the individual who may think himself specially qualified to give an unauthorized interpretation thereof. We are commanded to "prove all things," and to "hold fast that which is good"; and in the absence of all proof that these resurrections are to be figuratively understood, we are bound to accept them as literal, and thus believe in the thousand years interval between them. And then instead of trying to find objections to this inspired testimony concerning them, we can do better by understanding every other scripture with reference to this plain testimony.

WM. HOBBS.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT.

19. God tempts men.—"And it came to pass that God did tempt Abraham."—Gen. 22: 1. "And again the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he moved David against them to say, Go number Israel and Judah."—2 Sam. 24: 1. "O Lord, thou hast deceived [marginal reading, enticed] me, and I was deceived [enticed]."—Jer. 20: 7. "Lead us not into temptation."—Matt. 6: 13.

God tempts no man.—"Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man."—James 1: 13.

In Gen. 22: 1, it declares that "God did tempt Abraham." It is the preface to the history of God's trial of his faithful servant, and the word which is translated tempt is the Hebrew word "nah sah," and the literal rendering of it is, "to try, to prove any one,—to put him to the test." [See "Gesenius' Hebrew Lexicon," page 676.] Hence God tested Abraham and the patriarch's faith was proved to be as bright as molten gold. The fiery trial only served to purify and strengthen his faith in the living God, and the record still burns upon the sacred page in all its ancient beauty—a glorious example for God's children in all ages.

The next text under consideration is 2 Sam. 24: 1, and this is grossly misrepresented; the Bible reads, "and he [Satan, see margin,] moved David," so it was Satan and not Jehovah that moved David to number Israel. Cannot the skeptic see the difference?

The word rendered "deceived or enticed" in Jer. 20: 7, is "pah tha," which Gesenius defines thus, "to persuade any one," and refers to this very text as an illustration of the term. Hence the passage in question might be literally rendered "Thou hast persuaded me, and I was enticed." [See Gesenius, page 875. The text "Lead us not into temptation" is thus translated by McKnight, "Abandon us not to temptation." And this surely gives a correct idea of the verse in question.—Hence we repeat, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God."

20. God cannot lie.—"It is impossible for God to lie."—Heb. 6: 18.

God lies by proxy: he sends forth lying spirits to deceive.—"For this cause God shall send them strong delusions, that they should believe a lie."—2 Thess. 2: 11. "Now, therefore, behold, the Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and the Lord hath spoken evil concerning thee."—1 Kings 23: 22. "And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet."—Ezek. 14: 9.

None of the texts quoted above implicate God in a falsehood.

The facts are, that God permitted certain things to be done, which resulted in judgments upon the sinful. He permits strong delusion to come upon those who reject his truth, as in 2 Thess. 2: 11. And in the case of the king who would not believe God's prophets, we find that lying spirits were allowed to fill the mouths of the prophets of Ahab. Not, indeed, that God sanctioned lying, but as Ahab had rejected his truth, and would not receive his prophets, therefore lying spirits were permitted to lead him to certain destruction. It must, however, be borne in mind, that from the 19th to the 24th verse, is a recital of a vision of the prophet, and not by any means to be understood literally. It is true that God is represented in the Bible as doing things, which he only permits, this, however, is common to Scripture phraseology. In Matt. 8: 32, the Lord Jesus is represented as commanding the herd of swine: "and he said unto them, go." Now, if we consult the preceding verse we shall perceive that the devils had first actually "besought him;" therefore, the expression, go, was used merely to signify his compliance with their earnest request, and, therefore, was used purely permissively. See Dr. Sleigh's Def. Dic.

21. Because of man's wickedness God destroys him.—"And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually . . . . And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created."—Gen. 6: 5, 7.

Because of man's wickedness God will not destroy him.—"And the Lord said in his heart, I will not again curse the ground for man's sake; for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth; neither will I smite any more every living thing."—Gen. 8: 21.

There is not even a semblance of error here, for Gen. 6: 5, 7 shows that God will destroy the wicked. But Gen. 8: 21 is promise that God will curse the ground no more, nor destroy every living thing. This does not say, however, that he will no more destroy the wicked, for he could easily destroy the sinners of earth without destroying every living thing. Skeptics should be more careful and not wrest the Scriptures, not contradict their own ideas of language and good sense, for they claim to be models of consistency.

DISCUSSIONS.

The Lord willing, we are to have a discussion with Dr. Houghton (Spiritualist), at Norwalk, Ohio, commencing Tuesday evening, May 25th, to continue through the week. Will preach Sabbath, May 30th, as arranged by Bro. G. W. Stetson.

Also a discussion at Edenboro, Pa., with Bro. Townsend (Methodist), to commence Tuesday evening, June 1st, and continue through the week. Will preach Sabbath, June 6th, as Bro. Jonas Wendell may arrange.

SR. COUCH.

It was our sad privilege to attend the funeral of Sr. Couch, in Concord, Wednesday, May 12th. Bro. A. Ross preached the funeral sermon. In the death of Sr. Couch the church has lost a valuable member. We buried her in the pleasant cemetery, with strong assurance that she will sleep but a short time. Bro. Couch has been wonderfully sustained by the Lord in his deep affliction. Pray for him. As we expect an obituary notice for the paper, we will forbear to say more.

A GOOD ADMISSION.

In a lecture before the "Free Religious Association," in Horticultural Hall, Boston, April 4th, 1869, Mr. Ralph W. Emerson stated, as reported in the Boston Journal, "that the bird and the dog reason as truly as does the hunter, though within narrower limits."

It is no more wonderful that our Creator should organize matter so that it is capable of thinking, than it is that he should make it susceptible of feeling pain from a wound. It is as wonderful to see matter so organized as to form a dog, capable of loving his master, following the fox across lots, through swamps and forests, by the scent left in his track, as it is to behold the results of a higher order of organized matter in the human brain. He who says our Creator cannot organize matter so that it can feel and think, must be determined to believe in a theory opposed to facts and reason; and plunge headlong into a labyrinth of blind speculation, where the light of truth is not allowed to enter. If our theological creeds are all spoiled, let us hold fast to the Scriptures of truth, when they are in harmony with well-known facts connected with the nature of man. It is a source of much comfort to find the Bible in harmony with all true philosophy, science, facts, reason, and common sense. It makes us feel that we are on rock bottom. The floods of infidelity have no effect when they dash against this solid foundation, having Christ for the cornerstone.

THE NEXT POPE.

It is a matter pretty well settled in the public mind that Lucien Bonaparte will be the next Pope of Rome. Should this event take place, Napoleon III. may be considered as the real power at Rome—the controlling spirit. We think he has sought this as an important point to be gained, in order to secure the highest possible authority.

Matthew Hale Smith [known as "Burleigh" in the correspondence of the Boston Journal,] writing from Rome, March 29th, 1869, says:

"The early stream of carriages to the church indicates that something is expected. The elegant and brilliant coaches of the Cardinals roll up in a constant stream. One of the most brilliant, with a gold coat of arms on the hammer cloth, in which the Cardinal's hat blends with the French eagle, attracts attention. It is said the coach and turn-out was a gift from the Emperor of the French. The polite coachman—proud of it—will tell you that he drives 'Cardinal's Bonaparte's coach'—the next Pope, if there is to be another—so the people here believe."

A NEW BABYLON.

In the Prophetic Times, edited by Dr. Seiss, Philadelphia, is an article on "Babylon," in which the editor says:—

"Babylon the great, then, doubtless includes the papal system. But, with the decline of the Romish power, we can detect a new phase of the same old Babylon rising into greatness, and about to demand supremacy in the earth. We refer to that form of dominion developed especially now in Protestant nations, which is, if possible, a still more artful substitute for the coming kingdom. It is the kingdom of worldly culture, and civilization, and scientific progress, and inventive art, which is rapidly accumulating its resources, and preparing to effect the promised regeneration without any such intervention as the appearing and kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. It proposes to disenthrall and elevate mankind by free institutions and social reforms. It promises to subsidize and apply all material forces to promote the prosperity and happiness of men. It is the kingdom of modern civilization, about which so much boast is made, even by men who profess to be christians, and who ought to know that the coming regeneration cannot be effected in that way. For it ignores the necessity of a new birth of the Spirit and the power of the resurrection of Jesus. It is, after all, another attempt to permanently improve and exalt man on the basis of his fleshly, natural life, which all Scripture denounces as corrupt, and which all past experience proves incapable of such improvement."

"SCIENCE IS GOD'S GOSPEL."

The heading of this article is the saying of one who is following the teachings of the spirits. The sentiment expressed is becoming a popular one, and is spreading rapidly. The Bible is laid aside, and science is taken as a substitute. The spirits and their followers are making great efforts to overthrow the word of the Lord; but we expect more earnest conflicts are yet to come. The christian who gives up all to Jesus has nothing to fear; but the lukewarm, half-hearted professor will become an easy prey to the enemy. Truly the christian's life is a warfare, but it is good fighting; it brings peace and joy. Every true christian soldier has the assurance that He who is for him is more than all who can be against him. He is sure of a triumphant victory at last.

So far as science is concerned, we may be certain of one thing: no truth in science or philosophy will clash with any truth revealed in the word of the Lord. It is only the false philosophy put forth by the spirits and some would-be philosophers, that clashes with the Bible. When the blazing light of God's truth shines upon it, you can see its hideous deformity, as it is only a system of fables concocted by Satan, and peddled by his followers. It is like a sugar-coated pill filled with arsenic. It may look well at first, but a slight examination shows it to be only a poison concealed. Many are being led astray by the bold advocates of this Satanic philosophy. The following is a sample of the teaching of these philosophers:—

"The boast of Christianity is that it is able to give man a consciousness of a life hereafter, because Christ rose from the dead. Upon the fact of Christ's resurrection are based all its hopes. Paul says to the Corinthians:

'If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain.'

Without this the whole Christian fabric falls to the ground. Now we know (said the lecturer) by the truths of Nature and the operation of her laws that the body of Jesus Christ never rose from the ground."

From a speech of Prof. Wm. Denton, at Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., Mar. 30th, 1869, in commemoration of the twenty-first anniversary of Modern Spiritualism.

When speaking of the future of Spiritualism, and the work which it proposes to do, Mr. Denton goes on to say, as reported in the "Banner of Light":—

"Spiritualism is . . . the ordained of God. I see her in the future as an angel of glory; with the lamp of truth in her hand, she traverses the dark places of earth, flashing the light into the doors of the churches, and bidding the bats and owls of error follow the old hag superstition, as she flies from the path of that golden radiance."

This attack on Christianity is from one of the most popular lecturers on Spiritualism and science, which he would have us take as a substitute for the Christian religion. The whole system, as advocated by the Professor, may be properly called the Devil's religion.

"THE IMPERIALIST."

We have given our readers the "Prospectus" of the "Imperialist," a weekly paper, published at 37 Mercer St., New York, by "The Imperial Publishing Company." Price $5 for one year. The first No. was published April 10th, 1869. On the first page is a vignette of a triple crown, with a cross on each of the two upper portions; the main body of the crown is ornamented with thirty-six stars. On one side of the crown is the saying of Napoleon III.,—"THE EMPIRE IS PEACE"; on the other side, the saying of Gen. Grant,—"LET US HAVE PEACE." The "Imperialist" is the organ of the "T. C. I. O." If any one can give us any information as to the signification of that secret order, will they please do so? Some expressions in the paper would lead one to think it sustained the Roman Catholic interest. Napoleon III. may be the prime mover in the enterprise. The tone of the Imperialist is bold, firm, not blustering, but speaks as though it was sustained by a strong arm, and feared no opposition that might arise. We shall watch its progress with interest. It is ominous of coming events, and advocates what we have been expecting for years. It is said to be patronized by high officials in the American government. It is bold to declare that the time has come to prepare to change the Republic to a Monarchy.

We clip the following from its columns:—

"The Irish Citizen comes out fairly and openly in favor of Imperialism in America. In the last issue of that journal, Mr. Mitchell remarks: 'After all, so thoroughly do we agree with The Imperialist in one point—the shameful failure of our democratic government—that we would even contemplate with complacency a long and wasting civil war, in the hope of at last fishing up an Emperor out of an ocean of blood.' There is no fear that a civil war will follow the great event to which we look forward with such anxious expectancy. There is little true manhood left in America, and such as there is would not array itself on the side of democracy in the event of a struggle. But even if this were not so, we shall revolutionize the government too rapidly and surely to admit of much resistance from the mob; and when the hour has struck, democracy, with all its attendant evils, will have passed away for ever."

"General Grant has carried out his previously announced purpose of appointing Quakers to manage our relations with the Indian tribes. Beyond the transactions by which Penn and his followers juggled the Tuscaroras out of their land, the Quakers have had no dealings whatever with the Indians. On the other hand, the Catholic priests have never failed to win the confidence, not only of the American savages, but also of every barbarous tribe with which they have come in contact. After the Indians have scalped the Quakers, it might be worth while for Grant to try what result a few courageous devoted priests could accomplish as peacemakers between the savages and the somewhat less civilized frontier settlers."

We think all must see at a glance that the advice to General Grant does not come from Protestants. They would not recommend him to send "Catholic priests" to treat with the Indians.

TO THE T. C. I. O.

As will be seen by the 'Official Gazette,' published in another column, The Imperialist has been designated as the official organ of the T. C. I. O. There is no longer any need of concealing the existence of that organization, and hereafter its members will find many of its decrees and military orders in the Gazette.

To the officers and members of the T. C. I. O., we return our warmest thanks for the support which they have extended to this journal. In the face of the opposition made to it by the news-dealers of this city, it would have been extremely difficult to have secured its delivery in the inland towns and villages, had it not been for the C. and M. C., of this and other Provinces.

Until we have perfected arrangements for distributing The Imperialist through the regular newspaper channels, our friends can supply themselves with copies by applying to the C. and M. C. to which they may belong. Those who wish back numbers are informed each issue of The Imperialist is printed from stereotype plates, and copies of any number will always be furnished on application to the publishers."

The following is from the columns of the "Official Gazette" department of the paper:—

"T. C. I. O.

By special license, issued April 14, 1869, The Imperialist has been designated as the official journal of the T. C. I. O. All civil decrees and military orders requiring publicity will hereafter be found in The Imperialist.

HEADQUARTERS T. I. O.

33. 18. 5. Is ordered to assume command of the Second Consular Army, until further orders.—T. I. O.

41. 1. 30. Is ordered to take command of the province of Ohio, and is authorized to exercise free pro-consular powers within that province until further orders.—T. I. O.

Pro-consuls are hereby ordered to forward no more communications by mail, but to employ trustworthy messengers for the conveyance of all documents or communications. Any violation of this order will subject the delinquent officer to censure, and a repetition of the offence will be followed by his retirement. By order, T. I. O.

Official. 26—Scroll 4.
Secretary T. I. O."

It will be seen from the foregoing that the 'T. C. I. O.' is a secret military organization, of wide extent, well disciplined, speaking with much authority, indicating a firm purpose, with strong power to execute when the hour of action arrives. Is it not time for people to begin to open their eyes and look about themselves, and inquire where are we, and what is coming next?

Careless, sleeping, christian soldier, arouse from thy slumber, and put on "the whole armor of God," lest the enemy bind thee in his fatal chains and drag thee to perdition. This is the hour for brave soldiers of the cross to prove themselves true to the Captain of our salvation. The last great conflict is at hand. Remember Jesus says: "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

ANGELS.

BRO. GRANT:—In studying the nature of angels, I have long since concluded that they were tangible beings, resembling men in their exterior form, and I find in my investigations that the Scripture evidence in support of this conclusion is abundant; but I am perplexed with the case of "Mary called Magdalene, out of whom went seven devils." Luke 8: 2. For the sake of information, I inquire, Were these seven devils tangible beings, each the size of man? If not, what were they? I sometimes meet with Spiritualists, who bring forward Mary's case as an objection to my position. How shall I answer them?

C. H. WILLIAMS.

All the spirits and Spiritualists, so far as we know, admit and claim that the spirits operate just as a mesmerizer does. When a mesmerizer is in his subject, causing him to perform strange things, he is not in him personally, but by a mesmeric influence; in the same way the legion of demons were in the man mentioned in Luke 8: 3, and the "seven" in Mary Magdalene. In order to cast a mesmerizer out of his subject, it is necessary to destroy his magnetic power over him; so, to cast a demon, or demons, out of their mediums, a power stronger than theirs is necessary to break up and remove the magnetic influence; this greater power was in Jesus and the apostles; and may be possessed by all true christians; as John says, "Because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world."—1 John 4: 4.

Our heavenly Father dwells in his children by his Holy Spirit, on the same principle that the demons dwell in their mediums. Christians are temples for the Holy Spirit; and "if any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy."

PARIS SOCIETY.

The foreign correspondent of the Boston Journal, under date of April 8th, 1869, writes:—

"Paris has been unusually gay the present season. There have not been days enough in the week for fashionable people to answer the demands made upon them. It is no uncommon thing for parties to attend three and four receptions of an evening. The rule allows visitors to go to entertainments at all times from ten to four. The ultra fashionables drift round of an evening from one place to another, and in the fashionable list the names appear as having graced each party with their presence. The rule here is to breakfast between twelve and one, to dine between seven and eight, to make visits of ceremony from ten to four, and go to bed the next day."

THOMAS K. BEECHER.—BRO. J. R. COOPER, Elmira, N. Y., writes:—"Mr. Beecher preaches here for the Congregationalists, but every Sunday evening he occupies the Opera House and large audiences attend. As far as I have heard him, I like him much. He stated in one of his sermons, that every time he wrote '1869,' he thought of the Lord's coming. The Orthodox ministers here, a few weeks since, voted him out of their Union meetings for the doctrine he teaches. He has larger houses than ever."

Thomas K. is the youngest brother of Henry Ward Beecher, and is an able preacher. May the Lord help him 'to declare all the counsel of God."

For the World's Crisis.

WHEN IS BAPTISM VALID?

A friend who has been troubled with the claim that baptism administered prior to a full understanding of the "gospel of the kingdom" is not valid, wishes my opinion on the subject. As others may be perplexed in a similar manner, I will give them the benefit of my brief reply. To begin with, those who trouble you on this point have false views of the kingdom, and would have you accept their perversion and misapplication of Scripture, before admitting you believe the gospel. In the next place, if they had the gospel of the kingdom, instead of a perversion of it, a perfect understanding of the theology of that gospel is not requisite to constitute baptism valid; if it were, those who were baptized under the Savior's own personal administration were incorrectly baptized; for the gospel of the kingdom was imperfectly understood even by the apostles before their baptism, and for a long time afterward. Notice the following defects in their understanding of the gospel of the kingdom.

1st. They looked for the kingdom to come "immediately," in their day.

2nd. They looked for the kingdom to come without the second coming of Christ.

3d. They looked for the kingdom to come without the resurrection.

4th. They looked for the kingdom to come without the judgment.

With this lack of understanding, they were baptized under divine sanction; and when they subsequently understood these points, or had more light, nobody stood ready to cry, Your baptism is not valid, because you did not then fully understand the gospel of the kingdom. That's a new kink.

For the World's Crisis.

TENT LABOR.

As the season has arrived (or nearly so) to commence work with the Maine Mission tent, perhaps it may not be improper to give a brief account of the labors of last season. I will therefore say that the work was commenced last season by Eld. J. A. Libby, and under his direction the tent was pitched in six different towns; namely, Green, Gloucester, Gray, Saccarappa, Barr Mills, and South Windham. In these towns there were in all eighty-four sermons preached, sixty-eight of which were by J. A. Libby, four by L. F. Cole, four by J. Whitman, two by E. M. Haggett, two by Wm. H. Mitchell, one by Peter Libby, one by Sister A. E. Smith, and one by Bro. Hampson. There were also many timely and fervent exhortations given; one baptism, and eight social and prayer-meetings. Bro. Libby closed his labors with the tent at South Windham, Aug. 19th, where we had very pleasant and interesting meetings of the season, the brethren and sisters having a "mind to work." The Free-Will Baptists, Methodists and Quakers were well represented at our meetings, and they seemed free and ready to work in a truly christian spirit. The people in this place have a peculiar faculty to make a stranger feel at home while with them; and furthermore, they can understand that it requires means to travel and labor with a mission tent in these times.

I next pitched the tent at Pittsfield, about one hundred and twenty miles from Windham, and labor again commenced the sixth of Sept., under the direction of Elder I. C. Wellcome. From Pittsfield we went to Rockland, Alna, Mt. Vernon, and Dixfield. In these towns there were eighty-five sermons preached. By I. C. Wellcome thirty-two, by C. Goud twelve, by F. A. Baker eight, by E. M. Haggett five, by S. Hall six, S. K. Partridge five, H. S. Mitchell three, Allen Damon three, J. Carr one, I. Damman one, Eld. Patterson one, I. K. Lombard two, J. Smith one, R. R. York one, T. Jordan one, A. Taylor one, H. B. Sevey two; and in connection with these were very many warm exhortations from ministers and others. There were also thirty-eight social and prayer-meetings, and one baptism. Many of those prayer and social meetings were especially interesting seasons. Three hours would frequently be spent in them.

During the month of September, and the first week in October, the season was very rainy, and our meetings were not so fully attended as they would otherwise have been. The labors for the season closed at Dixfield, where, on account of the inclemency of the season, the meetings were held in the Universalist house, which was kindly tendered us for the occasion. The tent was pitched during the season in eleven different towns, in which were preached one hundred and sixty-nine sermons, beside forty-six social meetings and two baptisms. In all these places much prejudice has been removed, and in all but one there is an open door for the true disciple of Christ to labor; and in every town where the tent has been pitched, there is an earnest desire to hear more.

We think the brethren in Maine have great reason, as did Paul when he saw the brethren come out to meet him at the Three Taverns, to "thank God and take courage." And now, from my brief experience, I would say that those who labor with tents will always feel the need of the united sympathy of the brethren and sisters, not only in furnishing means to defray expenses, but in their prayers to Almighty God that he may give wisdom, humility, meekness and patience to direct, that he may own and bless their labors. I am satisfied that, in some instances, the tent has been obliged to leave where they were laboring too soon, to fill other appointments, and suffered loss by not being able to stay and labor while there was an interest to hear. Going from place to place, creating an interest, then leaving for fear of wearing that interest down, is, to my mind, like a farmer working all the season to prepare the ground, and neglecting to put in the seed; in which case, he would not be likely to harvest much of a crop.

MEMPHIS MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—I write again to acknowledge the kind hand of the Lord in sending us here needed things and help. Truly he has kept us in remembrance, and not suffered us to despair in the midst of the most trying circumstances. We give him thanks always for his abundant love and care for us in this mission. We have friends by his direction, who are interested in our labors among the people, and are doing what they can to carry forward the work. Thanks to them also; and may their gifts be acknowledged by Him who is able to reward, and will, all who thus make a sacrifice for his cause.

The following has been received: A barrel of clothing and $3.00 from Sr. J. G. Hamblin, Boston, Mass. A barrel of clothing and $3.00 from the Advent church in Worcester, Mass. REPORT OF THE SECOND ANNUAL MEETING OF MASS. A. C. CONF.

Worcester, April 15th, 1869. Conference met agreeably to published call, and spent the forenoon in conference and prayer. It was a most precious season. Called to order at 12 M. for business. President in the chair. Brn. G. A. Streeter and E. McCullock were chosen a committee on membership. Brn. S. W. Thurber, S. Ayers, and W. F. Collier, were chosen a committee to arrange the order of business, and for preaching for the session. Adjourned to 4 P. M.

Met as adjourned, President in the chair.

Voted, That Brn. from abroad be invited to participate in our deliberations. Bro. A. W. Sibley was admitted a member of the conference. The report of the previous meeting was read by the Clerk.

Voted, That the four principal officers of the conference be chosen by ballot, singly. Adjourned.

Friday morn, 9 A. M. Met as adjourned, President in the chair. Prayer by A. Damman. Bro. L. H. Benson reported Brimfield church as being in the best condition in twenty-five years; union, peace and harmony prevailed. They were gaining ground and numbers. Bro. Addison Noble reported Westfield church as growing. Meetings held in north part of the town had resulted in great good. Bro. N. Shumway being called upon, spoke of the church in Danielsonville, Ct. It had been very weak the past few years; few additions; some were struggling for the kingdom, and some representatives in that kingdom would be from Danielsonville. Hoped for a shower of mercy soon. Did not propose to compromise with sin. Bro. Z. Ford reported labors. Had been in N. H., and spent some time in Suncook; some converted. Had been in E. Boston some. Bro. Levi Allen reported Chicopee Falls church. Commenced meetings two months ago. The prospect looked good. Numbers increasing. He expected to see sinners converted.

Bro. P. S. Butler had spent most of the time for the last three months in Wilbraham. Had been trying to do what he could. Hoped to see much good accomplished. Bro. S. W. Thurber reported his labors. He had spent seven weeks in Rochester, N. Y. Sixteen rose for prayers one night. Some forty arose for prayers in all. Left the church in a good condition. He had not in ten years left a place with such reluctance. Spent three evenings in Honeoye. Several were converted. Also at Knowlesville. One man wanted that kind of religion. He spoke of the protracted meetings in this State the past year. They had resulted in good. Was in Taunton, in the Christian meeting-house, three weeks. Some were converted. One man said there were forty converted. He hoped God would wake us up on the mission work. Spoke of a tent the conference might have if they desired, and of places where tent-meetings might be profitably held.

Sister Stoddard reported. People have no idea of the precious truths we have. Some infidels and Universalists had been converted. Hoped we should depend more on the Lord, and thought we ought to preach the coming of the Lord more. Bro. E. McCullock reported. No special interest in Savoy, but no schism. The work was onward. Bro. A. M. Higgins thought fourfold more fruit resulted from labors in new fields than in old ones.

The committee on membership reported the following members: PREACHERS, L. Boutell, E. Owen, S. W. Thurber, Geo. A. Streeter, E. McCullock, P. S. Butler, A. M. Higgins, A. Damman, D. O. Hopkins, A. W. Sibley; also Elds. J. T. Dixon, J. W. Brittain, Zina Ford.

DELEGATES: Worcester, W. F. Higgins, W. F. Collier, W. G. Ruggles, and Samuel Ayers; Brimfield, L. H. Benson; Westfield, A. Noble; Chicopee Falls, Levi Allen; Chelsea, G. W. Lane, John Marcus.

The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, S. W. Thurber; Vice President, A. M. Higgins; Secretary and Treasurer, P. S. Butler.

Ministerial Committee: L. Boutell, E. McCullock, E. Owen, S. W. Thurber, P. S. Butler. Protracted-meeting Committee: S. W. Thurber, Samuel Ayers, E. McCullock, G. A. Streeter.

Bro. G. W. Lane reported Chelsea church as in a flourishing condition. Bro. L. Boutell spoke of the cause generally. Truth was spreading. Never was there a better time than now for preaching it. People were ready to hear. Adjourned.

Friday, 3½ P. M. Met as adjourned. President in the chair. Bro. S. W. Thurber presented the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That we, as a conference, do believe, according to the fulfillment of prophecy and the signs spoken of by our Lord Jesus Christ, which are nearly all fulfilled, and the prophetic numbers of Daniel being nearly run out, that the end of all things is at hand, even at the door; and we recommend to our Brn. in the ministry, and to the churches, to promulgate this last truth to their utmost ability.

Resolved, That we tender to the church in Worcester our sincere thanks for their kind support of our annual conference; and we pledge ourselves, as a conference, to pray for them, that God may bless them in their labors of love, and give them a crown of life in his kingdom. Adjourned.

Resolved, That whereas the churches have been deficient in reporting to the conference, that we request them hereafter to report, either by sending delegates or by letter, quarterly.

Bro. Samuel Ayers reported the Worcester church in a prosperous condition. Some have been converted. A good work had been done in Charlton. Quite a number had been converted; a chapel had been built, and was ready for dedication. They had sent help to the missions at the South, and thought the church might raise two hundred dollars to help forward the mission work in this State the present year.

Bro. Edward Hough reported E. Douglas. Fifteen years ago there were but three members. God had blessed them. Numbers had increased to seventeen. Had but little preaching. Trying to deny themselves and serve God, so as to get into the kingdom.

Bro. A. Damman had been in Bristol, R. I., little more than half the time. Two converted and baptized. The work was going forward, and their numbers were increasing. He had labored in Fall River, and other places, with good success. Bro. Wood reported Fayville. He had just come out of the Baptist church. There were but few there that believed the truth. He was going to open his doors for meetings and have preaching.

Sr. Mary Otis had labored the past winter some in Charlton, Fall River, and Assonet Neck. The last was a hard field. It was the first preaching of the kind in that place. She labored a number of weeks. The Lord blessed. Some thirty were converted and reclaimed. She felt like laboring on, by the help of God. Bro. H. Munger had been at home all winter, and preached only Sabbaths, at Square Pond, North Somers, and Scitico. At the latter place the work was going well. A number waiting for baptism.

Sixty-five dollars were pledged to aid in carrying the truth into new fields in the State. The usual instructions were given the Clerk respecting copies for publication of these minutes, both in the "World's Crisis" and the "Voice of the West." Adjourned to the call of the President.

P. S. BUTLER, Clerk.

"THE BEREAN'S CASKET AND BELIEVER'S HELP."

This is a work which we have compiled and are about to put in press, with the hope that it will supply a want among truth-hunters and teachers, not before met, as it furnishes material readily found, which has cost much labor and research to bring together. It contains some two hundred sections, each numbered, with appropriate headings, under which is grouped together the most clear, distinct and forcible passages of Scripture, from all parts of the Bible, on the subject selected, many of them in VARIOUS VERSIONS, without note or comment.

This arrangement classifies and places in the witness box some fifteen or twenty hundred inspired testimonies, legitimately given, and so spoken as to make each subject clear and plain, in Bible language, free from all opinions of men. The attributes and offices of God, of Christ, and the Holy Spirit, are shown; the nature, relation, duties and destinies of men are stated; the atonement and redemption brought out; the words of God, of devils, and of uninspired men are given; the prophecies, promises, and rewards, selected; the literal fulfillment of prophecies shown, and and those in future stated; and the times and signs of the first and second advents of Christ given. To the above are added tables of statistics, the population of the globe, of nations and chief cities; numbers of many sects, missions and mission works; of religious, infidel, fictitious and licentious publications; expenditures for rum and tobacco; and other items from the devil's ledger and day-books; with many other items of special interest to believers. This work involves much expense, but we intend it shall be such a work as the people will be anxious to possess. One brother proposes to take five copies at $5 each; but we propose to sell it at $1. 50, neatly bound in cloth. Should preachers want them in leather covers, for constant reference, and will so signify in season, we will have some so bound at $2 each to supply such demand.

I. C. WELLCOME.

PROPHETIC.

Throughout Europe one smells gunpowder. Thousands of men are working night and day, from the Seine to the Neva, in completing the engines of attack and defence. The arsenals are overflowing with means of destruction so terrible that the genius of hell seems to have presided over their creation. The fleets and rail-roads are ready for the transportation of armies, amounting to five or six millions of soldiers, commanded by illustrious chiefs, and eager for glory, honors, and slaughter. The time of words and compromises has past. The hour of deeds and radical settlements is struck, and the governments themselves, in spite of their caustic assurances of peace, cannot conceal any longer the solemnity of the situation and the imminence of war. And out of that war may come the Antichrist. Any day, then, Jesus may call for his waiting ones.—Prophetic Times.

Correspondence.

From Sr. L. W. Bragg.

BELOVED PILGRIMS IN THE LORD:—May the blessing of salvation, full and free, be ours to enjoy in Jesus' worthy name. Let us hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope, firm to the end, when mortality will be swallowed up of life eternal, where the glory is for all, and all are glad; yea; forever glad, with fullness of joy for evermore, without one dark wave to cross the peaceful breast. With this blessed, thrice blessed hope, and glorious prospect looming up before the eye of faith, we can well afford to suffer shame and contempt for Jesus' sake a very few days more, knowing that he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry. At the appointed time our change will come, when Jesus will be glorified in his saints, and be admired by all who believe. It was by faith Enoch was translated, for the good reason, before his translation he had this testimony, that his ways were pleasing to the Lord. Shall any of us think to get translation without this daily testimony of the Spirit? The sweet heavenly promise to us is, if the Spirit dwell in us which raised Jesus from the dead, that it will change our vile body and fashion it like his glorious body. This holy Spirit leads us, in opposition to the unholy spirit and customs of this present evil age of unbelief, where we shall not conform to this world in its lusts and fashions; but be transformed by the renewing of the mind, to the end "we may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God." Without this washing of regeneration, and the renewal of the Holy Ghost, we cannot know the things which are freely given us of God. He gives grace and glory and withholds no good thing from those who walk uprightly. Yea he will do more for us than we can ask or think. And though claiming the exceeding great and precious promises, we are partakers of the divine nature, and thus escape the corruption that is in the world through lust, and are enabled to stand in the evil day, and having done all, we shall stand complete at last, all clothed in the righteousness of Christ. Not of works lest any man should boast. We are not to live by bread alone, but by every word of God which is true and abideth forever; which declares "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever." This is contrary to the love of the world or the things of the world. If we do love the world, the love of the Father is not in us. Again, if any man "will be a friend of the world", he "is the enemy of God."

How important, then, that we separate ourselves from the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes and the pride of life, and let our breathing be only after God. O Lord, help me so to live, with all the dear saints, that we can exclaim with exceeding joy when Jesus comes, Lo, this is my God. I have waited for him and he will save me. I will rejoice and be glad in thy salvation. O praise the Lord for the salvation about to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

From a pilgrim in the gospel hope and love, L. W. BRAGG.

Lewiston, Me., April 22d, 1869.

From Bro. F. H. Burbank.

BRO. GRANT:—Last week I passed most of my time in my former field of labor, the highways and hedges of Philadelphia. My heart was made glad to find much fruit existing there, the result of the blessing of the Lord upon the labors of Srs. Helginson and Reeves and myself. Everywhere my reception was most hearty. The first words that escaped from the lips of blind Susan as I entered her room and made myself known, were, "Praise the Lord!" My response was "Amen." I could give "lots" of incidents, but time forbids; suffice it to say that I had a blessed visit of a week among the poor and the distressed. I have been home-sick ever since I left the mission work, and as I feel it my duty, most strongly, to return to it, I shall renew my labors in Philadelphia shortly, probably within six weeks. It is not my intention to open a Children's Home, but to labor as I did before I had the Home.

Srs. Helginson and Reeves will be co-workers with me, and we shall, with the help of the Lord, visit the sick, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, encourage the weary pilgrims, strengthen the young converts, reclaim the wanderers, and win as many as we can to Christ. I return to this field with some knowledge of its trials and difficulties, but feeling that the Lord says "Go," I do not hesitate to obey.

I have already signified to the people in those parts, and also to many of our own color, my intention, and but few endeavor to discourage—enough against it, however, to ward off the curse. I have engaged a couple of rooms of Sr. H. for my own home, at a rent of but seventy-five cents per week, furnishing them myself.

There is work enough to do in the highways and hedges of P. to keep me busy until Jesus comes. This kind of labor is my chief delight. God will sustain me in it.

May the Lord abundantly bless all the efforts that are being made in every place to win souls to Christ, and to do good to the needy. The poor we have always with us, and whensoever we will we may do them good. All are not called to the garrets and cellars, but some are, and the Lord makes me one of the number. For the present, my address is Box 4658, New York City. I desire your prayers, and the prayers of all who love Christ, that I may be guided by the Holy Spirit in my labors of love amongst the lowly; and may his grace sustain you at all times, that at last, with all the ransomed, we may be gathered into that rest remaines for which people of God.

From your affectionate Bro. in Christ,

New York City. F. H. BURBANK.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. M. E. STREETER, North Dana, Mass., writes:—"My dear brethren and sisters in Jesus, permit me to pen a few lines for your perusal in the dear, blessed, good paper, the Crisis. I thank God to-day that we are near the end of all things, and that soon the heavens will reveal the Son of God, and we shall meet him who once was crucified for us poor sinners, and behold the dear Father who gave up his Son to die for us, that we may live and share the glories of Eden restored. "O, hail, happy day," day of sweet release to all the weary ones of earth. How I long for that rest, sweet rest in Eden's fair and happy land. My heart is sad and sick, for I daily hear the groans of my dear suffering sister, who lies in such severe pain and distress, that it causes her to have many fits, and hard spasms and sinking spells. O how it pains our hearts to see her lie in such hard, excruciating pain, and not be able to relieve her deep distress. But soon all these mortal scenes will be over, and Jesus will make these poor perishing bodies like his. Glory, glory be to Jesus. Praise the Lord for such a hope as this.

Dear ones, I have a request to make to you all who love our dear Savior, and that is, will you be so kind as to pray for me? My health is declining. I am bloated so badly with the dropsy, that I am almost a burden to myself at times. My feet and limbs are so bloated that it is hard for me to get about and do my work, and take care of my dear sick sister. My heart, too, troubles me very badly, and I often fear that I shall be taken from my dear family and sick sister. It would be so hard for me to leave her in the care of any one else, or my dear family. I am not afraid to die; for Jesus has been in the grave, and blest its bed; but if it can please the dear Savior to hear prayer in my behalf, and make me more comfortable, so that I can take care of 'Sister Thera' and my dear ones, I hope to be spared to them. It is a source of bitter grief for my dear friends to see my health failing so fast. Dear ones, please give this more than a passing thought, and let us pray one for another, that we may be healed. The fervent prayer of the righteous avails much. My life and all are consecrated to God—'my talents, time and voice.' God bless you all. Soon we shall meet in glory to praise God forevermore."

Sr. S. Condell, Edwardsburg, C. W., writes:—"I have often read the Crisis with much pleasure, and I hope profit. I am a widow of over seventy years, brought up in England, but have lived many years in Canada. My father was a Baptist minister in England, some distance from London. He has been dead many years, waiting for this corruptible to put on incorruption, and this mortal to put on immortality. Oh may that glorious day soon arrive. May the kingdom of Christ soon come, and his will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

Dear Brother, I think the Crisis will never tire its readers, there is such a vast variety of what is good and profitable to all. The day of the Lord is near and hasteth greatly; and the anxious inquiry is to know who may abide the day of his coming, and who shall stand when he appeareth, for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap. What a searching process this will be. Well might the prophet inquire, 'Who shall be able to stand' when he appeareth? Only those whose robes have been washed in the blood of the Lamb, and have been living in obedience to the gospel precepts. May we, as a people who profess to take the inspired word solely as our guide, be found constantly searching the word as for hid treasure. We need it all the time to arm us against temptation and the sins which do so easily beset us. We should always bear in mind the words of the apostle, who says, 'For if these things be in you, and abound, he maketh you that you shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.' May it be our great aim to bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of him who has given us such exceeding great and precious promises in his word, that if obedient an abundant entrance will be ministered unto us into the everlasting kingdom."

Sr. Sophia Boles writes:—"I love to hear from the dear saints through the paper. I am glad there are some still willing to preach the gospel, although they may have to sacrifice home and friends for the truth's sake. The soon coming of Jesus, his reign on the earth, and the literal resurrection of the dead, have been very precious truths to me. O how I have loved them in years that are passed; but for a few months my faith has grown weak. I have been strongly tempted. "The waves have well nigh gone over me." As I look back over the past, the words of the poet come forcibly to my mind:

> "What peaceful hours I once enjoyed,
> How sweet their memory still;
> But they have left an aching void
> The world can never fill."

I often think of those dear saints who used to visit New Preston, filled with the Spirit of the Lord. O how much good their presence and their words of comfort and encouragement did us; but where are they now? Some of them sleep in Jesus—"blessed sleep," but how we miss them.

May the Lord have mercy upon us, in these days of peril and darkness, when iniquity abounds and the love of many is waxing cold. Dear brethren and sisters, those who have access to the throne of grace, do pray for unworthy me, that I may not be overcome with the evil that surrounds me, nor the evil in my own heart. My sincere desire is to do the will of the Lord, and my prayer is, "Cleanse thou me from secret faults," keep me humble, and fit me for a home in the kingdom with the dear saints of God when Jesus comes."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, May 13. The Times to-day has an editorial article on the rejected Alabama treaty wherein it is asserted that the Government of Great Britain, submitting to an arbitration on the question at all, conceded everything that was originally demanded or expected by the American people, and everything that it was possible to concede.

Later advices from Teheran report that about five hundred arrests of persons who participated in the recent religious riot have been made.

Vienna, May 14. On the occasion of the closing the Austrian Chambers to-day, the President congratulated the members that the situation of Austria had been greatly improved. He referred with pleasure to the conciliation of Hungary and the new laws which had been enacted on various subjects, and concluded by saying that the Emperor protecting, no peril menaces a constitution if its friends are faithful.

Madrid, May 14. In the Constituent Cortes today the session was mainly occupied in the consideration of the future form of government. Senor Presne, one of the leaders of the Republican party, made a long speech in support of his amendment looking to the formation of a federal republic.

Paris, May 14. Several electoral meetings were dispersed to-day, causing in some instances riotous proceedings. A number of Sergeants de Ville, were badly hurt. Many arrests have been made.

London, May 16. Telegraphic advices received to-night from Paris show that political agitation there has revived to-day and that the excitement is very great, especially in those sections of the city where the Liberal party is strongest. The authorities were taking extraordinary measures of precaution to prevent disorder, and at last accounts no trouble had occurred. A grand popular demonstration is to be made on Monday.

Madrid, May 15. The Cortes have rejected the amendment to the Constitution in favor of making Spain a federal republic.

The Galt Revival Movement.—Sir,—In writing from Galt for the information of the numerous readers of your excellent paper, I would say the work of God is still going on in our midst. The Rev. Mr. Smith is a man for the occasion. Notwithstanding all the attempts made in Galt and in Guelph to turn him aside from the great and noble work in which he is engaged with his whole heart, strength, and mind, he is not the least discouraged nor dismayed, but rises above all opposition in the strength of the Almighty arm that sustains him. He is hard at work every day and most of the nights of every week for the last six months, without ever being laid aside one day by indisposition or want of will. He has the certain conviction that God is working with him and by him in bringing many souls to Christ, and that is greater honor than the applause of men. Mr. Smith has formed a class for intending communicants, which is held once a week at two P. M. and at half-past seven P. M. These classes are very largely attended by young people who, for the first time, are anxious to make a public profession of their faith in Christ by remembering his dying love, according to his own dying command. There are a great many coming from the young man and woman to the aged sire, all ready and willing to take up their cross and bear their testimony for Jesus, and to the reality of the work of God in our midst.

Revival in Fergus, Ont.—Sir,—The people of this village and neighborhood are just now experiencing a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit, similar to that with which Galt has been lately blessed. The Rev. Mr. Smellie's church (E. P.)—the largest in the place,—has been literally crammed six evenings of the week, for three weeks past, by deeply interested audiences, a very large proportion of whom are now rejoicing in divine mercy. The country people have pressed in through all kinds of roads and weather, from long distances, and have carried with them the sacred influence of the meetings to their respective neighborhoods. The effect on the habits and feelings of the people is so marked, that this is regarded as the most important era in the village so far. It is impossible to form any anything like a correct estimate of the number who have apparently been brought to the enjoyment of the divine life through these meetings.—Cor. of Witness.

The Emperor of the French.—Louis Napoleon has just turned sixty-one. A Paris correspondent, in reference to the Emperor's health, writes: "I have been assured by good professional authority—by one constantly about the Emperor—that his life is just as good a one as that of any other man of the same age whose powers have been so severely taxed. Beyond suffering from his teeth and occasional headache, the Emperor enjoys good health. As far as such things can be known, the Emperor appears at the present time to be enjoying life, with all its cares and responsibilities, better than most men do at his age. He seldom fails to begin the day with state work; he receives more people privately than any sovereign ever did, Frenchmen as well as strangers, and drives out, reviews troops, hunts, shoots and goes through the painful ceremony of court balls and concerts with all the constancy of a martyr. Those who approach the sovereign say that he is as cheerful as ever; never very demonstrative nor very communicative—still with no change in his manner."

DOMESTIC.

A New Instrument of Death.—Several cases have recently occurred at New York and Brooklyn where windows have been pierced and persons shot by bullets without the usual noise incident to the discharge of a gun or pistol. A correspondent of one of the New York papers states that these bullets are not shot from air guns, as has been generally supposed, but that there is a new kind of gun now sold that somewhat resembles the old cross-gun, except that instead of the arrow or bullet being propelled by the elasticity of a bow, it is in this case accomplished by the equally forcible elasticity of an India rubber strap. A bullet placed in this gun and the strap being forcibly drawn back and then unloosened by a trigger, its sudden relaxation gives a force to the bullet but little inferior to the expansion of the suddenly released gases of gunpowder; and this can be done without any greater noise than is created by the bow-gun as its bow is released. If these statements are true, these weapons will prove very dangerous in the hands of assassins, as the absence of any report at the time of shooting will greatly facilitate the escape of the persons using them.

Passing Events.

☞ The accounts from Northern Vermont of cattle starvation, are fearful. One farmer has had six of his cows die of sheer starvation, and others have had to feed them on flour, potatoes, etc. Hay is $30 per ton; and the roads are so bad that it cannot be carried to the farms only in small bundles. In one town—Montgomery—on Tuesday, there was not as much food as would last the cattle two days.

☞ A steamer laden with arms and ammunition, which has been lying in the sound, steamed down New York bay yesterday. Rumors are afloat that she will sail for Cuba Monday next. The United States Marshal states that he knows nothing of the steamer, her movements or her destination.

☞ All the sovereigns of Europe have now contributed money to the monument that is to be erected at Trieste in honor of the Emperor Maximilian. The Sultan sent one thousand florins and the King of Italy two thousand.

☞ The Scheremtieff family in Russia recently gave the Imperial family an entertainment which cost a round hundred thousand roubles. Fountains of eau de Cologne were running in all salons through which the Imperial family passed.

☞ The States and Territories west of the Mississippi river have had grants of public lands for educational purposes to the amount of 22,000,000 acres—an area nearly two-thirds as large as the whole area of England and Wales.

☞ News from St. Petersburg states that the Russian Government has discovered the traces of an extensive Sclavonian Federal Republic. Many arrests have been made.

☞ A young lady in San Francisco recently killed herself by eating arsenic to beautify her complexion. She took too much one day and became a corpse.

☞ An escaped nun, Louise Renetts, from Nice, is creating quite a stir in the cities of Southern France by her lectures on what she saw and heard in an Italian convent. In Toulouse the police refused to grant her permission to lecture.

☞ The Royal Geographical Society of England is about to bestow one of its highest honors, the Victoria gold medal, upon Mrs. Somerville, for her work on physical geography, which is considered the best extant on that subject.

☞ The principal merchants of Paris, at a meeting held for the purpose on April 18th, agreed unanimously to close their establishments on Sundays.

☞ Illinois fruit growers will try the experiment this season of shipping strawberries to New York and Boston in refrigerator cars. They estimate the expense at six cents per quart, and the trip will be made in a trifle over three days.

☞ At a meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, President Dodge stated that the General Convention, or World Gathering in this country, had been postponed until the autumn of 1870.

☞ The Sultan has publicly revoked the law forbidding Christians to enter Mohammedan mosques.

☞ It is said that the Sultan spent £50,000 upon the reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales on their visit to Constantinople, and that so pleased is His Majesty with the Princess that he intends to present her with his own portrait, set in brilliants, valued at £80,000.

☞ The report that Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe had been obliged to give up her plantation in Florida on account of a defect in the title is authoritatively denied.

☞ The total amount of the gifts presented to the Pope on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of his entering the priesthood is estimated at 20,000,000fr.

☞ Of the eight colleges in Indiana authorized to confer the degree of Master of Arts, six admit young ladies.

☞ President Grant's inaugural has been translated into Japanese, and was printed in the Japan papers.

☞ The Coliseum at Rome, built by Vespasian, held 100,000 spectators.

☞ In olden time, when a mother decorated her child on the Sabbath, she said, "As I have adorned thee outside, may God adorn thee within." If she placed a Sunday wreath in her daughter's hair, she said—"May Jesus Christ thus place the wreath of eternal life upon thee in heaven."

Protracted Meeting at Sugar Hill, N. H.

There will be a protracted meeting held at Sugar Hill, N. H. (D. V.), commencing Friday, June 11th, at ten o'clock A. M., and hold over the following Sunday. Elder John Couch and others of the Lord's servants will be present to preach the word. May this meeting be greatly blessed of God.
A. W. Sibley.

Maine Mission Tent.

We hope the tent will start soon on its summer campaign, with the blessing of God. The old and faithful tent-master is expected to go with it, and as no other minister feels able, or competent, nor will volunteer to take charge of the mission, and the committee desire that I go, I shall endeavor to do so as soon as other engagements will allow, if the Lord will. Will those in the State who intend or who desire to have a tent meeting this season, write to me as soon as they can, that we may make the most economical arrangements in our travels and time? Several have already informed us. When September arrives many wish the tent; all cannot have it then; therefore all should conclude to have it when they can. May the Lord direct and bless the work.
I. C. Wellcome.

Notice.

The Lord willing, the annual conference of the State of New York will be held at South Butler, N. Y., commencing Thursday evening, June 3d, 1869. A cordial invitation is extended to all the lovers of Jesus, and of his soon coming back to earth again. Let all the churches send delegates, and make arrangements for the present needs of the cause. Come one, come all, and come in the name and love of the Master. Ample provision will be made for all. Come at the commencement of the meeting.

N. B. Brethren will leave the cars on the New York Central R. R. at Savannah depot. We have made arrangements with the stage proprietor to carry all coming to the place of meeting and back for fifty cents each. The stage will leave on the arrival of the trains, each day, during the meeting (Sundays excepted), about ten o'clock A. M. and six P. M.

N. B. Brethren will ask for return checks of the driver when paying fare.
Per order of Com., B. P. Stevens.

Notice.

The State Campmeeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at New Hartford, Butler Co., Iowa, to commence June 21st, 1869. The tent will be pitched Saturday, the 19th, for public meeting, on the same ground. There will be a grocery and boarding table kept on the ground by the committee, at reasonable rates; the proceeds to be used to defray the expenses of the meeting. Hay and straw and tent frames will be furnished free. There will be no reduction in the fare on the R. R. this year. Elder Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass., is to be with us through the meeting.

Dear Brethren, we take this opportunity to invite you, one and all, to come to this yearly feast. Come early, and stay till the close of the meeting. Do not let the sacrifice of time and money prevent your coming. Bring your family, converted and unconverted. Prepare to make them comfortable, and work for God and the salvation of your children and others. You who live isolated, whose families are deprived of the gospel, are especially invited to come and get acquainted, and thereby may open a door into the regions beyond. Let all ministers come.
S. B. Ensign, Chairman.
W. H. Peck, Secretary of the Committee.

Notice.

As so many of our brethren have spoken to me for lots for tents, on the camp-ground at Alton Bay, N. H.; and as Bro. Woodman, who has furnished us with lumber for a number of years so reasonable, is now cutting out lumber; if our brethren will make out a bill of what they want and send it to him, he will have it ready for them when they wish to build.

To those who have had any fears of the campmeeting being moved from Alton Bay, I would say, that from the assurance that I have had from Mr. Merritt, of Boston, that the fare shall be reduced from Boston, I think the meeting will continue there until the Lord comes.
J. G. Smith.

P. S. Bro. Woodman's address is—Jeremiah Woodman, Alton, N. H.

New York Annual Conference.

The Lord willing, the New York State Annual Conference will be held at Wolcott, Wayne Co., N. Y., commencing June 3d, 1869. A cordial invitation is extended to all the lovers of Jesus and his soon coming. Come praying that it may be the best conference we ever have held in New York. There will be homes provided for all.

Those coming from the west on the morning train, stop at Savannah. The stage leaves for Wolcott at ten o'clock. Those on the noon train stop at Clyde. The stage leaves for Wolcott at three o'clock P. M. Those from the east, take the steamboat express, which will arrive at Clyde at three o'clock P. M.
M. R. Miles.
B. P. Stevens.

Wisconsin Annual Conference.

The Advent Christian Conference of the State of Wisconsin is to hold its next annual meeting at Prairie du Sac (in connection with the State campmeeting), beginning June 1st. All the ministers in the State who belong to the Conference, or who wish to unite with it, should be present in time. It is hoped that every church belonging to the Conference, or desiring to unite with it, will send delegates. Let us consolidate our strength, and work more vigorously and harmoniously in the cause of Christ. Time is flying, and the judgment is coming. Let us work while the day lasts, and all pull together, in the same direction, and our exertions will be crowned with abundant success, and God be glorified.
Wm. Sheldon, Sec.

Wisconsin Campmeeting.

The State Campmeeting for Wisconsin is to be held at Prairie du Sac, Sauk Co., beginning on Tuesday, June 1st. Friends coming on the Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien R. R., will leave the cars at Mazomanie; thence by stage, ten miles. Those coming on the Milwaukee and St. Paul R. R., will leave the cars at Kilbourn City; thence by stage twenty-five miles. A. W. Sibley, Secretary.

Notice.

Providence permitting, a tent-meeting will commence at Farmingtonville, N. H., Sunday, May 30th, and hold through the following week, and over the next Sunday. We expect some of God's faithful servants to preach the word.

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. 5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.

The New Hymn Book—"Spiritual Melodies."

As the collection of hymns entitled "Spiritual Melodies," published by me about the time of campmeeting last fall, has not been particularly noticed in our papers, except the Christian; and, as many among us are still ignorant of the existence of such a book, I have thought well to give it a more particular notice through the Crisis. It contains almost four hundred hymns (389), embracing about all the Advent hymns that we sing, and a good assortment of hymns on Christian experience also, especially those choice old hymns of better days, all classed and arranged according to subjects, in fair sized type, making a convenient, compact, pocket hymn book for general use.

I have three styles of binding. A cheap style in flexible cloth, at thirty cents; a more durable style in neat, firm, cloth binding, at forty cents, and a nicer style in embossed leather, at fifty cts. I pay the postage always. If any want a dozen, I will sell them for five cents less; and to those who take them to sell again, I take off eight or ten cents, according as they send the money with the order or not. I will make a liberal discount in supplying tents. Send to me at No. 19 Lindall Street, Boston.
I. K. Lombard.

"Admonitions on Church Fairs, Levees, etc.

As there is quite a call for these Admonitions, I have lately got them stereotyped, and can furnish them in any quantity desired at low rates. I will send them, postpaid, at sixty cents per hundred, or fifty cents by express; and at four dollars per thousand by express, anywhere. If those running tents desire them, to scatter, I will do better than this. Send to I. K. Lombard, 19 Lindall Street, Boston.

For the World's Crisis.

THE REIGN OF CHRIST.

O shout for joy! let songs arise,
The Lamb that once was slain
Will come in glory from the skies,
Upon the earth to reign.

CHORUS.—O you must be a lover of the Lord,
O you must be a lover of the Lord,
O you must be a lover of the Lord,
If you want to reign with Jesus when he comes.

The trumpet sounds, its awful voice
Is heard o'er land and sea,
And saints arising now rejoice
To live eternally.

Yes, they shall live forevermore,
Secure from toil and pain,
And on that bright and happy shore
With their Redeemer reign.

All hail that bright eternal day,
When David's rightful heir
Shall take the throne and hold the sway,
In glorious triumph there.

O would you reign with Christ our King?
Would you his glory see,
And with the saints and angels sing
Through all eternity?

Then you must love and serve the Lord
While in this world you stay,
Confess his name, obey his word,
And walk the narrow way;

And then when Christ the Lord shall come
To give the promised rest,
You may obtain that heavenly home,
And reign with all the blest.

Concord, N. H. M. V. S.

UNIVERSAL RESTORATION—ITS RISE IN ORIGEN.

(Concluded.)

But Origen had one grand truth in his system—the glorious scriptural truth of the extinction of all evil. There is a time to come, to which prophecy points onwards, when the evil which has, doubtless for wise and wondrous and merciful purposes, been permitted to obscure the bright face of heaven to our poor contracted view, shall have passed away. The idea of the Augustinian theorists, that evil for a time is essentially one and the same thing with evil for eternity, is as opposed to Scripture and to God's mind as it is ridiculous in the eye of common sense. With God—"heaviness may endure for a night," but it shall not endure for ever:—if it did, what would be thought of God or of his word? No; with God the heaviness which endures for a night is borne for the eternal "joy which cometh in the morning." It is not the same thing that evil should be allowed for some few thousand years, a speck indistinguishable between the two eternities of the past and the future—evil, too, never unmixed with good—and that evil, black, foul, and unmitigated, should, throughout all eternity, exist in the centre of God's world of righteousness. With this truth, the final extinction of evil, in his possession, and the dogma of the essential immortality of the soul admitted, the theory of Origen is fully able to stand its ground against the rival view of Augustine.

But it is, after all, a human system, and as such is to be condemned. God's word contradicts it in a thousand places. It holds out no hope to those who stand condemned in the judgment. This world and its peoples will again be all righteous, all rejoicing; but the reprobate will have passed away out of being—their names blotted from the book of life. Whatever be our opinion of Origen, personally, of his learning, his brilliancy, even of the truth of much of his teaching, his teaching here places him amongst those prophets condemned in Ezekiel for "strengthening the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life."* In that future age which has no end, the reprobate have no abiding name or place. Their image has vanished out of the city. Life for them, whether a thing to be desired or shunned, whether with Origen in heaven, or with Augustine in hell, is the devil's lie, repeated now from a thousand high places, as it was once whispered in Eve's credulous ear in the garden.

Only second to the condemnation of Scripture is the fact, that of the theory of universal restoration, Origen is the earliest advocate. We have read with some care, and certainly with an honest purpose, the patristic remains of the first centuries. We know that we may have allowed portions of their teachings to escape our notice, and therefore hold ourselves ready to receive correction on this point from any one of more learning than ourselves. But until we are corrected we assert, with a full belief in the perfect truth of our assertion, that neither in writing of heretic or of orthodox teacher, is the theory of universal restoration taught until Origen himself taught it. Like Augustine's theory, it finds no mention; but, on the contrary, is plainly contradicted in the writings of the apostolic men who walked with Peter, and John, and Paul. Just as little countenance does it find in any writing of the second century. It required the rise in this century, and its prevalence towards its close, of a theology more black and cruel in one of its aspects than heathenism had ever given birth to, to enable even Origen, with all his vast learning and his daring genius, to put forward in the first half of the third century of Christ a theory which had never before found an advocate. Pleasing as it was to human sin, supported as it was by the man of the greatest genius of all the fathers, having in it an undoubted element of truth, it made no progress in the church. The men of the first centuries knew that Origen was not connected with Christ, could not stretch back his hand and grasp that of an apostle. They knew that his doctrine had no foundation on the rock, but was a vision floating in the air; and so it soon came to be treated as a heresy, and Augustine crushed it out of the church for twelve hundred years and more.

For the benefit of the readers of the Rainbow we subjoin a table, which will enable them at a glance to see the relative antiquity in the primitive church, of the three great theories of future punishment, which are at this day maintained in the church of Christ. In the accuracy of this table we fully believe; for its substantial truth we are prepared to contend; and we now challenge any gainsayer to controvert it. The dates given for the death of each father are, of course, only vouched for as the most probable approximations to truth. Exactitude is now unattainable.

Universal Restoration.	Died A.D.
Origen	253

From the above table we see how comparatively late the theory of Augustine appears in the remains of patristic writing, while that of Origin is later still. That blank space between them and primitive truth is destructive to both. In following papers in the Rainbow we propose to review some of the recent followers of Origen; from that father himself we now separate. In one grand feature of his theory he commands our entire sympathy. He looked forward to the extinction of evil. His yearning for it was true—was but following out the judgment and reason as well as the longing of the heart. We cannot look at evil—its hatefulness, its misery, its pollution—and think that this evil will be permitted to extend or to exist for ever. So thought Origen, and Scripture bears him out; but he erred most fatally as to the means. He left the plain words of Scripture to carry out a human tradition. He adopted a theory of the immortality of the soul which compelled him to promise life where God had threatened death. It is no doubt very captivating, very seductive, but it is false. It is as false, we believe, to mercy as it is derogatory to justice. The theory that a responsible being, capable of good and evil, may deliberately continue in it, and yet that God is bound in every instance to win or force back that responsible agent to the path of life which he had forsaken, seems to us destructive of a quality which distinguishes the higher from the lower orders of creation; viz., the freedom of their will. This supposes a power of choice between good and evil—of choice of one or other with their consequences—which Origen's theory appears to us to take away. God says to those whom, in making capable of knowing him, he has made capable of sharing in his immortality, "You may and can choose evil, and with it death." Origen says to them, "You cannot, and you shall not; the evil you would choose shall be severed from you, do what you will; the good you would not have shall be forced upon you, struggle against it as you may." Origen reduces the creature made to walk in the field of freedom to the creature regulated by the iron law of necessity.—The Rainbow.

* Ezek. 13: 22.

For the World's Crisis.

NO APOLOGY FOR FAITH.

When God told Adam he should return to dust, he made no apology. He said all that was necessary. Believe it or not, it was found to be true, and apologies are useless. When God said, by virtue of the second Adam, all should be made alive again, to be judged according to their deeds, faith believes it. Apology quibbles and criticises the statement, and brings in reason, philosophy and unbelief; yet faith stands alone, and so will all that have faith. Christ made no apology when he said he would raise "all that are in the graves," both good and bad. All the apostles believed it, and preached it.

Enoch and Jude made no apology for saying, in Jude 14, that the wicked would remember what they had said and done, in the day of judgment. Apology, which is a substitute for faith, denies it; faith believes it, and always will. The Revelator makes no apology for saying over and over that two classes come up to judgment. A certain minister said in W., Paul's and John's writings on the doctrine of two classes coming up, were elliptical; i. e., susceptible of being sprung. Faith never yields; apology always does.

There is another doctrine supported by apology—science falsely so called by Paul; i. e., that some other body comes up to be judged. Faith believes it is the same one. All that I have seen written to prove that some other body would come up, shows a lack of faith; hence apologies, science and vain philosophy are introduced. "O grave, where is thy victory?" What is the use of such unqualified language, if the particles that come up were never in the grave? Again, "the seas gave up their dead." Men of faith believe it; the apologist denies it. Again, we read about the waking of the dead. The new body would be astonished, as it had never been awake before, for it had never slept. Then the book of life is opened, and the judgment of the person begins; but he was never alive before, and knew nothing about what was written. He could not remember what he had done, for he had done nothing.

The fine-spun, vain philosophy claims that a man changes once in seven years; if so, law and justice would not admit of hanging a man seven years after the deed was committed. Nonsense! A wayfaring-man, though a fool, knows better than this, if he has faith instead of apologies for faith. Christ says, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive forevermore." Lazarus was the same one after he was raised to life again. Philosophy never made any thing live; but God has, and says so, and faith believes it, although it is unaccountable. "This mortal must put on immortality," and until then, we had better live by faith, that pleases God, and believe God will reward all, according to his word, if we cannot comprehend it.

"FUTURE PUNISHMENT."

One educated in the school of popular theology has said:—"The thought of the future punishment for the wicked, which the Bible reveals, is enough to make an earthquake of terror in every man's soul. I do not accept the doctrine of eternal punishment because I delight in it. I would cast in doubts, if I could, till I had filled hell up to the brim. I would destroy all faith in it; but that would do me no good; I could not destroy the thing. Nor does it help me to take the word 'everlasting' and put it into a rack like an inquisitor, until I make it shriek out some other meaning; I cannot alter the stern fact. The exposition of future punishment in God's word is not to be regarded as a threat, but as a merciful declaration. If, in the ocean of life, over which we are bound to eternity, there are these rocks and shoals, it is no cruelty to chart them down; it is an eminent and prominent mercy."—H. W. Beecher's Life Thoughts, p. 196.

But what doctrine of "future punishment" is meant by the writer, said to be "revealed in the Bible," so perfectly horrifying and monstrous, that a saint, one reconciled to God, cannot "delight in" or even believe only as compelled? Of course it must be the darling doctrine of eternal torture without use or end, which a God of infinite love (!) and mercy (!!), of justice and power, decreed as the punishment of his finite, frail, short-lived creatures. If a special plea is seen to be proper as an excuse for "chart"-ing "down" such a doctrine, too bad to be believed, what can excuse the author of such a penalty? Is it not more in harmony with the character of God and his revelation of future destiny, to believe that "the wages of sin is death"; that "sin when it is FINISHED bringeth forth death"; than to cherish the distorted, unsightly, Pago-christianized, terrifying ghost of eternal torture? Or is Jehovah compelled thus to punish, in consequence of perpetrating the blunder of making man out of a part of himself, so that what a poet has sung is not true—

"He can create, and he destroy."

The world shall be "judged in righteousness"; "the Judge of all the earth will do right" with his enemies; and all will approve his judgment, not recoil in horror.

CREATION OF MAN.

In the history of the creation of man, it is stated that man was created out "of the dust of the ground." Here the question arises, Was this body, by itself, a conscious being? No. Well, was the breath of life breathed into its nostrils a conscious being before it entered the body, formed out of dust? No. Then we have two separate things, all that human wisdom can find in the being termed "man," because the Bible tells us of nothing else belonging to man, but a body formed out of dust, set in motion by a "breath of life," when neither of them is a conscious being in its separate state. The inquiry may be made, How can it be that the two parts together make what neither of them is in itself, a conscious, living being? An illustration may enable us to understand the point under consideration more clearly.

For instance, here is a piece of mechanism, consisting of a number of wheels in a small case, intended to move, and by its movements to show the time of day, and is termed a watch, or time-piece. But now the wheels in good running order, and the case, as the perfect form of the watch, may be here, and yet the watch not move or show the time of day. It is called a watch, but may not be a time-piece, because it does not show the time, for which it was intended. Now, I ask, must we put a moving time-piece in the watch to make it a time-piece? I answer, not necessarily, but only put a mainspring in; and though it is not the mainspring that is the time-piece, yet it is the principle moving part, and with the other part of the watch makes the time-piece. Now, take the mainspring out of the watch, which can be done, and no one detect it by looking at it, and does the watch yet move? No, and consequently it is not a time-piece any longer, because it does not indicate the time. Well, then, does the mainspring still move, separate from the other part of the watch, because it was the part that set the whole machinery in motion while it was connected with it? This question can be easily answered.

Now we can plainly see, that as the mainspring is not the time-piece, but a part by which the complete end was reached; so the breath of life put into man is not the soul, but a part by which the living soul, called Adam, was brought into existence. Uhus the body, formed out of the dust of the ground, and the breath of life, or spirit of life, united with it, constituted man a living soul, when neither the body nor the breath, in its separate state, is a living, much less an immortal soul.

LETTER TO M. A.

DEAR COUSIN M.:—What shall I write? I suppose you would like to hear more about the Davis legacy, but I have no more to say about it. My whole attention is taken up with that immense landed estate to which I am expecting to prove myself an heir, and to which the Davis Legacy is nothing to be compared. Though most everybody has a copy of the will among his papers, yet few know anything about it. They have undoubtedly read it, but have somehow imbibed the impression that none of our Gentile family can possibly be heirs, but that it was confined wholly to that ancient one, the Jews, and that they had received and run it out long ago; overlooking what an inspired attorney said about it in one of those ancient books called the "Acts of the Apostles," viz., that even the father of the heirs had not received "so much as to set his foot on"; to which agrees the statement of another inspired attorney (for all inspired ones agree), that the next of kin to the father, Isaac and Jacob, had not come into possession; for if they had they would not have sojourned in that promised land as in a foreign land, dwelling in tents (new translation.) You will find this account in an old letter of the attorney to that ancient house, the Hebrews; and you will find in the same letter, that a multitude belonging to the same house, and consequently heirs, have died without coming into possession of any portion of this estate. Further along in the letter, he names quite a number of worthies who also died without receiving the promise. Now, isn't here a dilemma? Such a multitude of heirs, many of them so worthy, all dead, without deriving any benefit from the will! If, by any means, you and I could prove our heirship, think you there would be the more left for us? Nay, verily. There'll be "enough for each, enough for all, enough for evermore."

I apprehend that the reason so few understand this great will case is, because so many uninspired attorneys contend, either that the estate fell into the hands of that ancient house of the Jews, who run it out long ago, or that there is such a heavy mortgage on it, held by a house of whom Satan is chief, that they think it cannot be lifted. Hence they conclude that the Testator did not mean real land, which so many covet, even with its heavy incumbrances; but that he has prepared some other place entire and distinct from this old mortgaged concern. But what is very funny about this new interpretation of the will is, that not one of these attorneys can give us measures and bounds; while the inspired one, referred to, defines them perfectly in Rom. 4: 18. Now, if you believe that the heirs are exclusively Jews, let me undeceive you, and at the same time show you how you may know whether you are an heir. In Gal. 3: 29, you will see the whole question settled.

But the dilemma about those dead heirs. The will is soon to be administered. I thought the Administrator would have come some time ago, but we have to wait for him patiently. But when he does come, he will send out his messengers to summon and bring before him all the heirs, whether dead or alive; at the same time he will seize the old usurper, Beelzebub, and all his family, and cast them into a lake of fire (not remorse of conscience, but real fire) and brimstone, and burn them up root and branch—make an utter end of them, so that iniquity cannot spring up a second time. By the same fire he will cleanse the whole estate from the evil the old usurper has brought upon it; restore it to its former beauty, and give it to the rightful heirs. Then "instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree; and instead of the brier the myrtle-tree." Then there shall be no more tears, nor death, nor sorrow, nor crying, nor pain. Won't that be good enough? Do you claim an heirship to that estate? I don't mean such an one as modern attorneys set forth, having no bounds, nor substance either, as I can learn; but real solid, land, where real fir and myrtle trees can grow, and vineyards bear real fruit which we may eat, and where we may with the Administrator drink of the fruit of the vine, as he said, "I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom."

Now, I want you to get just as enthusiastic about this as you have about that legacy, which would only serve you (should you be so fortunate as to get a share) till the other is administered. Then the latter affair will be closed up; and besides, the chances of your getting a portion are as one to a thousand, or ten thousand, while the other is an absolute certainty. One to have a little while, the other forever. One is subject to all the vicissitudes of life, bankruptcies, thieves and robbers. It may help or cause many of the trials of life, as the case may be. Not so the other. There will be no trials to be helped, and there shall be no sorrow.

I have an absorbing interest in this great will case, and I want you to have, too. Then with me you will be glad, yea, long to see the Administrator.

Blessed Jesus, life divine,
O, how precious, Jesus mine!

And may we both prove our heirship as only we can by faith in Jesus.

Yours, patiently waiting,
D. D. CHAFFEE.

"NO NIGHT THERE."

No night of weariness,
No sleepless eye,
No unknown shadow
Hovering nigh.

No night of sorrow,
With bitter moan,
No mournful lament
Of "left alone."

No night of death,
No farewell tear,
No loved ones parted,
No anxious fear;
But harp, and crown, and song alway,
And bright, eternal, joyous day.

CAN I AFFORD TO BE A CHRISTIAN.

What a strange question to ask. And yet it is asked time and again by those who are stumbling along in the darkness of this sinful world. "Afford to be a christian!" Can you afford to lose the christian's reward? Can you afford to lose the kingdom of our God? Can you afford to be a sharer in the sinner's doom? If you can afford to loose all this, then, perhaps, you do well to ask the question. But let us look at the subject in a different light. What must you accept if you are not a christian? There is no neutral position in this warfare. You are either a christian or you are not. You are either a candidate for glory, heaven, and immortality, or shame and everlasting contempt. Therefore, if you are not a christian, you must meet the sinner's doom. You may well ask, can I afford this? And I ask you as a fellow-traveler to the judgment, to weigh the matter well before you decide; for it would avail you nothing to put your hand to the plough and look back. Some poor backslider may say, then there is no hope for me. Not so; on the contrary, it is your duty to regain your lost position. But, says the wanderer, the Master said, "No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God." Very true; but let me ask, were you fit for the kingdom of God before you took hold of the plough? No. What then did you do to render you fit for the kingdom? Took hold of the plough. Certainly. Well, are you fit for the kingdom now? No; I am a backslider. What must you do to make you fit? Why, take hold of the plough again. There is the whole matter in a nut-shell. Do your first work.

But to the question, "Can I afford it?" I answer yes. But the christian has trials. True; they are the refining fires that only serve to fit him and give him a longing for the "rest that remaineth." Such are counted as the filth and offscouring of all things. Yes, so they are; but the time is coming, and that soon, when they shall recieve honor and great glory. They shall judge the world, and those that now despise them, shall behold them when they receive the crown of life at the hand of the Lord. In fact, is all summed up in the statement of the apostle, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Do not ask that foolish question again, but rather lay hold of eternal life. The time is at hand when the dead, just and unjust, shall be raised to meet the judgment. We must all render up our accounts then. Do not trifle with this matter, but prepare to meet your God.

LOVE AND TRUST.

AFFECTIONATELY INSCRIBED TO F——.

In the Highlands of Scotland there is a gorge, a deep, dark chasm, whose craggy sides are so perfectly perpendicular as to render ascent or descent impossible. Through the crevices of its rocky bottom grow beautiful flowers, rich and rare; discernible to the eye of the beholder as he stands upon the summit of the gray cliff. Noted for its wild appearance, it is a place of resort for many travelers.

At one time some travelers stood gazing into its fearful depths, admiring the loveliness of the flowers, as they contrasted so widely with their dark surroundings. They desired much to possess them, yet could devise no means of procuring them, as no human foot had ever trodden upon its slimy bottom; no human hand had ever been there to plant or pluck a flower. Seeing in the distance a mountainous hut, they hastened to it, hoping in some way to be able to effect their purpose. Seeing a lad of some ten or twelve years, they asked him if he would consent to be lowered down, to procure for them what they wanted. The little fellow shuddered at the thought, and said, "No, never did any body go down;" and never could he. They urged him, and offered him large sums of gold. The brave little lad looked at the gold, and thought how much he could contribute to the relief of his parents, in their abject poverty; then he thought of the dreary descent in question, and he could hardly make up his mind what to do. At length a thought struck him; his countenance brightened a little, and he said, "If you will allow my father to hold the rope, I will go." They said, "We are as strong as your father; and we will let you down, and bring you up, as safely as your father." "But," said the little fellow, "my father loves me, and I can trust him."

The argument was too conclusive to admit of further reasoning; the father was called, the rope adjusted around the son, and, with all the care and tender watchfulness of a parent, the little fellow was let down, and after procuring the flowers was carefully drawn up by his father. Laying his trophies at their feet, and receiving the promised gold, the little victor ran home to share his prize with his parents.

Thus, dear F——, the Lord deals with his children. Sometimes a deep, dark trial is just before us, obscuring the last ray of light from our pathway. To go back we can not; to go astray we dare not; to descend into the dark chasm is the only alternative. We can not see the flowers at the bottom, nor the prize at the end; for all is dense darkness, and our footing is slippery. The winds are howling, the lightnings are flashing, the thunders are muttering, and the affrighted child cries mightily unto the Lord for refuge in time of storm. But the elements are in such commotion, he hears no answer from his father. Again and again he cries in agony for deliverance; he pleads the promise, "Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." Again he listens for a response; his over-strained ear catches the sound, "Child, go down; you are too high; nothing will effect my purpose in you but for you to descend these fearful depths. It is the only way I can be glorified in you." "But, Father, I shall fall; it is so dark and slippery I can not stand." "The suspension rope is in my hands, and I will uphold you, that you be not destroyed." The suffering one takes fresh courage, and gropes his way along till the storm bursts in all its fury upon him; and it requires so much killing "all the day long," so much flaying and slaying, so much crucifying of the flesh, he writhes and chafes under the rod, and cries, "Let me go back, I cannot endure this." But the Father lays his hand firmly upon him, not only in chastening, but in protection; and he is held there. After grappling with the Almighty hand till his strength is gone, he yields, he is chastened, he is subdued, he is crucified; he sinks back into the arms of his Father, like a helpless child, which he is; and such sweet peace as flows into his soul none can conceive of but those who have paid the price.

When he has found the bottom of the chasm, he has obtained the prize, which is complete victory over self, over the world, over everything. He owns himself conquered by the gentle yet firm hand of his Father, and that hand still guided the suspension rope till he came from the chasm. Now it leads him so sweetly "through green pastures, and beside still waters." Now he can look into those fearful depths through which he has passed, and exclaim, "I thank thee, O Father, I ever passed through it. It cost me almost my life, but I am glad I was there. O how I love him, how I love him." Now when trials come again, however dark and severe they be, he feels the rope around him, and like the little Scotch boy can say, "My father loves me, and I can trust him."

Dear F——, this is no imaginary or overdrawn picture; it is as real as the fixed stars in the experience of some of God's children. That this sweet and abiding experience in the things of God may be yours, without the terrible struggle in the dark abyss, is the prayer of your sister in the courts and alleys,

MEANING OF SOUL.

BRO. GRANT:—The Bible is God's word and is true and consistent with itself, and explains it own terms. One truth does not conflict with another. All is reasonable and harmonious in both Testaments. But this truth does not appear to be seen, at least so far as the originals of the words soul and spirit are concerned, because many use the words interchangeably, as if they had the same meaning, while nothing is further from the truth. The original of the word soul, in the Hebrew and Greek, always mean the person man, when man is meant; or else his animal life, but never his spirit. Gen. 2: 7. So, also, in the Greek, the soul means person. Acts 2: 41, 3: 23. But it is only meant to cite a few texts out of the many which teach this truth. When this word is used in the abstract sense, the animal life is meant, and this is true of beasts and birds of all kinds, as well as the fish of the sea. The blood is the life, or soul of the flesh, and of course is the animal life. Gen. 9: 4–6, 10; 1: 20. Lev. 17: 10–14. Agreeing with this we have the teachings of our Lord and the apostles in Greek, that the soul must be denied in this life, which denial includes all the animal appetites, and these must be denied if we would have eternal life. Mark 8: 34–37.

Now as the word nephesh, in Hebrew, is explained in the plainest manner in the books of Genesis and Leviticus, and is applied to man as a living animal, so also to the blood of all the animal creation, and never to the breath, we are not at liberty to use this word in any other sense; and as our Lord and the apostles of Christ did use it in the same sense as it is explained in the Hebrew, we have positive proof that the Hebrew is right; for our Lord uses the word psuke interchangeably with man's person, or himself; and these two words, nephesh and psuke, do always imply personality. And this truth is self-evident; because man, as well as all animals who live by blood, must die if their blood is taken away. Thus if the soul is lost finally, there is an end to the animal. But one man cannot make a final end to the animal. God only can do that. Thus we are told not to fear man who can only destroy the body, as it is but a temporary death. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die"; and the apostle says, "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die." And it is certain that it is the desires of the flesh to which our Lord refers when he says, He that saveth his soul shall lose it. It can not mean his breath, or his spirit. We read that if we by "the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body," we "shall live." Yes, we shall live—the man himself. He that hateth his soul in this life "shall keep it unto life eternal."

Here it is well to notice that the words eternal and everlasting are never applied to the word nephesh or psuke. And it appears for this reason: because the animal and mortal is always meant when man is spoken of. But it is simply eternal life, and everlasting life, of the person man; because his nature is changed, and he is a spiritual being, and does not live by blood when he has eternal life. But if psuke means the breath, or the spirit, why should not the words eternal and everlasting be joined to it? For it does appear that angels breathe, and that our Lord did after he arose from the dead; and we cannot conceive how an organized body like man can live without breathing.

Dear brother, I do not write for the sake of controversy, but for the truth's sake; and it will be seen, by admitting the above view, how simple and plain is made the loss and the salvation of the soul. JOHN REYNOLDS.

It is not polite to speak of a gentleman as "that fellow."

It is not polite to tell a falsehood, under any circumstances whatever.

It is not polite to be a "busy-body in other men's matters," when you are not in the least interested.

It is not polite to pluck fruit from the trees of a neighbor, without his consent, or to take a single flower from his grounds.

It is not polite to fret and to scold about the weather, or with the affairs of Providence in general.

It is not polite to vote for yourself as a candidate for office, or to solicit the votes of your friends.

It is not polite for a poor person to borrow money, when it is not in his power to pay. There are those mean enough to borrow, and then get angry when called upon to pay.

Gems.

— Moderation is the great secret of government. To be always dissatisfied is the way to lose all authority and respect. The consequence of those people is most cheerfully acknowledged who seem least forward to assert it.

— Be neither lavish or niggardly; of the two avoid the latter; a mean man is universally despised, but public favor is a stepping stone to preferment—therefore generous feeling should be cultivated.

— Wisdom does not show itself so much in precept as in life—in firmness of mind and mastery of appetite. It teaches us to do as well as to talk; and to make our words and actions all of a color.

— A white garment appears worse with slight soiling than do colored garments much soiled; so a little fault in a good man attracts more attention than do great offences in bad men.

— Regret not a golden age that is behind you. There is one before, and it beckons you. Its rewards are not for the idle, but for the brave hearts diciplined to toil.

— Horace Greeley says that the darkest day in any man's earthly career is that wherein he fancies there is some easier way of gaining a dollar than by squarely earning it.

— Remember that self-interest is more likely to warp your judgment than all other circumstances combined; therefore look well to your duty when your interest is concerned.

— Whatsoever we bestow let it be given with a cheerful countenance; a man must not give with his hand and deny with his heart.

GOOD FEELING AND WELL DOING.

Here is a man who is a roaring good christian. He goes to meeting. There is a revival, and his religious feelings are all aglow. And it is all right. He does feel just as he says he does. There is no hypocrisy in his profession. He takes his hymn book, and the minister happens to be fortunate, and the hymn comes right home, and circumstances concur, and the electric influences are favorable, and the meeting is a joyful one, and he will not go home until twelve o'clock. He has sung twenty hymns, and he does feel as though he could not keep himself on the ground. "A little more, Lord," he says, "and I shall fly away." Now I want to see if to-morrow he will go to his neighbor, with whom he has been at variance, and say: "Look here, my dear fellow, we are wrong; at any rate I am, whether you are or not. I have been ugly. Forgive me. I had such a good time last night, that I must clean my heart. My pride must come down, and I must be reconciled to you."

He did have a good time, and that is the sign that the feeling which he experienced was genuine. That he roared his hymns joyfully was no sign of it; that he had an ecstasy of prayer was no sign of it; but that, having that elevation, he changed it to a moral purpose; that out of that feeling he wrought garments of duty; that out of that experience he came back to his fellow man more sympathetic, more humble, more Christ-like—ah! that was a sign that the feeling was a genuine one. Otherwise it would have been simply a sign of self-indulgence.—H. W. Beecher.

A WORD FOR BOYS.

Truth is one of the rarest gems. Many a youth has been lost in society by allowing it to tarnish his character, and foolishly throwing it away. If this gem still shines in your bosom, suffer nothing to displace or diminish its lustre.

Profanity is a mark of low breeding. Show us the man that commands much respect; an oath never trembles on his tongue. Read the catalogue of crime. Inquire the character of those who depart from virtue. Without a single exception you will find them to be profane. Think of this, and don't let a vile word disgrace you.

Honesty, frankness, generosity, virtue—blessed traits! Be those yours, my boys, and I shall fear not. You are watched by your elders. Men, who are looking for clerks and apprentices, have their eyes on you. If you are upright, steady and industrious, before long you will find good places, kind masters, and the prospects of a useful life before you. Peninsular Herald.

UNWHOLESOME READING.

Mr. Haynes, in his "Pictures of Prison Life," tells of a young man, blessed with kind and indulgent parents, and possessed of a superior education, who was sentenced for fourteen years for breaking and entering stores. He had given no previous evidence of depravity before he was caught, and the wonder was that a young man with his intelligence and surroundings should thus blast his prospects in life. An examination of his room at home explained the mystery. He was a great reader of "yellow-covered literature." He had accumulated vast quantities of vile trash; and had read it until he had been crazed by the exciting scenes and daring exploits of which he read. He reveled in the wild romance until his imagination was taken captive. The end was crime. What harvests of ruin have grown from unwholesome reading.

DON'T BE ASHAMED.

Don't be ashamed, my lad, if you have a patch on your elbow. It is no mark of disgrace. It speaks well of your industrious mother. We would rather see a dozen patches on your jacket than hear one profane or vulgar word escape from your lips. No good boy will shun you because you cannot dress as well as your companions; and if a bad boy laughs at your appearance, say nothing, my lad, but walk on. We know many a rich and good man who was once as poor as you. A very wealthy man told us, a short time since, that when a child he was glad to receive cold food from his neighbor's table. Be good; and, if you are poor, you will be respected a great deal more than if you were the son of a rich man and addicted to bad habits.—Ex.

AVOID STRONG DRINK.

An old farmer says: "I was once a prosperous farmer. I had a loving wife and as fine lads as the sun ever shone on. We had a comfortable home, and lived happily together. But we used to drink to make us work. Those two lads I have laid in drunkards' graves. My wife died broken-hearted, and now she lies by her two sons. I am seventy years old. Had it not been for drink, I might now have been an independent gentleman; but I used to drink to make me work, and mark it, it makes me work now. At seventy years of age I am obliged to work for my daily bread."

A SWEET ANSWER.—A little boy and girl, each probably five years old, were by the roadside. The boy became angry at something, and struck his playmate a sharp blow on the cheek, whereupon she sat down and began to cry piteously. The boy stood looking on sullenly for a minute, and then said: "I didn't mean to hurt you, Katie; I am sorry." The little rosy face brightened instantly. The sobs were hushed, and she said: "Well, if you are sorry, it don't hurt me."

RULES FOR READING.—Better to read one good book carefully than to read ten carelessly. Be slow to begin to read a book, if it is likely you will not have time to finish it. Be careful how you spend time in reading books which are not worth reading. You had better throw away money than time, for time is worth more than money. As a bad man may have a good name, so a bad book may have a good title.

SUBMISSION.

Why should I forward look with anxious thought,
Or be dismayed when clouds o'ercast my sun?
Since I must bear the burdens of my lot,
Oh, let me ever say, "Thy will be done."

Though burdens heavy press, and strength shall fail,
And scarce the weary journey seem begun;
Though sorrows linger near, and storms assail,
In patience let me say, "Thy will be done."

When dangers hedge me round and trials come,
And friends shall me desert, each, one by one;
When foes shall mock, oh, let me still be dumb,
And meekly say within, "Thy will be done."

And if my course shall lead through storm and cloud,
Nor pleasure's fountain by my pathway run;
And if o'er me shall spread affliction's shroud,
Submissive let me say, "Thy will be done."

What though my way before seem hard and drear,
And dark, foreboding clouds enshroud life's sun,
My light shall shine upon my pathway clear,
And I shall humbly say, "Thy will be done."

The burdens of my weary lot may press,
The streams of sorrow over me may roam;
And to all earthly woes I may confess,
Yet I would gladly say, "Thy will be done."

I know, where'er my toilsome course shall lead,
There goeth at my side a faithful One,
Who grace and strength will give in time of need,
That I may ever say, "Thy will be done."

Though hard at times may fall his chastening rod,
And I in deep despair may cry, "Undone,"
Yet for my good I'm chastened by my God,
That I might learn to say, "Thy will be done."

Then shall I struggle on a little space,
Nor falter in the way I have begun;
But "suffer and be strong" upon my race,
And say in every thing, "Thy will be done."

And then when through affliction's crucible
The "gold tried in the fire" I shall have won;
Oh, then in rest and peace unchangeable
I joyfully shall say, "Thy will be done."

THE ALARM BELL.

EXPECTATION OF THE JEWS.

It is well known that there is a great and organized enterprise on foot in Europe for the convocation and settlement of the Jews in Palestine. A society devoted to the interest of this long humbled and dispersed race, has its head rendezvous at Paris. Its movements are constantly under the direct observation of the French Emperor. And there is little ground for doubt that he is the secretly but firmly pledged patron of the attempted national reconstitution of the Jews in the land of their fathers. That something very marked in this development is actually now at hand, we feel an unhesitating confidence; and that the process of preparation is far advanced will, no doubt, very soon become startlingly evident Who can tell how soon the tidings will thrill along the world's net-work of telegraph threads, that a call has issued from the accepted and interested imperial promoter of this migration to the scattered fragments of the Jewish people to prepare to move to the East? Who can tell how soon, how very soon, the shout will go out, awaking an indescribable enthusiasm among the masses of this race to gather back to the old home; to repopulate the old territory; to convene, to combine, to consolidate into a new national life? Rose-colored visions of a revived nationality, of private and public posterity, on the ground so long given up to comparative loneliness and desolation, will perchance dazzle and enrapture the host hitherto dispersed and depressed.

What more natural and likely, either, than that this multitude, measurably restored to the land of their old renown, and eager to revive and develope its neglected fertility and resources, and adorn with the triumphs of modern civilization its historic and endeared expanse, should in a frenzy of gladness hasten to requite the patronage of their imperial friend, Louis Napoleon, with extraordinary honors and acknowledgments? We fully expect it; and we believe, that however preposterous or incredible the suggestion may appear, this recognition will develope into an awful and idolatrous homage. It will amount in fact to a confession of this leader as a rejuvenator, a restorer, a messiah! Said our Savior to the Jews, who were already rejecting him, the Prince of Life, and the Son of God, "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive."

It may be said this is a hypothetical or contingent reference, but that it denoted a coming eventuality, who can doubt? Else, why was the contingency mentioned at all? We are assured it was a prophecy of coming error in a deliberate choice of a false messiah, a secular prince, such as they then expected and wished for, a man to recover, to dignify, to develope their nation, and give them a name and fame and eminence in the world. It is a fearful illusion with which they are to be overtaken, an inveiglement of the wicked one in which they are to be entrapped.

We cannot evolve or elucidate the subject at length now. It is one of interest almost wonderful. We may add, their professed friend is afterwards to be their persecutor and enemy, and the nation of Jews smitten, stung, humbled, and shattered with reverses, will at the very last, as we understand it, accept their long lost, long neglected and rejected, but still merciful divine Friend, the Jesus their fathers slew and hung on a tree. In this connection, we simply adduce the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, which is a very singularly clear portraiture and prophecy of the coming millennial glory, after the advent of the true Messiah, and under his glorious personal administration. Notice: "In that day, the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people" from various nations and territories, whither some have fled from their enraged and persecuting deceiver; and where also some have all along been abiding during the disastrous experiences of their brethren. And observe, just previous to this, in the chapter next preceding, it is said, that "in that day, the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Judah, shall no more again stay upon him that smote them [the antichrist, the false messiah,] but shall stay upon the Lord, the Holy One of Israel in truth." Following on, we find it declared that "the Assyrian shall smite Israel with a rod," and "the indignation shall cease," and "his burden shall be taken away from off thy shoulder, and his yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing." This, we conceive, is a plain fore-disclosure of a calamity and a deliverance, the period of special trial immediately to precede the kingdom and glory of the royal Son of David.

We have no prejudices on this subject. God forbid that we should have. We need an understanding of the purpose and providence of God in the events now about to transpire, and a just estimate of their true significance. Truth is the prize we are pursuing, and how solemn and significant are the preparations ripening throughout the world to their inevitable and grand development. What a responsibility, what a privilege, what a duty, what an honor to watch, to observe, to understand the meaning, the tendency, the ultimatum of affairs now in progress in the very last extremity of this age, and on a scale of vastness sufficient to excite the keenest interest, and to inspire the profoundest awe.

Brethren, let prejudice, or prepossession, or tenacity of pre-committed and oft avowed phases, or even matter and substance of faith, not stand in the way of a just recognition of facts, or a right apprehension of truth. God's word will come to pass. May we have wisdom to discern it.

We close this article with the following incident: Two men on foot, a week or two since, with packs and satchels, were passing through our neighborhood. One of them called at our house, while his comrade waited in the street. Having courteously declined to purchase any of his wares, we ventured to inquire,

"Are you not a Jew?"

"Yes," said he.

"What are the Jews going to do?" we questioned further.

"They are going to Jerusalem," was the instant and distinct reply.

"Ah! indeed. Is that so? That is what I expected, to be sure. And when are they going?"

"Next year!" was the equally prompt response.

"How do you know that?" I asked.

"We got a telegram to that effect last week."

"Is that possible?"

"It is true," said he.

"Yes, and I know who will be the leader or helper of your people to go to Jerusalem."

"Who is that?" he asked with a smile.

"Louis Napoleon." To which he said neither yes nor no, but appeared all the time pleased and animated. After he had gone, we regretted not having inquired of him further on this subject. We shall doubtless soon be able to give added and interesting information in regard to it.

Meanwhile, any who wish may derive benefit from referring to the eighteenth chapter of Isaiah, as descriptive, according to Mr. Shimeall, of the agency of America in aiding this great movement in the supposed interest of the Jews, and perusing the comments thereon of this able author, in his work entitled "The Three Napoleons."

POETRY BY PLANCHETTE.

As a specimen of what we should denote by the term demon-doggerel, we subjoin the following, which was written in answer to a proposition to Planchette to dictate some "poetry." That no one may suppose it was a mere echo, or transcript of what was passing in the girl's mind, whose fingers rested on the instrument, we may mention that she said (and she is known to be truthful), she was at that moment thinking of some Sabbath school verses, far different from the effusion furnished. These are the lines:

"Many a time I've wandered
Over the fields of snow,
Many an hour I've squandered,
Don't you wish you knew how?"

One is reminded, in reading the above, of the words of our Lord, who said, "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none." Matt. 12: 43.

NAPOLEON'S REVERSES.

Some have vigorously insisted on the impossibility or unlikelihood of such a thing as an ecclesiastico-imperialistic elevation of Napoleon, which prophecy is alleged to assign to him through the agency of Satan and wicked men, because of his various checks or mishaps for a year or two past. But let us consider a moment. Did Bismarck thwart the emperor altogether, as is alleged, in his, the latter's policy of pursuing, or striving to secure or retain the dictatorship of Europe? Bismarck fought and humbled Austria, and what was the result? Answer, twofold.

First, Venitia, naturally due to Italy from geographical location and the choice of her people, fell as a prize to the ally of Prussia, and Francis Joseph was glad to select Napoleon as the minister of the exchange, conquered really by Prussian cannon. Venice passed thus through the hands of the Bonaparte, and who does not know that it was the undoubted wish of the latter to further strengthen and consolidate Italian nationality by the acquisition? The addition of this Adriatic province was not a check to Napoleon.

Second, it was agreeable to the French emperor that Austria should not appear as a stronghold, or political prop of the Roman Papal See, or a refuge to the troubled incumbent of St. Peter's chair; but that France alone should be the grand support of the Papacy, and the power that upheld catholic Rome amid the difficulties that were environing her, and actually menacing her ruin. France desired to be the sole guardian of this Romish prize, imperilled by intestine foes. France should be the keeper in the sight of all the world of this great historic headquarters of the church; France the bearer of the apocalyptic woman, in her latest hour of glory and danger; France her befriender in her past meridian and waning period of life. And why so? Because, as it remains to be made apparent in a manner that should rouse every christian to an attitude of the keenest and most intelligent and prayerful watching; because France, that is, Napoleon, has a mighty and stupendous stake in this concern, and in pursuance of a deep laid scheme, and the fulfillment of an ambitious and persistent study, wished to have well in hand the gigantic Romish system, ready at the mature moment to be Napoleonized and made a right arm of strength.

This French, adroit Ludovicus, had his eye on the headship and control of Romanism, by the selection of the cousin Lucien to the papal succession. Thus the way is made ready for Louis to the Cæsarian pontificate. Thus in a moment, as it were, a trap is sprung on the dreaming, deceived and unwary Protestant christendom, picturing to itself the fair landscape of a world converted and millennialized by gospel preaching and missionism. Thus mistaught and mis-anticipating, the Protestant minority falls into the snare, and stands like a paralyzed young roe before the lion. Now, to have Austria detached, through the Bismarckian artillery, from its connection as a pillar of St. Peter's seat, and the whole burden rest, in the world's sight, and in the pope's sight, and in every Catholic's sight, on France alone, was a Napoleonic notion, realized without firing a gun on the Frenchman's part. How much did Bismarck triumph over his trans-Belgic neighbor in all this? Nay, Bismarck did precisely what the Bonaparte wanted done. Now Austria by a kind of spontaneous act or force of affinity, an alternative readily recognized and chosen, passes into a partially concealed, but firm alliance with Napoleon. How much did Bismarck gain by this? Was Italy thenceforth lost to the emperor? How far from every look of reasonable probability, certainly.

But we grant there remains the unquestionable fact, that the Russian's known aggressive and aggrandizing aims are a constant source of annoyance and provocation to the Tuileries. We grant, the figure of the stout northman, with his drooping, heavy brow and massive jaw, does not delight the third Napoleon; and the needle guns that shed their leaden cones into the Austrian ranks, have no great charm to the eye, taking in Europe in perpetual busy glances of solicitous study from the banks of the Seine. And what we wish especially to emphasize is this, viz., that this very Bismarck, thus menacing and busy, is in fact a real auxiliary to the progress we have anticipated toward a developed personal antichrist. Though an opponent, or even a rival, he is serving the purpose of an aid to the development. It is the will that wields the northern German armies, the opposing power thus intensified, that by its hostility developes the utmost caution and resources of the French government in preparation for any and every peril, for any and every eventuality of war.

It is this menace that begets nicer care, profounder study, vaster preparation, and a more thorough husbanding of resources. It is this that so spurs the mind of Bonaparte to the use of every precaution and the fortification of every exposed point, and the studious foresight of every contingency, as to make failure far more unlikely than in a situation of remitted watchfulness resulting from uninterrupted success, or ambition for a long time unopposed. And here we will leave the subject for further and future remark, only adding that the apparent or temporary failure of the Mexican expedition has likewise undoubtedly served its purpose of sharpening the Emperor's view of affairs, and leading to a more guarded advance in future undertakings.

THE COMING OF OUR KING.

The coming of Jesus is a precious theme, never ceasing to afford consolation and refreshment. It is not soon tiresome and exhausted of interest, but a perpetual fountain of joys; frontmost, midmost, and topmost, amid all hopes the most fruitful of themes, and lending sweetness to everything related to it. It stands a tower of glory amid Bible topics and promises, itself the best and fairest promise. Why is it unwelcome to many who profess a love for the Savior? Why is it disapproved, discouraged, disrelished, and dismissed, when, where, and by whom it should be welcomed, loved, cherished and defended? Why is it not eagerly received into christian societies and associations as the most delightful subject of conversation? Why is it so hard and so rare to find an avenue or a means of its introduction into religious assemblies? Why is there such an array of opposition to it? Alas! it is deemed an innovating and obtrusive theme. But it is sweet, grand and powerful, notwithstanding. Around it revolve a glorious array of vital Bible truths, and from it issue unspeakably important results. The coming of Christ is the great hope of the church, and, rightly understood, is her only hope and supreme necessity. It is not a subordinate concern. but first, single, and absolute, as a fixed condition to any and every future fruition beyond this life. Without it there can be no immortality, no eternal life; nay, not even the smallest ray of light, pulsation of life, or motion of intelligence after death. No wonder, then, it is of such towering proportions in the teaching of the word of God, and in the esteem of the rightly instructed believer. But in what a maze of darkness is the mass of christiankind in our day involved respecting it! Darkness, which is nevertheless disavowed and unperceived. Darkness in regard to related events, both as signs and consequences; darkness in regard to the order and manner and time of the advent, a darkness which amounts, to a great extent, to a practical negation of the fact itself, and a practical neglect of the event in the very time and act of its nearly prepared and tremendously imminent advance. Why is it thus, and how long shall it be thus? Nevertheless, the wise can understand and rejoice in the onward march of events, as couriers going just before the hour and power of the return of the High Priest and Prince of the people of God, to reign forevermore.

IS IT TRUE?

(Taken from the New Melodeon.)

Is it true that I must lie
In the graveyard bye-and-bye,
And with others, gone before,
Sleep till time shall be no more?
Is it true! oh, is it true?

Is it true, as many say,
Life is but a passing day,
And that heaven is lost or won
Ere this fleeting day has flown?
Is it true? oh, is it true?

Is it true that on the cross
Jesus bled and died for us,
And, while hanging on the tree,
Upward sent a prayer for me?
Is it true? oh, is it true?

Is it true that all death's slain
Will arise and live again,
And to final judgment go,
Some for bliss and some for wo?
Is it true? oh, is it true?

For the World's Crisis.

"LITTLE CHILDREN, LOVE ONE ANOTHER."

About A. D. 95, the Apostle and Evangelist was banished to the Isle of Patmos, where he had the vision described in the Apocalypse. He afterwards returned to Ephesus, where he lived to a great age, so that he could scarcely go to the assembly of the saints without being carried by his disciples.

Being unable to make long discourses, his custom was to say in all assemblies, "Little children, love one another;" and when they wondered at his frequent repetition of this concise exhortation, his answer was, "This is what the Lord commands you; and this if ye do it is sufficient." Truly the exhortation of the Evangelist and special command of Christ are in perfect harmony. What is this special command? "This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you. These things I command you, that ye love one another. A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." This love is the first fruit of the Spirit and should be manifested in the spirit of Christ. We are not to use liberty for an occasion of the flesh, but by love serve one another.

The Scriptures teach us to "have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and to love all saints." Love is a debt which we owe to one another, and it ought to be settled according to the teachings of the apostle Paul, with pure hearts and fervent love. "See that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently," "not in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth." This love should be without dissimulation or hypocrisy. We are taught to be of one mind; this cannot be where there is no union, and there cannot be union if there is not love one to another. Brethren and sisters, let us walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, with all lowliness, and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. It is by this love, and unity, and peace, that we are known to be what we profess to be. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

"God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother," what then? John 4: 20—"For he that loveth not his brother whom he has seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God love his brother also."

We receive messages from the beloved disciple, declaring that "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is no occasion of stumbling [or scandal] in him."

The apostle Paul in 1 Cor. 1: 10, speaks thus: "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that you all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions [or schisms] among you, but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." See that none render evil unto any man; ever follow that which is good among yourselves and unto all men.

Brethren and sisters, may this holy love in its length and breadth, the hight and depth of which is beyond comprehension, so fill our hearts that we shall supremely delight in and obey God, and cordially and practically love all beings according to their character; the good with fellowship of soul, and the evil with a Christ-like benevolence.

For the World's Crisis.

"LORD, REMEMBER ME."

When we present our views as to the time when the righteous are to be rewarded, we are most generally referred to the promise of Jesus to the malefactor, as an evidence that they go immediately to heaven at death. If those who make use of this text to prove such a position would apply the most simple principles of our language to this passage, they would very soon fail to see the evidence of such a promise in it.

A pronoun is a word used instead of a noun, to avoid frequent repetition of the noun. We will illustrate this by quoting Matt. 5: 1, 2;—"And seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain; and when he was set, his disciples came unto him; and he opened his mouth and taught them," etc. By dropping the pronouns and using instead the nouns which they represent, it would read thus: And seeing the multitudes, Jesus went up into a mountain; and when Jesus was set, Jesus' disciples came unto Jesus; and Jesus opened Jesus' mouth, and taught the multitudes," etc.

Now let us apply this principle to the text in question; viz., Luke 23: 42, 43; which reads thus: "And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee to-day thou shalt be with me in paradise." (The comma was introduced about three hundred years ago, and therefore is not the work of inspiration. We omit it here, because it breaks the sentence.) Dropping the pronouns and substituting their nouns, it would read thus: "And the malefactor said unto Jesus, Lord, remember the malefactor when Jesus comes into Jesus' kingdom. And Jesus said unto the malefactor, Verily Jesus says unto the malefactor to-day the malefactor shall be with Jesus in paradise."

Now it is evident that the malefactor could not be with Jesus in heaven on the same day they were crucified, for "Jesus died" (1 Thess. 4: 14) and was laid in the tomb, where he remained three days. After God raised Jesus from the dead (Acts 3: 15), Jesus said unto Mary Magdalene, "Touch me [Jesus] not; for I [Jesus] have not yet ascended to my [Jesus'] Father," etc. Here are three days since the promise was made to the malefactor, and the promise not yet verified, unless Jesus meant to convey the idea, by the promise, that the malefactor would on the same day be buried with him in the garden of Joseph (John 19: 38; 20: 15), which would not seem to be a very probable reply to the malefactor's prayer. Then forty days after his resurrection (Acts 1: 3) "he [Jesus] was taken up, and a cloud received him [Jesus] out of their sight."

This makes forty-three days after the promise to the malefactor, before Jesus went to heaven; and we find no evidence that the malefactor was seen to go to heaven with Jesus then. Why should he be more highly favored than David, who was a man "after God's own heart"? David is dead and buried, and has not gone to heaven. Acts 2: 29–34; 13: 36, 37.

"But," says one, "his never-dying soul went to heaven on the day of the crucifixion." We answer, it does not read so. The Bible nowhere calls the soul immortal, or never-dying, and why should we? Otherwise, how could it be said concerning Jesus (Isa. 53: 10–12), "When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin. . . . He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied; . . . because he hath poured out his soul unto death; and he was numbered with the transgressors," etc. And how could Jesus say (Matt. 26: 38), "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death," if the soul is never-dying, or immortal? Men say, "The soul is the life of the body." God says (Lev. 17: 14), "The life of all flesh is the blood thereof." These being true, we can readily see that "none can keep alive his own soul" (Ps. 22: 29); and how Jesus "poured out his soul unto death"; and how "his soul was made an offering for sin," ("and without the shedding of blood there is no remission"). Heb. 9: 22. The apostle John says (1 John 1: 7), "The blood of Jesus Christ his [God's] Son cleanseth us from all sin."

Again, the malefactor did not ask Jesus to remember him when he went to heaven; but "when thou comest into thy kingdom." Jesus had taught (Matt. 25: 31–34) that "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats; and he shall set the sheep on the right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." At that time Jesus will "remember" the malefactor, and all those who have fallen "asleep in Jesus."

Job said (14: 13), "O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret until thy wrath be past; that thou wouldest appoint me a set time, and remember me." Job and the malefactor are not the only ones who desired Jesus' remembrance at the set time appointed; viz., "at the last trump." 1 Cor. 15: 52; 1 Thess. 4: 16.

"Paradise" is a garden of trees. The garden of Eden was a paradise, and is to be restored. The Spirit said to the churches by John (Rev. 2: 7), "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." See Gen. 2: 8, 9. When God shall send Jesus Christ from heaven to earth again (Acts 3: 19–23), he will restore "all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Then the paradise lost by the first Adam must be restored by the second Adam.

O, precious promise. Delightful comfort of the gospel. "I," like David, "shall be satisfied when I awake," O Lord, "with thy likeness." O, my beloved Redeemer, thou who art "the chiefest among ten thousand," and the one who is "altogether lovely," wilt thou "remember me, when thou comest into thy kingdom"? Yours, waiting for the glorious appearing of Jesus, D. D. Lathrop.

For the World's Crisis.

CHRIST'S REGAL ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM.

The day on which our Lord made his regal entrance into Jerusalem is called "Palm Sunday" among some of the religious sects, because the people on that occasion cut down branches of the palm trees, and strewed them in the way, as they sung the coronation acclaim: "Hosanna to the son of David! Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord! Hosanna in the Highest!"—Matt. 21: 9. That this was on the first day of the week we propose to prove, and then to show that the Passover began on the fifth day thereafter; that is, late Thursday afternoon.

We read in John 12: 1, that "Jesus, six days before the passover, came to Bethany," and then in verse twelve we read that "on the next day much people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem, took branches of palm trees and went forth to meet him, and cried, Hosanna! Blessed is the king of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord!" The day on which this took place could not have been any earlier than Sunday, because his return on the morrow (Mark 12: 12–15), when he went into the temple and began to cast out them that bought and sold in the temple, indicates that this and the day on which he rode into the city were secular days; and all the other intervening days, before his crucifixion, the record of Mark proves were secular days.

Since his regal entrance was on the fifth day before the passover, it could not have been any later than Sunday without bringing the passover later in the week than the evidence warrants. Taking Sunday, then, as the day, and this being the fifth day before the passover, it proves the passover to have begun late Thursday afternoon. Christ could not, therefore, have eaten this passover, as this would make his crucifixion occur on Friday; which would make the sign he gave the Jews, that he would be "in the heart of the earth three days and three nights," to have failed of a fulfillment. For the "days" are used in distinction from the "nights," and so the days cannot include the nights; and since Christ was raised from the dead on the morning of the first day of the week, early, while it was yet dark, it was before the day began. Then none but the night with which that first day of the week began can be taken into the account. On the supposition of its being on Friday, when he was crucified, there are but two days and two nights that can be reckoned. Hence the crucifixion must have been on Thursday. As the passover could not have begun earlier than late Thursday afternoon, he could not have eaten the passover with his disciples on the night of the betrayal.

The Lord's Supper was, then, the introductory meal, in the night, or beginning of their fourteenth day, and was preparatory to the passover, which was killed in the end of the fourteenth day, at the going down of the sun. "The heart of the earth" relates to the condition of death, rather than to the disposition of the body; for as soon as death ensues the soul sleeps in its dust inanimate; not in the heart of the globe, but enclosed in the heart of its own native dust or earth. And allowing that Christ died at three P. M. on a Thursday, we can reckon the remaining part of that day as one, Friday two, Saturday three, and that is as far as we reckon the days. Then Thursday night, Friday night, Saturday night complete the three nights. For three days and three nights indicate that the nights belonged to separate days.

Those who commence to reckon these days and nights with Wednesday night, and terminate them Saturday eve, are manifestly wrong; for this makes three nights and three days, instead of three days and three nights. The order indicates that we must commence to reckon with the day instead of a night. A night and day is the natural way of expressing the Jewish day; while day and night is not; hence the expression "three days and three nights" denotes that the three days belonged not to the respective nights which followed them.

This view of it is confirmed by the testimony of the two disciples who said on the first day of the week, or Sunday, "To-day is the third day since these things were done"; and the things referred to were his being delivered to be condemned to death, and his being crucified. Hence, Sunday was the third day since he was crucified; which would fix his crucifixion on Thursday, Friday being the first day since, Saturday the second, and Sunday the third.

Then we are under the necessity of reckoning a part of Thursday, and Friday, and Saturday, for the three days; then Thursday night, Friday night, Saturday night, as the three nights; which terminate Sunday morning, when he arose. Wm. Hobbs.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT.

22. God's attributes are revealed in his works.—"For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead."—Rom. 1: 20.

God's attributes cannot be discovered.—"Canst thou by searching find out God?"—Job. 11: 7. "There is no searching his understanding."—Isa. 40: 28.

Were it not that this proposition is in the series, we should pass it by without comment, for it certainly needs charity even to think the infidel candid in the above quotations. The Apostle in Rom. 1: 20 is showing that a knowledge of God's existence and providence can be clearly learned by the physical creation, or, as the Psalmist says, "The heavens declare the glory of God; the firmament showeth his handiwork."—Psa. 19: 1. The whole universe proclaims a God, infinite in power, wisdom and righteousness. But with this display of his glory and majesty we cannot find him out to perfection; and if the sceptic had quoted the whole verse in Job. 11: 7, he would have answered his own cavil. We will here quote it, so that our readers may see how beautifully the Bible explains itself: "Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?" This at once takes from the infidel the apparent discrepancy which was made by garbling Job 11: 7. Nothing is ever gained by misrepresenting any author, unless it is a bad reputation.

23. There is but one God.—"The Lord our God is one Lord."—Deut. 6: 4.

There is a plurality of Gods.—"And God said, Let us make man in our image."—Gen. 1: 26. "And the Lord God said, Behold the man is become as one of us."—Gen. 1: 26. "And the Lord appeared unto him [Abraham] in the plains of Mamre. . . . And he lifted up his eyes and looked, and lo, three men stood by him; and when he saw them he ran to meet them from the tent door, and bowed himself toward the ground, and said, My Lord, if now I have found favor in thy sight, pass not away, I pray thee, from thy servant."—Gen. 18: 1, 2, 3. "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost."—1 John 5: 7.

The oneness of the Eternal Father is everywhere taught in the Holy Writings. Truly we can say our God is one. But this by no means implies that the word God always means the same Eternal Spirit. It is applied to idols and to men in many places in the Holy Scriptures, as the reader will see by examining a Concordance. The word God is also applied to his angels. In Gen. 1: 26 it is said: "And God said, Let us make man in our image." The word here translated God, is, in Hebrew, Elohim, and is the same word translated gods in Gen. 3: 5.

The word Elohim is plural, and is applied to the angels of the Eternal Spirit, who bear the name of him who sent them.

In order to satisfy the reader that the above is true, we will give one case in point. In Psa 97: 7, it is said of Christ, "Worship him, all ye gods." And Paul in quoting the text in Hebrews 1: 6* gives it thus: "Let all the angels of God worship him." Hence, Gen. 1: 26, where the plural form is used, applies to God's angels, who came to do his will in the creation of man. The Deity can, at pleasure, empower his angels to perform his will, and what he does, by or through them, he does himself. After man sinned, the Elohim says, "The man has become as one of us, to know good and evil." Hence, all these plural forms find their solution in the word Elohim, which is also plural, and in many cases they have also the verbs agreeing with them in numbers. We cannot believe that the Deity personally came to earth, and performed all the acts ascribed to him.

But as we have before seen, the Deity has put his name in the angels who do his will on earth. This position is fairly illustrated in Gen. 18: 1, 2, 3, which the skeptic quotes to falsify the Bible, but which in reality tends to harmonize its difficulties. In this case the three angels who met Abraham, he calls "My Lord." Hence this very text takes from the infidel his chief weapon of attack. So far as 1 John 5: 7 is concerned, we would remark that the three which bear record in heaven are, the Father, who is the one Deity, and the Word, which was made flesh by the Deity, and dwelt among men; and the Holy Spirit, which proceeds forth from the (one) Father and the (one) Son. And as to the three being one, we would say, they are one as far as the bearing of the record is concerned (as the sense of the text implies), but not "one God," which would ignore the sense of divine revelation. We therefore conclude that these passages are fairly explained by the Scriptures themselves; and had the compiler of "Self-Contradictions" been as zealous in learning the Scriptures as he has been in trying to find discrepancies in them, he would not now have been found fighting against God.

We now . . . . appeal to the candor and good sense of the reader to decide whether there is ONE proposition fairly sustained by the infidel who wishes to destroy confidence in the blessed Bible, so that he may sow rank weeds of a heartless and unholy philosophy in the minds of men. May the God of the Bible smile upon the writer and reader, and may his truth lead us into the way of life and the glories of eternity.

DISCUSSIONS.

The Lord willing, we are to have a discussion at Edenboro, Pa., with Bro. Townsend (Methodist), to commence Tuesday evening, June 1st, and continue through the week. Will preach Sabbath, June 6th, as Bro. Jonas Wendell may arrange.

TRACTS.

This is the time to scatter tracts. The interest to read them keeps increasing. We find it difficult to supply the demand. A few years since people would scarcely notice a tract that said anything about the coming of Jesus, the sleep of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, the saints' inheritance, or the other great truths of the Bible; but now they are the very ones they are anxious to obtain. With the demand for them has arisen a class of self-denying men and women, who are ready to take special pains to scatter them. With a little extra effort, we think more may be done within a year, to spread the precious truths of the Bible, than has been accomplished in the last ten. Sectarian walls are tumbling down, and the Lord's true children in all the churches are beginning to hunger after the very things contained in the tracts, which have been kept from their sight and examination by those who have frightened them by the cry of infidelity. They now see that those who oppose us are not prospered in their opposition; and seeing this, they are ready to examine the reasons of our hope.

Now the question is, shall they have the tracts? Who has some spare money to give for this object? It is a very profitable investment. Come, let us make a new effort in this direction. Dear brethren and sisters, take hold of the work with a strong hand. Please send in a few hundred dollars at once for this great and important work. Let the tract column swell rapidly.

THE PRAYER-MEETING.

It is all important to keep up the prayer-meetings. If they are neglected, a great loss is sustained. They are the breath of life to the church. Those who faithfully attend them and take an active part, will find themselves in possession of peace and joy, with a bright hope; while others, who stay away when they might go, are destitute of these things. We may not see any special progress from attending a single meeting, and yet we often do; but the strength and nourishment received in a year is of no small value. Deprived of it, we should be quite barren of christian comfort.

The season is at had when people are inclined to neglect the prayer-meetings. The evenings are getting short; a long day's labor produces much weariness, and many do not get their supper in season to attend. Would it not be well to stop work a little earlier the day of the prayer-meeting; have supper at an earlier hour, and go promptly to the meeting? Those who do this receive great benefit. The devoted men and women who have lived in the past have been specially noted for their faithful attendance at the prayer-meetings; while those who have neglected them have never been distinguished for their piety.

If one is really tired, he will find the prayer-meeting a most excellent place to get rested. This is the experience of all who have tried it. We never needed the benefit of the prayer-meetings more than at the present time. The perils of the last days surround us on every side. This is the time when we should exhort one another, and so much the more, as we see the day of the Lord approaching.

NAPOLEON III.

All eyes are watching the movements of Napoleon. He is the observed of all observers. Those who have rejected the idea that Napoleon is a prophetic man, now begin to see things in a different light, and are ready to admit that his dynasty, beginning with Napoleon I., is represented by the seventh head of the scarlet-colored beast (Rev. 17), and its eighth form after it had a "deadly wound" and was "healed."

We clip the following from one of our exchanges:—

"The Legislative Body, Dec. 1, 1851, having terminated their operations, all the members, with their president at their head, and all the members of the Senate and all the Councillors of State, resorted to St. Cloud. The ceremony took place in the grand gallery of Apollo, in the palace of St. Cloud. The Emperor entered the gallery, and took his place before the throne. . . . 'The new reign,' he thus spoke, 'which you inaugurate to-day, has not for its origin, like so many others in history, violence, conquest, or craft. It is, you come to declare, the legal result of the will of the whole people, which consolidates in the midst of calmness what had been founded in the bosom of agitations. I am penetrated with thankfulness toward the nation which three times in four years has sustained me by its suffrages, and each time has augmented the majority only to increase my power. . . . I take to-day, with the crown, the name of Napoleon III., because the logic of the people has already given it to me in their acclamations, because the Senate has alike proposed it, and because the entire nation has ratified it. Is it, however, to say that, in accepting the title, I fall into the reproachful error of a prince, who, returning from exile, declared null and of no effect all that had been done in his absence? Far from me be such frenzy. Not only do I recognize the governments which preceded me, but I inherit in some sort what they have done of good or evil; for successive governments in spite of their different origin, are responsible for their predecessors. But the more I accept all, after fifty years, that history has transmitted with its inflexible authority, the less am I permitted to pass in silence the glorious reign of the head of my family, and the regular, though ephemeral title of his son (king of Rome.) . . My reign does not date from the year 1815; it dates from the moment you come to make known to me the suffrages of the nation. The Napoleonic dynasty recommenced.

At a grand military fete, May 10, 1852, in the Champ de Mars, Napoleon III. restored the eagles to the armies of France. He thus addressed the soldiers: 'The Roman eagle, adopted by the Emperor at the commencement of this century, was a brilliant signal of the grandeur of France. It disappeared among our calamities. It ought to return when France, raised up from her defeats, should no more repudiate her proper glory. Soldiers! take again the eagles which have so often led our fathers to glory.' In the beginning of the year 1855, as recorded in the Moniteur, he thus addressed, before the palace of the Tuileries, a detachment of the Imperial Guard previous to its departure to join the army of the Crimea; 'Soldiers! the French people, in the sovereignty of their will, have set up again many things deemed forever dead, and now the empire is reconstituted. . . . The Imperial Guard, the heroic representative of military glory and honor, is here before me, surrounding the Emperor as of yore, wearing the same uniform, carrying the same flags. . . . Receive, then, those eagles, which will lead you on to victory, as they led your fathers. . . . Soon will you help to plant our eagles on the walls of Sebastopol.'"

We do not see room to doubt that the Napoleon dynasty fills up the history of the scarlet-colored beast that carries the "woman," that represents the Roman Catholic church. And as certain as this be true, we must be near the end of this dispensation, if this were the only scripture to show it; but instead, is the fact there are some eighteen or twenty other chains of prophecy all converging to the same focal point, proving, in the most satisfactory manner, that we are very near the end of this dispensation.

"DESIRE TO DEPART."

A Bro. wishes to know our view of Phil. 1: 20-24. We have frequently spoken on this subject in the columns of the Crisis; but as we are continually receiving new subscribers, who have not seen any thing on this scripture, we cheerfully speak again.

We think we shall find, on examination, that this scripture affords no proof that man has a soul that lives on in a conscious state after the death of the physical organism. In verse 20, Paul says: "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death." It will be observed that "life" and "death" are attributed to the body, not to the spirit. There is not a word about soul or spirit in all the apostle says upon the subject. Why should we assume that he means what he does not say? If he meant that his real self was an immortal soul that would leave him at death, and go to be with the Lord, why does he not say so some where in his fourteen letters? Why has he kept the matter as secret as murder? He says: "I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you"; but he has kept back every thing about an immortal soul or spirit; therefore that subject is not profitable. He says again: "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." As he has not declared a word about any immortal nature in man, it can not be "the counsel of God." Paul must be in harmony with himself. He places all his hope of a future life in the resurrection of the dead.

We will now attend more particularly to what he says in Phil. 1: 20-24.

The question is asked, "How could death be gain, if it only reduced him to a state of unconsciousness?" Just as it would be to Job, who said, "O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave." Paul had been "in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, . . . in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea; . . . in weariness and painfulness, . . . in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness"; "in stripes above measure"; "of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one; thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned," till his enemies supposed they had killed him. This was the fruit of his labor; and would be till death should end the scene. Hence he could well say, "to die is gain," because, like Job, he would then be at rest.

If we consider all that Paul says, his language implies that he meant it would be gain to Christ. After saying, "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death"; he then says, "for to me to live is Christ," i. e., gain to Christ; "and to die is gain" also to Christ; for he "shall be magnified in my body, whether by life or by death." Whichever takes place he will magnify Christ. Paul was not seeking his own gain, but to magnify the Lord.

2. How could it be better to depart and be with Christ, unless he was "in a state of conscious bliss"? If Paul did "depart" and go to be with Christ, then, of course, he would be translated, and thus be personally with Christ, without dying. Paul says, I am in a strait betwixt two." What does he mean by "two"? He had been speaking of living in this state of things, amidst many perils, and of dying. He did not know which of the two he should choose; but there was a third consideration, which was "far better," and that was "to depart and to be with Christ." We think this feeling is common among christians. Paul does not hint that his essential self was going to be with Christ, while the rest of him would be dead, and laid in the grave. He no where intimates that he should be alive between death and the resurrection. If he died, his only hope of a future life was in the resurrection of the dead.

Another fact should be considered in the examination of this subject. The word analuo, rendered "depart," in Phil. 1: 23, occurs in one other passage (Luke 12: 36), where it is rendered return—"When he will return from the wedding." Which of these renderings should have the preference? The following facts may aid us in deciding: "In twenty-two manuscripts of the Septuagint, including the Oxford, it [analuo] is used in Josh. 22: 8, for the Hebrew word [shoov], which always signifies 'to return.'"—Debt and Grace, p. 257. The "Emphatic Diaglott" renders the passage as follows: "I have an earnest desire for the returning and being with Christ, since it is very much to be preferred." This rendering is in harmony with all that Paul has written; but if any contend for the word "depart," instead of "return," then, all that can be made out of the passage is an expressed desire for translation.

3. We do not see any proof in the language of Paul that he thought he could live out of "the flesh." To be in harmony with himself, all he can mean was simply that it was better for the church to have him live than to die. Wakefield renders the passage as follows:—"Nevertheless to continue in this life," etc. By abiding "in the flesh," we understand him to mean being alive, in opposition to death. The idea that he could live out of the flesh is mere assumption, and opposed to the whole scripture, common sense, and philosophy.

Many consider the passage just examined the strongest in the Bible to prove that man is immortal; but we cannot see the least evidence in it to prove such a doctrine.

REVERENCE.

Some seem to think that, when they witness imposing religious ceremonies in a church, there must be great devotion to the Lord and reverence for holy things. We think the opposite of this is true in most cases. In no church is there seen so much ceremony, display, and apparent esteem for christianity as in the Roman; and yet in none is Christ so little loved and honored.

The following from the foreign correspondent of the Boston Journal is to the point. Writing from Rome, March 29th, 1869, he says:—

"In one of the chapels of St. Peter's there is morning and evening service, attended by the canons and priests of the Cathedral. I never saw so irreverent a set of men. While the service is going on they laugh and talk, read letters, take snuff, blow their noses, as men might do who were on change. The very stools on which they kneel are spit-boxes which they use constantly during service. Men who repeat the same thing over twice a day, 365 days in a year, cannot be expected to take much interest in the performance. The chorister of the Pope's choir uses a pitch-pipe and gives the key to each part after the old New England fashion. Nobody would believe without seeing it, the things that take place at the Holy Stairs, or at the toe of St. Peter, which is so constantly kissed. The contrast between the grinding poverty of the masses of Rome and the regal state of the Cardinals is very marked and very suggestive. The multitude of priests in Rome is marvelous. They are found everywhere with their uniform. There is scarcely a house that has not one or more connected with it. Some English ladies with whom I am acquainted complain that a priest came through their room every morning, sometimes before they were up, and sometimes while they were dressing. They made remonstrance, but without avail. Rome lives on strangers, and yet tolerates the most intolerant inconveniences. It is the dirtiest place on the continent. The lower stories of the houses, where parties are obliged to take rooms, are offensive beyond description. Swarms of vermin infest the dwellings. Food is scarce and poor. The milk is from goats, and is exceeded by nothing but the butter in its rankness. The charges of every description are enormous. It is a comfortable reflection at night that you can't get out. The gates are locked and guarded, and no one goes beyond the city after a certain hour in the evening. There is miasma in the air in the morning and death in the evening. You must give up your passports before you enter Rome, and every one pays a tribute to the Pontiff before he can depart."

SPIRITUALISM.

We are aware that some of our readers think we overrate the power of Spiritualism. They consider it quite a harmless affair. Did they know what we do, and see and hear what we have seen and heard, they would wonder we did not say more about it. If the lovers of truth, and the friends of Jesus really knew what an enemy they have in Spiritualism, they would rejoice to see any barrier raised against it; and would desire to be thoroughly informed in relation to all its Satanic operations and plans. For this reason we have given our readers, from time to time, a few of the sayings and doings of Spiritualists. We purpose to keep them posted somewhat concerning the movements of this arch enemy of Christ and Christianity.

In Chicago is a paper published, professedly under the direction of the higher order of spirits; such as Daniel Webster, John Quincy Adams, Socrates, Martin Luther, Robert Rantoul, Benjamin Franklin, and others, in which we find the following:—

"New and divine government, church and state combined. A democratic, theocratic government. Woman representing the church. Man representing the state. The church controlling the state. To be democratic, the power must be in the hands of the people. To be theocratic, the power must be in the hands of the angel world."

One special purpose of the spirits is to unite Monarchy and Republicanism into one system, and then control it themselves. These two systems are now combined in Napoleon III. His is nominally a Republican Monarchy. He is an Emperor—not crowned—voted into his high position by the people. There is now being made a strong effort to bring about a government in the United States, similar to that in the hands of Napoleon.

The "T. C. I. O." is evidently a strong secret secret society in the States, organized for the purpose of establishing an imperial government, like that in the hands of the French Emperor. Should success attend the effort, as we believe will be the case, we may expect the Emperor will be a Spiritualist. All the signs of the times indicate that stirring scenes are at hand. Things cannot remain as they are much longer. Dark clouds hang over the American nation. The great corruption in political matters must produce a revolution soon. The people are about ripe for action. They are tired and sick of the present state of things.

The following is from the "News from the Spirit World:"—

"It has been prophesied that Gen. Grant would prove to be a dictator, and that this nation would yet be under a king, but that owing to the principle of liberty being so well comprehended, that it could last but a little while. Gen. Grant has been wearing an epaulet of three stars, denoting Catholicism, or the trinity, among Protestants. It is all the same; there are but two parties now, Catholics and Spiritualists. The line must be drawn right there. Different varieties of Protestants amount to nothing."

We will copy a few more sayings from the "News from the Spirit World:"—

"I feel that the hour has come to boldly defend the Church and State party, of men and women, having combined interests for the redemption of the human race. Masculine christianity is granted by all to be a failure; but a masculine and feminine movement combined cannot fail to bring about most beneficial results. In no other way can the falsities now obtaining be crushed out, and good seed planted. I think it is time we were a 'seen and felt power.'" E. CARPENTER.

Another says:—

"We shall be the controlling power. By us the old church and government will be entirely re-constructed."

Another remarks: "Jesus of Nazereth . . . had a natural father." If this statement were true, it would make Jesus to be the greatest deceiver we ever had in the world, and unworthy of the confidence of any one. But this is the general teaching of the spirits and their followers. While they talk well about Jesus, they have no confidence in the Bible account of his birth, or the work he accomplished. Says a writer in the "News from the Spirit World:" "The history of Jesus was started on a lie."

Another says:—

"No wonder Christianity is a failure. Man alone cannot redeem this world. . . . We should never have had Protestants if women would live with men promiscuously, without marrying them."

"SIN NO MORE."

BRO. GRANT:—In the eighth chapter of St. John, we have the account of the woman taken in adultery. It is claimed by some that the Savior sanctioned adultery in the 11th verse. Please give what light you have, and oblige. S. NYE."

If the Savior sanctioned adultery," why did he say to the woman, as recorded at the close of the 11th verse, "Go, and sin no more"? What can be plainer than that the Savior calls her adulterous act a "sin;" but he would not condemn her, if she would "go and sin no more." Those who say Christ sanctioned adultery, might as reasonably call him a liar and a deceiver.

FROM BRO. IRA FANCHER.

"For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven."—Matt. 22: 30.

Now, my dear Bro. and all of like precious faith, is not the above text good enough to stimulate us to action and perseverance? Only think! Be as the angels of God in heaven, and, as Luke has it, "Neither can they die any more." Still more, we that are alive at that day have the promise of being changed in the twinkling of an eye. Still more glorious, for in John 11: 26, Jesus says, "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me [when Christ comes, as I understand] shall never die." Glory to God in the highest! Now, dear waiting ones, I must say the above declarations of God's word are good enough.

But Paul says (Rom. 8: 11), "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." But says one, there is an "if." Truly. I did not put the "if" in, but inspiration did. So I believe if the Spirit that raised Christ from the dead does not dwell in us, we shall not be raised to life, or changed if living when Christ comes. "For if we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his." For, says the word, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." But not so with those that die in Adam, according to my belief. So I would say to my brethren and sisters of like precious faith, let God's blessed Spirit dwell in you continually. Do not have it as a transient visitor. Soon we shall, according to my belief, put on immortality and be sons and daughters to the Lord Almighty.

I believe it to be a glorious truth that Jesus will come on the tenth day of the seventh month in the year of the world 5994; that is, Sunday, the seventeenth of October, 1869. This is a solemn question, not to be trifled with; for if it finds no foundation in the book of God, then being deceived I know not what to believe on this point. But if it be the word of God, then wo is me if I preach it not; for the solemn charge of heaven is, Preach the word! Therefore, to those dear friends who so much dread to see me venture again on definite time, I have only to say, I am not my own, being bought with a price. I can no longer either heed their kind advice, nor choose my own way. "For if yet I please men I should not be a servant of Christ."—Gal. 1: 10. Let one and all be ready, is my prayer.—The Voice.

TRACTS FOR THE SOUTH.

We have no tracts adapted in every way to the South. Bro. Wadsworth and ourselves have found great difficulty in circulating the tracts sent us, both among white and colored. Among the whites there exists an unconquerable prejudice against everything that bears the mark of a northern origin, especially that of religious reading. The remark is, "We want none of your Yankee religion." Anything marked Boston is especially rejected and spurned by almost every white person. It is throwing away money, labor and time to place our tracts as they are now printed in the hands or dwellings of these southern men and women. Much of our labor and that of Bro. Wadsworth has no doubt been lost by not having the tracts suited and adapted to this locality and people.

While this objection may not be urged with regard to the colored people so far as their prejudices are concerned, yet they are so intimately connected with the white people that tracts or books given to them are seen and repudiated by the white people, who more or less exercise over them an influence calculated to render null and void all impressions received. Many of the tracts given to colored people have to be read to them by the white people whom they serve, and if the tract is objectionable in any way it will not be read.

And then, again, there are but few among the colored people who can read at all, especially out of the large cities; and those who can read, cannot read and understand one tenth of our tracts, they are written in a style so far above their comprehension. And this is true also of the common white people. Neither class can read and digest a theological discussion or an essay written by the set rules of rhetoric. These people must have simple words and plain language; and the tract must not be written to show the gift of the writer, but to give light to those who sit in darkness.

I have always felt the need of tracts suited for distribution among all classes here; and have felt sad to see so much thrown away here in the shape of printed paper. For this reason I have never solicited tracts or papers bearing a northern imprint to be sent to me for circulation. It is seldom that they will be received and read. Many will take them from our hands, but as soon as they discover where they were printed and came from they will throw them away, and oftentimes with an oath.

I have long felt moved to attempt the publication of a series of tracts adapted to the wants of the southern people, with a southern impression upon them. Since Bro. Wadsworth's return, and hearing from him his experience and his want of such tracts to distribute, I have come to the conclusion that if God should open the way and give me the means, I would write and publish here what would be adapted to the wants and conditions of all classes, especially the common people, among whom most of our labor must be performed. Tracts that can be read without prejudice and with confidence are the only ones that will do good.

Bro. Wadsworth wishes me to add that if he had the kind of tracts he wants, or those published here, he could do much more good and should suffer less persecution and hardship—that much of his hardship comes from being regarded as a "Yankee," and a "northern spy;" which impression he cannot remove while carrying tracts published at the north. He says he should find friends and help every where if he had tracts published here, and could thus remove the people's suspicion and prejudice. He says he is quite discouraged in trying to give the light under these circumstances. All along on the way he has been told by ministers and educated people, that if he would get his tracts from Nashville, or some other southern city the whole country would receive them, and he could go anywhere without hindrance or cost. I trust the Lord will open the way for a more effectual work among this people of both races, giving them the light by whatever means he pleases.

As soon as our school closes, and I can get the time, I shall prepare and publish for Bro. Wadsworth to scatter a tract calling the attention of all to the judgment at hand. Any wishing to aid in scattering this tract can send to either of us what the Lord may give them for this purpose. I. I. LESLIE.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

M. GRANT:—Dear Bro.: I have long been impressed to write you a letter, giving you some insight into the state of the professing churches, and more particularly God's cast-out people, in England. To ease my mind of a burden which has lately become so heavy, and cheer the heart of our pilgrim-brethren in the New World, I have taken my pen to communicate the news to you.

I shall pass by all our individual affairs, for it seems to me the less we can say of ourselves the better, unless by telling our tribulation and persecution for Christ's sake others are encouraged to remain steadfast, and do battle more nobly in the great fight. If I should ever feel that such is the case, I may then tell you some interesting items—some waifs of experience, to which, by God's grace, and the honor put upon you, you are no stranger.

But to leave this, and for the state of England. England is upheaved, I think I may say, in every sense of the word, except physically. She is upheaved in politics, in a social point of view, and in religion. Commotion is truly among all sections of the professing church. The ministers must observe it. "What is truth?" is an old cry; but it has not yet died out. Ever and anon its reverberations from all quarters fall on the ear. God's people, who endeavor to walk under his eye, and look for the sunshine of his face, being free men will not be bound to a skeleton theology; and the substance and symmetry of the gospel are eagerly sought after in this day in England. Of course you will understand me that I do not predicate this of the "present evil world" which is so much seen in profession. Of these I may say they have a garb; but not the dress. They show fair; but are foul. Their fruits may be seen in conversaziones, penny readings from popular authors, and such unseparate and worldly delights. They take the name of the Holy and Just One; but they do not take him in the heart as their hope.

Now let me say also that D.D.'s and B.A.'s count not for much at the present in England; in many cases they are considered but the addition of letters, and unbecoming those who follow the One who never sought such titles himself. How blessed they who working for God seek only the praise of their Master—Christ. I say, beloved, there is one of those inquiries in England which threatens to lay bare all creeds, and examine all faiths. O, our God knows that there is a need of an unsettling, that men may be established in Him of whom it is written—"The Lord liveth, and blessed be our Rock."

The world hates disturbance; and so it rests easy and won't inquire. It calls orthodoxy true, without seeing that it is true; and there are so many worldlings to clamor, that their noise is as the sound of many waters; but the Lord knoweth them that are his, and observes those who stand up for his glory. We have watched this inquiry with deep interest, which has been increasing and ever deepening. Think you the emotions of our hearts; and you may conceive how they have been enlarged daily. We were, as it were, in the first small circles in England. When we first saw "the gift of God" to be "eternal life," there seemed to be hardly another in the country; but it seems now there were many as separate from tradition as the unknown three thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal. Of the ability which God has given we have spoken into every open ear we could command his truth; and who knows how much the word has accomplished the thing for which it was sent, through our instrumentality?

I have just begun to publish in its behalf. But, as you are aware, those who dare to speak the honest convictions of their souls don't get all praise; we rather think it to be as Christ promised his followers—all cross in the world; we have found it "tribulation." But we care not for scowls, scorns, mockings, persecutions, trials, crosses, or denials, for we are on "The Winning Side," which is "God's side." The impartial justice that shall be meted out at the bar of God and from the throne of burning splendor will make all even, and every loss shall be more than made up; every expenditure paid over and over; every cross be annihilated in victory.

There are good men, godly men, eminent men, to-day numbered among those who profess "life only in and by Christ," and death to all outside him. Preaching brethren of the Church of England, such as Messrs. Minton and Ker; men of the Baptist denomination, whose names I may not communicate; men of Congregational bodies, known privately to me; men of the "Plymouth Brethren" fellowship; and Wesleyans. Men are coming out from all persuasions into the truth. Ministers and laymen are awaking from their deep, long lethargy, announcing that "the day is at hand." God's jewels are being seen, and many are emerging from pagan superstition and darkness. And I have private communication speaking of the Chairman of nearly the greatest (if not the greatest) body in England, who firmly holds this truth. I am informed that he has a work in the press, but intends keeping it back till the meeting of the "great body" of divines, when, I trust, God will give him the heart of a lion, with the eloquence of his Son, and the disposition of a lamb, to stand for the defense of the gospel.

O, if you will but believe me, England is moved—is moved to the centre; and the days of unscriptural dogmas are numbered. Dr. Leask has come out well in "The Rainbow," and others are ready. I can tell the state of affairs, for I have within sight I should think, at a guess, more than two hundred letters from all parts of England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales; and many of these are from ministering brethren of various denominations,—for the tract "Immortality only in Christ," for circulation among their people. Many towns have their few who speak to each other in the fear of the Lord. I have sent out about four or five thousand tracts in the last few weeks. I take this earnest inquiry as a token of the day dawn; as the harbinger of the coming glory.

There is a great work doing in England. . . The Macedonian cry is, "Come over and help us!" If the Lord leads you here, we give you a hearty welcome to our hospitality during your stay. If you want to be brimmed with joy in seeing your labors owned and blessed in the conversion of sinners from the error of their ways, "Come!" but let all this be subservient to your knowledge of the will of God. Beloved, run after Him, even if he leads you to Europe!

We want one of each of your works, with permission to reprint the same, especially tracts, "Scripture Searchers," etc. We have heard of "Debt and Grace," but have not yet seen a copy. If the author of "The Bible Triumphant" would send us a copy, we would feel obliged. We love "The Crisis"; it comes regularly, and we look for it too. It is that companion which would be missed if discontinued. Our sets are nearly all given away. We wish at times we had it complete from its commencement. We should have sent you some cash, but we are laying out what we have in circulating the truth in England.

Let any of the brethren write. We desire an interchanging of sympathy, and thoughts, and love, between America and England. We would speak "face to face"; for though the broad Atlantic rolls between us, we are near to each other; oh, so near! "members one of another." By faith we can see each other; for we are enabled to look at God's Anointed, the Head, and New Man, in whom are all the church—his body. We can feel fellow-sympathy, for a oneness of life pervades us all; and love alike, because the heart's warm affections flow into us all. We are in the same wilderness; we travel to the same home; we have the same hope. Truly we are "one."

We shall be together soon. We are often together now at the mercy-seat; we shall be soon together at the throne. And for so long. Years shall slink away with shame. Exhort all who love Christ to wait for him, DESIRING his appearing. Exhort all believers to joy in God, who is the Father of all those who are in Christ Jesus.

I am in a strait; pray for me. I feel often the Lord calls me to go forth "a faithful ambassador" for him. Pray the Lord, if it be indeed his will, to open the way, and, filling me with the Holy Ghost and much assurance, send me out to do valiantly in the field.

And now, praying for all peace on you, I conclude, remaining yours, by Jesus Christ, W. KELLAWAY.

P. S.—A purse of one hundred guineas has been offered by a brother in London with the advertisement of "Immortality only in Christ," in the leading papers, for one text proving the natural immortality of the soul. An Archbishop has referred us to 1 Cor. 15. "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption." What a proof! W. K.

GEO. L. WHITE, Sec. pro tem.

☞ St. Peter tells us that the end of the world "will come like a thief in the night; in which the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat."—(2 Peter 3: 10, 12.) The discoveries of science explain to us what this "fervent heat" is. It is heat sufficiently intense to raise molten clouds from the vapor of burning metals. And at the same time tell us where inconceivable quantities of these boiling metals are even now kept in store, ready at the word of the Creator to set on fire the very heavens, and to fall in showers and consume the earth, and all the works thereof.

☞ An echo in Woodstock Park, Oxfordshire, Eng., repeats seventeen syllables by day, and twenty by night; but the most remarkable echo known is one on the north side of Shipley church in Sussex, which distinctly repeats twenty-one syllables.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. H. G. MCCULLOCK writes:—"Dear brethren—It has seemed to be the good pleasure of my heavenly Father to cast my lot in Ohio. Now what I want is, to hear from all who love the coming of the Savior and kindred truths, from the Ohio river to the lake, and from Indiana to Pennsylvania. I do not mean those who make slight doctrinal differences a breach of love and sympathy, but those who make Christian character the test of fellowship. The object I have in view is to find out localities where there are those who love the present truth, and whether we can have your aid in sustaining an Evangelist in the State of Ohio. It ought to stand shoulder to shoulder with Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, and other Western States.

Eight years ago we were in Illinois, about where we are now in Ohio to-day. Illinois has two conferences, and over thirty preachers. Now we want to put a man of God into the field as soon as means for his support can be obtained. Brothers and sisters, rich or poor, throughout the entire State, will you sit down and write me at once? Do not put it off. You may forget it. If you are poor, pray for us. If God has blessed you, send in your pledges; and a statement of how much received and how applied will be made in the Crisis and Voice. We are doing this for God. What is done must be done quickly. O Lord, revive thy work in Ohio!

H. G. MCCULLOCK, Pastor of A. C. church, Nevada, Wyandot Co., Ohio."

BRO. J. W. THOMAS writes from Lowell, May 17th:—"The interest in the meetings here is steadily increasing. The people are studying the Scriptures to see whether these things are so. Some of other denominations have come out decidedly for the truth, and are not ashamed to be identified with those who are looking for the Son of man from heaven. . . . Some have recently started for the kingdom.

Yesterday was a pleasant day after the storm, while all nature looked so beautiful and the sun was shining so brightly upon the earth. I felt I could sing with the poet:

"At rest again, the storm has passed away,
On waveless floods my bark serenely glides;
The gloomy night has turned to holy day,
And in my heart the peace of God abides."

At noon we gathered beside the old Merrimac river, and nine happy souls were buried in the likeness of Christ's death. It is encouraging to see individuals coming out from the world in these days of abounding wickedness, and following in the footsteps of the meek and lowly Jesus. The Lord has some excellent children in Lowell, and I know if they will only continue to pray and keep down at the feet of Jesus, willing to perform every duty, we shall see still greater manifestations of God's power in the salvation of sinners."

BRO. J. F. RATHGEBER, Freemansburg, Pa., writes:—"On May 2nd, I was compelled to break off my connection with the Evangelical Association, of which I have been a member for sixteen years, by reason of the blessed hope that is within us. Our minister forbade me to say any thing in regard to the blessed hope we confess, or to give out tracts, and he would in the pulpit denounce all such. Therefore three of us have resolved to hold weekly prayer meetings, and try to serve God as well as we can by his help."

BRO. L. BOUTELL writes:—"I have been and still am laboring with the church in Fairhaven, Mass. I find here the true faith, with seeming harmony in the church. They have a neat chapel, a good Sunday school, and a good congregation of interesting hearers of the gospel of the kingdom of heaven at hand, and the signs of our Lord's speedy coming. God bless them. 'It is high time to awake out of sleep.' Salvation is coming speedily."

Obituaries.

TURNER. Died at Levant, Me., March 16th, 1869, Joseph Turner, aged seventy-eight years, ten months and fourteen days.

Our brother was one who loved and lived out the teachings of the Bible. He leaves a beloved wife and many friends in Christ to mourn their loss, while he sweetly sleeps beside all his children. "He being dead yet speaketh," by his example of faith. In this life he has fed the hungry and clothed the naked. At his death he left for the mission work in the South, under Bro. and Sr. H. L. Hastings, one thousand dollars, and a like amount for the free distribution of tracts, to the "Advent Christian Publication Society." Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Col. 3: 4.
FREDERICK A. BAKER.

SARGENT. Died in Henniker, N. H., April 21st, of quick consumption, Mary Naamah, wife of Geo. W. Sargent, aged twenty years, nine months, and four days.

The subject of this notice was as a jewel in the world, possessed of a meek and quiet disposition. She leaves a husband and an infant, and many friends, to mourn, but if we prove true to her Savior we shall meet her on the other shore.

"So rests the worn and wearied heart,
So sleeps the pale and wasted form,
Till the dull shades of night depart,
Till bursts the fair eternal morn."

COOLEY. Died in Corinna, Me., March 27th, my father, Elisha Cooley, aged fifty-four years and two months.

He fell peacefully asleep in Jesus, after an illness of twelve days. When will cruel death lose its sting? Words of consolation were spoken by Elder Israel Damman, from these words: "And there shall be no more death." Rev. 21: 4.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, May 21. The new duplicate Telegraph line to connect London and Valencia was completed to-day. It is to be used solely for the transmission of cable business. Two Atlantic cables are in perfect working order. Hereafter one cable will be used exclusively for sending dispatches from Valencia, and the other for receiving. There is no longer any reason why messages should not be transmitted almost instantaneously between London and New York.

It is rumored in Paris that changes are to be made in the Emperor's Cabinet, and that all the present members are to be removed except M. M. Forcade, Duruy and Gressier.

PARIS. Negotiations for a conference between France and Belgium have been completed. The session of the Commission will open in this city at an early day.

MADRID, May 22. The Republican newspapers of this city assert that the recent vote of the Cortes has only deferred the scheme for a Federal Republic, not defeated it. A Republic, sooner or later, must come through the want of a monarch and the absence of unanimity on the part of a majority of the Cortes.

LONDON, May 23. The difficulty with the Chinese Government, arising out of the persecution of the Christians in the north, has been settled. The latest dispatches from the British Legation at Pekin, state that the Mandarin who countenanced the persecution has been removed from office.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, May 20. The Herald's Havana correspondence of the 15th inst. gives the important intelligence that the Republic of Cuba has been formally established by a Congress held at Guirnaro, a small town of the Central Department of the Island, about twenty leagues east of Puerto Principe.

RITUALISM IN THIS COUNTRY.—It is stated that Bishop McIlvaine of Ohio has summoned for ecclesiastical trial Rev. Mr. Colin Tate, on the alleged charge of introducing ritualistic ceremonials into the worship of the church of which he was rector. The American Church Union at New York lately adopted a series of resolutions indorsing Rev. Mr. Tate's action, and promising him legal and pecuniary support in his trial. Several prominent ritualistic clergymen spoke strongly in his favor, and expressed themselves gratified that an opportunity of testing the ritualistic question before an American Ecclesiastical Court was likely to present itself.

THE DARK DAY.—This is the anniversary of the famous "dark day" which occurred May 19th, 1780. Not only was the day dark, "but likewise the night, sinners to fright." Candles were used at noonday by printers in Thomas & Andrew's office, Washington street, while setting type for the first edition of the Bible printed in America, except John Elliot's Indian Bible. An old lady living near Hollis street sent her daughter to Rev. Mather Byles to inquire the cause of the phenomenon. His reply was, "Give my love to your mother, and tell her that I am as much in the dark as she is."—Transcript, 19th.

STAGNATION IN TRADE, THERE AND HERE—General trade would seem to be about as stagnant in England as it is here. From the manufacturing districts, especially, the complaint of depression is long and loud. Some little improvement is reported in a few isolated cases, but, on the whole, the condition is one of despondency. Probably the two places which most show this discouraging aspect of affairs are the cotton districts of Lancashire and the woolen towns of the West Riding of York. While the city in Lancashire is for cheaper cotton, it is remarkable that the imports in the present year have been more than ninety times greater than in 1868 from Bombay; while the Continent of Europe has received in the corresponding period three and a half times as much. The strike in the coal and iron districts of Belgium will, it is alleged, divert some French, Prussian, and Russian orders to England, of which her coal and iron masters are in much need, as the forces and iron mills are still almost silent. Russia, in consequence of the famine, is anxious promptly to employ the people, by the outlay of the new loans in the construction of the contemplated lines of railways, which will hasten orders for rails and locomotives. This will help the iron interest and the machinists, but the cotton and woolen manufacturers have no such prospect of immediate relief.

Coming nearer home, it may be added, that our trade with foreign countries is on anything but a satisfactory basis—the imports at this port alone, since January 1st, running ahead of the exports, some fifty millions of dollars. This looks like overtrading; and if it is not checked, serious embarassments, as well as increased stagnation, will be the result.

FARE ON THE PACIFIC.—First class passage by rail from New York to Chicago, a distance of nine hundred and sixty miles, does not cost more than $25 in greenbacks, or a little over two and a half cents per mile. At the same rate a first class passage from New York to San Francisco would cost about $82.50 in greenbacks. The present charges on the Pacific Railroad are at the rate of five cents per mile on the Union, and ten cents per mile gold on the Central. At these figures, and reducing the charges through the gold rates, circulating greenbacks at seventy-five cents on the dollar, we get the following approximate estimates of the cost of a first-class through ticket:

	Miles.	Fare.
New York to Chicago	960	$18 75
Chicago to Omaha	495	17 53
Omaha to Salt Lake	1,070	40 13
Salt Lake to San Francisco	774	77 50
Totals	3,299	$153 91

In the statement of distance, six miles should be added for ferriage from Oakland to San Francisco, making a total of 3,305 miles. We have assumed that the Union and Central Pacific will meet at the head of Salt Lake, 775 miles east of the Bay of San Francisco. For the distance—not quite one-fourth of the entire distance to New York—the charge on the Central Pacific is a little over that for the remaining three-fourths of the journey. The Company has given a promise, which its interests will require it to keep, materially to reduce its rates of fare in July next; they will not exceed the rate charged on the Union Pacific, and between Chicago and Omaha, which we have placed at five cents in currency. This would reduce the charge on the Central to $115.26. At this price for first-class through tickets, the trip consuming only six to eight days, the old steamship rates of $280 for a trip consuming three weeks could not be maintained. Third-class railroad fares at $50 would be relatively high, and we might expect to see emigrant tickets sold even lower than that; while second-class tickets would hardly be above $75. The cost of meals and other incidental expenses along the road, need not average over $3 per day, gold; or say a total of $25 for the trip; and most third-class passengers would lessen this item by bringing along their own supplies. We expect to see restaurant cars accompanying the first class trains eventually. With these accommodations a direct through trip, traveling night and day, can be made in comparative comfort. But many passengers who can afford the time will travel more leisurely, and mostly by daylight, in order to study the country through which they pass. A considerable number will even stop over several days at different stations near the most interesting places.—San Francisco Bulletin.

WHAT HEATHEN CONVERTS DO.—A missionary writes that a Nestorian convert traveled sixty miles through deep snow and piercing cold in the month of January, in order to be present at the administration of the Lord's Supper. How many members of the church in christian countries do not travel sixty rods to enjoy such an occasion? The converted heathen furnish us many noble examples of christian zeal.

Passing Events.

☞ The Jews of Hungary and Transylvania held in Febuary their first Congress, and regulated schools, worship, etc. They organized a congress of eighty members, to bear supreme ecclesiastical sway, and which will represent four hundred and seventy-five thousand Israelites.

☞ The opening of "The Evangelical Protestant Deaconesses' Institute" was recently celebrated in London. The institution is described by its founder and director as "a voluntary association of christian women for the performance of works of active benevolence, such as the nursing of the sick and training of the young."

☞ If the Darien Canal should be constructed, the Gulf Stream might force its way through the cut, instead of being deflected as now upon the coasts of Europe, and thus a sudden change of climate might spread disaster through the richest countries of the Old World, and England become a region of almost Artic cold.

☞ It is stated that information has been received in Montreal to the effect that the Privy Council in England is taking into consideration the advisability of relinquishing all her colonies excepting India.

☞ A financial crisis is prevailing at Montevideo, and a general crash is apprehended. The great Argentine Central Railroad is almost completed, and proposals have been called for to construct lines of telegraph across the republic.

☞ It is announced that the Emperor has at last decided to place on the Arc de Triomphe the bronze group which the first Napoleon intended for the crowning of the edifice.

☞ Since the opening of the Pacific Railroad the Government Departments have regularly received their daily mails from the Pacific coast.

☞ The Lord's Supper was celebrated on Easter Sunday in Madrid, Spain, in the Protestant fashion. Fifty communicants participated in the service. This is the first observance of this ordinance of religion in Protestant form since the time of Philip the Second.

☞ A wealthy native has contributed to one of the great idolatrous festivals of the country eighty thousand pounds of sweetmeats, eighty thousand pounds of sugar, one thousand suits of clothes, one thousand boxes of rice, plantains, and other fruits. Another gave one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, besides an annual contribution of fifty thousand dollars.

☞ Dr. Judson baptized the first Burman convert in 1819, and since that time more than 40,000 converts have been baptised.—Burmans, Karens, and Shans—making an average of about two every day. Of these twenty thousand are now living, and but a very small portion of the Karen population has been even visited or their territory explored.

☞ It has been said that an Englishman, wherever he goes, builds a public house, a Spaniard a church, a Frenchman a theatre; whilst emigrating Yankees start schools and newspapers.

The Committee of the Springfield National Advent Campmeeting are requested to meet on the camp-ground, Springfield, Tuesday, June 8th, at 12 o'clock M., to appoint the time of our Annual Meeting, and to arrange for the same.

GEO. T. ADAMS, Secretary.

Tent Meetings.

DEAR BRN.:—The time is almost come for the commencement of our Summer Campaign in tent meetings, and speedy arrangements should be made for the same. There are many places in Mass., where the doctrine of the Lord's coming and its relative truth has not been preached, the rising generation has not heard, and I hope there will be an active effort made to scatter light, Bible light and truth, in every direction, and convert the people to Bible religion and doctrine. Let new places be ferreted out, and the trumpet be blown, giving a certain sound. The alarm must be given. The Lord is coming. The watchman must be up, giving meat to the household, or the blood of souls will be found upon his garments.

If any in the new places desire a meeting, or any know of a place where the prospect seems to demand a meeting for the saving of men, let your wants be made known speedily. The tent in Chelsea, under the care of Bro. E. Morrell, is ready for the mission work in Mass. Any desirous of a meeting should communicate with Eld. E. Morrell, or Bro. E. Kingsbury, Chelsea, Mass. L. BOUTELL.

Protracted Meeting at Sugar Hill, N. H.

There will be a protracted meeting held at Sugar Hill, N. H. (D. V.), commencing Friday, June 11th, at ten o'clock A. M., and hold over the following Sunday. Elder John Couch and others of the Lord's servants will be present to preach the word. May this meeting be greatly blessed of God. A. W. SIBLEY.

Quarterly Conference.

The fourth quarterly session of the Advent Christian State Conference of New Hampshire, will be held (D. V.) at Northwood Narrows, N. H., commencing Friday, June 4th, at ten o'clock A. M., and hold over the following Sunday. Let us pray that God may greatly bless this meeting.

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

Maine Mission Tent.

We hope the tent will start soon on its summer campaign, with the blessing of God. The old and faithful tent-master is expected to go with it, and as no other minister feels able, or competent, nor will volunteer to take charge of the mission, and the committee desire that I go, I shall endeavor to do so as soon as other engagements will allow, if the Lord will. Will those in the State who intend or who desire to have a tent meeting this season, write to me as soon as they can, that we may make the most economical arrangements in our travels and time? Several have already informed us. When September arrives many wish the tent; all cannot have it then; therefore all should conclude to have it when they can. May the Lord direct and bless the work. I. C. WELLCOME.

Notice.

The State Campmeeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at New Hartford, Butler Co., Iowa, to commence June 21st, 1869. The tent will be pitched Saturday, the 19th, for public meeting, on the same ground. There will be a grocery and boarding table kept on the ground by the committee, at reasonable rates; the proceeds to be used to defray the expenses of the meeting. Hay and straw and tent frames will be furnished free. There will be no reduction in the fare on the R. R. this year. Elder Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass., is to be with us through the meeting.

Dear Brethren, we take this opportunity to invite you, one and all, to come to this yearly feast. Come early, and stay till the close of the meeting. Do not let the sacrifice of time and money prevent your coming. Bring your family, converted and unconverted. Prepare to make them comfortable, and work for God and the salvation of your children and others. You who live isolated, whose families are deprived of the gospel, are especially invited to come and get acquainted, and thereby may open a door into the regions beyond. Let all ministers come.

S. B. ENSIGN, Chairman.
W. H. PECK, Secretary of the Committee.

New York Annual Conference.

The Lord willing, the New York State Annual Conference will be held at Wolcott, Wayne Co., N. Y., commencing June 3d, 1869. A cordial invitation is extended to all the lovers of Jesus and his soon coming. Come praying that it may be the best conference we ever have held in New York. There will be homes provided for all.

Those coming from the west on the morning train, stop at Savannah. The stage leaves for Wolcott at ten o'clock. Those on the noon train stop at Clyde. The stage leaves for Wolcott at three o'clock P. M. Those from the east, take the steamboat express, which will arrive at Clyde at three o'clock P. M.

M. R. MILES.
B. P. STEVENS.

Wisconsin Annual Conference.

The Advent Christian Conference of the State of Wisconsin is to hold its next annual meeting at Prairie du Sac (in connection with the State campmeeting), beginning June 8th. All the ministers in the State who belong to the Conference, or who wish to unite with it, should be present in time. It is hoped that every church belonging to the Conference, or desiring to unite with it, will send delegates. Let us consolidate our strength, and work more vigorously and harmoniously in the cause of Christ. Time is flying, and the judgment is coming. Let us work while the day lasts, and all pull together, in the same direction, and our exertions will be crowned with abundant success, and God be glorified. WM. SHELDON, Sec.

Wisconsin Campmeeting.

The State Campmeeting for Wisconsin is to be held at Prairie du Sac, Sauk Co., beginning on Tuesday, June 8th. Friends coming on the Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien R. R., will leave the cars at Mazomanie; thence by stage, ten miles. Those coming on the Milwaukee and St. Paul R. R., will leave the cars at Kilbourn City; thence by stage twenty-five miles. The big tent is to be pitched for a meeting on the ground, Saturday evening, June 5th, and Sunday, June 6th. Other tents may also be put up at the same time.

O. S. KNAPP,
F. W. MATTS,
WM. SHELDON, } Committee.

Notice.

Our Annual Grove Meeting, at East Springwater, on the Widow Morris farm, will commence at the school-house on Friday evening, June 25th, and in the grove June 26th, at two o'clock P. M. Let there be a general turn out to this meeting, and all those interested in Springwater and elsewhere, circulate the notice and prepare the grove.

For the Brn., C. F. SWEET.

P. S. Will Bro. John or Frank Morris meet me at Springwater Valley, on the 25th, at noon?

Notice.

The Lord willing, the annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held in connection with the State Campmeeting at New Hartford, Butler Co., the campmeeting to commence June 21st, 1869; the first session of conferences to commence as early as the 23d. If ministers and delegates can be present, we should like to commence the 22d. All are cordially invited to attend. Ministers and delegates, please be punctual.

ALONZO RAYMOND, Clerk of Conf.

Notice.

Providence permitting, a tent-meeting will commence at Farmingtonville, N. H., Sunday, May 30th, and hold through the following week, and over the next Sunday. We expect some of God's faithful servants to preach the word.

The New Hymn Book—"Spiritual Melodies."

As the collection of hymns entitled "Spiritual Melodies," published by me about the time of campmeeting last fall, has not been particularly noticed in our papers, except the Christian; and, as many among us are still ignorant of the existence of such a book, I have thought well to give it a more particular notice through the Crisis. It contains almost four hundred hymns (389), embracing about all the Advent hymns that we sing, and a good assortment of hymns on Christian experience also, especially those choice old hymns of better days, all classed and arranged according to subjects, in fair sized type, making a convenient, compact, pocket hymn book for general use.

I have three styles of binding. A cheap style in flexible cloth, at thirty cents; a more durable style in neat, firm, cloth binding, at forty cents, and a nicer style in embossed leather, at fifty cts. I pay the postage always. If any want a dozen, I will sell them for five cents less; and to those who take them to sell again, I take off eight or ten cents, according as they send the money with the order or not. I will make a liberal discount in supplying tents. Send to me at No. 19 Lindall Street, Boston. I. K. LOMBARD.

"Admonitions on Church Fairs, Levees, etc.

As there is quite a call for these Admonitions, I have lately got them stereotyped, and can furnish them in any quantity desired at low rates. I will send them, postpaid, at sixty cents per hundred, or fifty cents by express; and at four dollars per thousand by express, anywhere. If those running tents desire them to scatter, I will do better than this. Send to I. K. LOMBARD, 19 Lindall Street, Boston.

CHRIST OUR "ALL IN ALL."

THE MARTYR'S HYMN.

Selected and altered by C. P. Dow.

I need no other plea,
With which to approach my God,
Than his own mercy, boundless, free,
Through Christ on man bestowed.
A Father's love, a Father's care,
Receives and answers every prayer.

I need no other priest
Than one High Priest above;
His intercession ne'er has ceased
Since first I knew his love.
Through that my faith shall never fail,
Even when passing death's dark vale.

I need no human ear
In which to pour my prayer;
My great High Priest is ever near;
On him I trust my care.
To him, him only, I confess,
Who can alone absolve and bless.

I need no works by me,
Wrought with laborious care,
To form a meritorious plea,
The kingdom's bliss to share.
Christ's finished work through boundless grace,
Will there secure my dwelling place.

I need no prayers to saints,
Beads, relics, saints, or shrines,
Hardships 'neath which the spirit faints,
Yet still, sore burdened, pines.
Christ's service yields me great delight,
"Easy" his "yoke," his "burden light."

I need no other book
To guide me on my way,
Than that on which I daily look,
That tells of coming day;
God's word, when he allumes our eyes,
"Unto salvation makes us wise."

I need no priestly mass,
No purgatorial fires,
My soul to anneal, my guilt to efface,
When this brief life expires.
Christ died my "eternal life" to win;
His blood has cleansed me from all sin.

I need no other dress,
I urge no other claim,
Than his and faith's own righteousness;
With these, complete I am.
When Salem's gates shall open wide,
No passport do I need beside.

For the World's Crisis.

LIFE AND DEATH PLACED BEFORE THE SINNER.

BY J. W. THOMAS.

"I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live."—DEUT. 30: 19.

The prophet Moses here declares that he had set before the children of Israel life and death, blessing and cursing. In the first place, I wish to inquire to what life and death he refers. Does he have reference to temporal death? No. For, let the Israelites pursue what course they would they could not escape temporal death. The text takes it for granted if they obeyed God and kept themselves in his love, they would escape the death here threatened. But they might obey God in all things and still be mortal and go the way of all the earth. None can escape death. The sentence—"Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," has passed upon all men. That sentence is not to be revoked. Obedience to God will not set it aside, for we see the righteous die as well as the wicked. All are involved in the misfortune of a common mortality. All are of the dust and all must return to dust again, excepting those of the righteous who are found alive when Jesus comes. But to prove that this is the case I wish to quote a few passages of Scripture.

Rom. 5: 12; "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world and death by sin, and so death [that is, the sentence of death] passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." By Adam's transgression, death has been entailed upon all his posterity. Heb. 9: 27;—"It is appointed unto man once to die;" and the wise man says that this event happeneth to all men alike, and that men have no pre-eminence above the beasts of the field in this respect. "I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts; for that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them; as one dieth so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath. So that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast; for all is vanity. All go unto one place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."—Eccl. 3: 18-20.

This settles the question that the terms life and death as used in the text have no reference to this present, mortal life, inherited from Adam, nor to this natural or temporal death, suffered in consequence of his transgression. To what then do they refer? To eternal life and eternal death, to be enjoyed or suffered in the future, after the resurrection and the judgment, at the last day. This life will be freely given to the righteous, not because they have merited it, but because they have been willing to accept it upon God's terms. That future death will be inflicted upon the wicked, not because of Adam's sin, but because of their own personal transgressions. It will not be "eternal life in misery,' as some would have us believe, a "death that never, never dies," as we often hear sung in the popular churches; but it will be what common sense and God's word declare it to be.

We now wish to look at a few of the many Scriptures which bring to view the future destiny of the finally impenitent. First, they must be brought forth from their graves and judged, and cast off at the "left hand." John, upon Patmos, viewed that tremendous scene. He says: "And I saw a great white throne, and him who sat upon it, from whose face the heavens and the earth fled away, and no place was found for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God. And the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of the things written in the books according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell [hades, or the grave] gave up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire."—Rev. 20: 11-14.

But what will make this lake of fire, and where will it be? Let the apostle Peter answer. When speaking of the scoffers who should come in the last days, mocking, and saying, "where is the promise of his coming?" he says, "For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water. Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished. But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. . . . . But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat?—2 Pet. 3: 5-12.

This proves that this world is to be the place where the wicked will receive their punishment. But, says one, does not the Bible say the ungodly shall go away into everlasting punishment? It does. But in what does that punishment consist? Is it to wail and groan eternally in a fire that never shall go out? or is it to be "destroyed," to be "rooted out," to be "cut off," to become "as though they had not been"? Let the Bible answer. "The wages of sin is death."—Rom. 6: 23. "And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus Christ shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power."—2 Thess. 1: 7, 8. "Behold the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."—Mal. 4: 1. "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy."—Ps. 145: 20. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."—Ezekiel 18: 4. "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."—Rev. 21: 8.

These are a few of the many passages that might be produced to show that eternal death, utter extinction of conscious existence, is to be the destiny of all who "neglect this great salvation." And how dreadful the thought, to be shut out of the kingdom—banished for ever from the presence of the Lord, to go into the "blackness of darkness," and share the penalty of eternal death; to be doomed to the dark silence of irrecoverable oblivion; to be plunged beneath the billows of eternal ruin; to rise no more; to be swallowed up in the yawning waves of the lake of fire; to be dashed into the vortex of everlasting perdition; to die a death from whence there will be no resurrection. No ray of light or hope will ever illuminate the darkness. Years, chiliads, and ages, shall roll on and on, and still no voice will ever salute their ears, no sun will ever arise to dispel the darkness of that night. All will be silence and death to all eternity.

These things are not idle fancies. They are not guesswork, nor the vain imaginations of a deluded brain, but the eternal truth of the everlasting God. This death will be inflicted by him. God himself shall "roar from on high, and utter his voice from his holy habitation," pronouncing the sentence of eternal doom upon all the ungodly. It will be a fearful day to an unbelieving world, when He from whose face the heavens and earth shall pass away, who holds the vials of wrath in store for the last day, shall suddenly come forth and pour them out without mixture of mercy upon all the wicked, and they shall perish "without remedy." All that do not believe in God, but refuse to comply with his invitations, will be without a shelter in that day. The sinner may think lightly of these things now, and riot and sin on, despising the counsels which warn him to flee from the impending storm; but the day will soon come when he will repent—when repentance will be too late; probation will have passed, and the hour of mercy be forever gone. Then the sad lamentation will be taken up—"The harvest is passed, the summer ended, and we are not saved."

Such is the death which the Bible holds out before the sinner. Such will be the destiny of all who refuse to accept the life which is freely offered to them. Such will be the doom of all who reject the counsels of the Most High, and choose to walk in their own ways. (To be continued.)

PHILOSOPHY AND VAIN DECEIT.

COL. 2: 8.—No. 1.

There surely must have been danger to the Christian church of being spoiled, or Paul would never have said, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after [the rudiments of] Christ." He was fearful of their being "beguiled with enticing words," and accordingly took some pains to inform them that "all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge were hid in God and his Christ." This wisdom had not God so much for its author as for its object; but the apostle unquestionably has a direct allusion to the philosophies of the Gentiles, which the Jews to a very great extent had adopted and affected; hence we find the three sects—Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes.

The major part of the Pharisees were Platonistic in their views as regards the nature and duration of the soul, yet holding to the resurrection; while many of them held to the doctrine of "migration of souls" from one body to another, more however after the Pythagorean than the Stoic sense, and is traceable to the Orientalists. The difference between them and the Stoic philosophers seems to have been, that while the latter regarded the soul as a derivation, the former had learned from revelation to know that it was a creation. The Sadducees, from all accounts, were evidently purely materialistic in their philosophy, and denied that there was either angel or spirit, or any resurrection; many things, however, are ascribed to them that evidently have their origin in prejudice and conjecture.

The learned Dr. Taylor thinks their denial was not of "celestial angels, but of disembodied human spirits." But they did not deny that man had a rational soul, but maintained that it was not only mortal in its nature, but became extinct with the death of the body, and linking this with a denial of any resurrection, it logically followed that they also denied any future rewards or punishments, for they necessarily held to no future life. They seemed to think if the soul was not in a living conscious state after the man died, then there could by no possible means be a resurrection of the dead; while the Pharisees believed and taught like their Gentile brethren of the present day, that the living soul was the essential cause of the resurrection, and consequently hold that Christ's argument with the Sadducees was to prove that there could and should be a resurrection of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, because they were not dead. See Robinson's Calmet p. 802. § Sadducees.

Hence the Pharisees and Sadducees were both in error, both wrong; and Christ equally warns his disciples against the dogmas of both, when he says (Matt. 16: 6), "Take heed and beware of the leaven [doctrine, verse 12] of the Pharisees and Sadducees." The one predicated their faith of the resurrection on their philosophy of the soul's immortality and conscious existence after the death of the body; the other predicated his denial of a resurrection on his philosophy of the soul's non-existence; whereas Christ predicates his argument on neither the one nor the other, but exclusively and entirely upon the "power of God," and proves the necessity of that power being exerted upon the dead to raise them to life, that he may be their God.

The legitimate consequence of both philosophies was the meeting of extremes; so that after all that is said concerning them, there is not much if any difference in the legitimate deductions drawn from their premises. If the first be true, there is no necessity for and never will be a resurrection; and if the second were correct in their philosophy of the soul's nature, it does not obviate one, nor vitiate the power of it; but in the one case, if the spirit of man, the candle or lamp of the Lord (Prov. 20: 27), be immortal by virtue of its nature as a simple element, then what Solomon in Prov. 24: 20 and Job in 18: 6 declare, by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, cannot be true, —that "the candle (or lamp—spirit) of the wicked shall be put out"; and if the second were correct, then what Christ said to Martha in John 11: 25 cannot be true, that "he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live," if there be no resurrection. And if both were wrong, as is apparent from their mutual contradiction of the Spirit of truth in Christ Jesus, as declared in God's word, then we need not be troubled about the philosophies of either, nor be spoiled through them by the enticing words of their vain and deceitful systems of logic, but rest our faith in Christ's positive assurance that the resurrection power is vested in him by the will of the Father, and that this power is not in the spirit of man, but in the Spirit of God as demonstrated in the resurrection of Christ, which God wrought in him when he raised him from the dead,—"God raised him from the dead"; "Made alive by the Spirit"; "Spirit of God." Eph. 1: 20; Acts 18: 30; 1 Pet. 3: 18; Rom. 8: 9, 11. Therefore "if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in"—us, he will also "raise [us] up" by or through Jesus by his Spirit "at the last day." Rom. 8: 11; John 6: 40.

GENUINE PRAYER.

About a year ago I read an article published in a widely circulated journal, in which the writer said that he had hurt himself by praying too much. The question occurs—"Was this genuine prayer?" Making long prayers in public, to be seen of men, may be injurious, especially (as the writer states) directly after a meal, greatly retarding digestion, and resulting in mental and perhaps moral confusion. But would a pleasant conversation with a friend (after eating) prevent digestion, or interfere with it at all? If not, then why should talking with the Lord have such a bad effect?

The sick are healed in answer to prayer, and strength is given to all who need, when they ask aright. If it aids the process of digestion to talk socially with a friend, true prayer to God will have an effect no less beneficial. It is right and proper to pray for strength where it is most needed. I fully believe that a sincere prayer, either before or after partaking of food is good for the health. There may be in some cases, needless excitement, or, too great a degree of excitement, and this may interfere with the operations of nature, as the writer states; but undue excitement is not called for in genuine prayer.

What would you think of a friend who should come to you to ask for a small favor which you were entirely ready and willing to grant at once, if this friend continued to ask in a loud and excited manner, when the gentlest whisper would be quite sufficient? "Ask and receive." Believe that the blessing will surely come, and rest calmly in that assurance.

There is no such thing as praying too much, unless you ask amiss. Earnest prayers, like those of Hannah and Elijah, bring answers of peace. Satan would rejoice to make you believe there was danger of praying too much, and when he has persuaded you that it it was hurtful to pray at certain times, it would not be strange if he should ere long lead you to omit praying altogether. But do not listen to him.

Pray. Pray earnestly. Pray without ceasing And whatever of health or strength you lose in this way you will eventually find restored a thousand-fold. If you should even lose your life by praying, you will find it again. But if we seek to save life or health by restraining prayer, we shall be in great danger of losing both forever.

BIBLE CONSOLATION.

What would be thought of a minister of the gospel of any of the churches of the present day, who should preach a funeral sermon and make no allusion to a state of happiness between death and the resurrection? Would not his hearers notice the omission and begin to question his orthodoxy? Is it not, indeed, most natural and appropriate that he should draw consolation for the afflicted from such a source, if he believes it to be true? And yet, numerous as are the instances recorded in the Bible of inspired writers looking to the future for consolation for themselves and others, not one of them ever alluded to such a state. Job, under his sore afflictions, thus looked forward for consolation,—Job. 14: 12; 19: 25, 27; but he makes no allusion to a state of happiness between death and the resurrection. Jeremiah looking down the long vista of years, sees in vision, the slaughter of "all the children in Bethlehem and in all the coasts thereof from two years old and under," and essays to comfort the sorely afflicted mothers; but he makes no mention of such a state of happiness as we are considering.

Perhaps no more touching scene has ever been recorded than that of Martha, appealing to the Savior for consolation. "Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not died." John 11: The compassionate Savior made no allusion to the lamented brother being in heaven; but appealing to the only way in which a lost life can be restored, he replied, "Thy brother shall rise again." Martha had anticipated this source of consolation, but gave not the slightest intimation that she thought her brother was basking in the sunlight of God's immediate presence in heaven. If the doctrine of going to heaven at death be true, how can we account for the absence of any allusion to it in the Bible?

POVERTY—ITS ALLEVIATION.

DEAR CRISIS:—I sometimes think the wealthy man is not the happiest man. Wealth brings care, and certainly it lays its possessor under a heavy responsibility. Wealth is a trust, but is often placed in bad hands. It would seem as if God had intrusted it to individuals whose hearts are as susceptible of a tale of human misery and distress, as a piece of marble is to the blows of a cork hammer.

I do not, however, intend to write about wealth, but about poverty. I see a great deal of it in my wanderings about town; am very often brought in contact with persons of the poorest class; men who out of a very small salary must provide for a wife and large family, and who despite their efforts fail to keep the wolf from the door.

The beneficial effects of benevolent institutions do not reach these people. Are they suffering? No, they won't own it. Do they require assistance? Not the assistance which makes their condition known to their neighbors. Some men are too proud to make their wants known, and suffer in consequence. Now what will the efforts of half a dozen benevolent ladies and a few philanthropic gentlemen do in such cases as these? Will their meeting together and adopting resolutions for the establishment of a charitable institution make the burden of these people light? No; something else is required.

Individual effort in the alleviation of human distress is what is wanted. How easy it would be for a State Street banker, a wealthy broker, an affluent dry goods merchant, to bend his steps to North street or some other of the dark places of the city, after getting through his daily duties, speaking a kind word to the afflicted, giving a little pecuniary assistance to the "poverty stricken wretches"—our brethren and sisters. Their presence would be felt as a peaceful, comfort-giving influence. A kind inquiry after the children,—"Is the husband working?"

Ah! how the hearts of the poor throb with pleasure when they feel that those, who by circumstances are placed above them, take an interest in their welfare. What an amount of good could be done in this way.

I do not advocate the system of visiting the homes of the poor and leaving a tract entitled "There is rest in heaven." It seems almost like mocking their misery, or telling them that there is only one way of being happy, and that is by dying as early as is convenient for them. What a grand old world this would be if men and women would only do that which is shortest, easiest, and best.

Americans as a rule are charitably disposed, and often give largely. But it is not merely in giving or raising money that we do good. If fifty per cent of our contributions is expended in salaries to men and women for the proper and judicious method of applying them to objects of charity, it is evident that is not the proper method of doing a good thing.

Our blessed Savior left us a noble example of individual effort. As his followers, we are in duty bound to imitate him. The homes of the suffering and poor, the despised and the outcast, were oftenest hallowed by his holy presence. Poverty and degradation did not repel him, as it does some scented divines of the present day. It may be respectable to visit the drawing-rooms of the wealthy, to loll on a lounge, and listen to compliments on last Sunday afternoon's sermon; but it is grand, noble, and Christ-like, to visit the miserable, to cheer the afflicted, to dry the tears of the orphan, to raise up the downcast,

To "help the suffering and distressed,
The cheerless and forlorn."

By doing this we not only lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven, but often are rewarded here. Lending to the Lord by giving to the poor is a splendid investment, securing a policy in an eternal life-insurance company; receiving daily interest in the shape of happiness and contentment, and having a sure prospect of realizing the principal in the possession of an inheritance in an everlasting kingdom.

"The heart benevolent and kind
The most resembles God."

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." It does not need much talk to indicate the proper course for us to pursue: the way is plain. There is plenty of work, but workers are exceeding scarce. I know some men who would think it sinful to be wealthy, but the greater portion of mankind look on poverty in that light. We want a change of opinion on this subject. There is no disgrace in poverty; but wealth is disgraceful if we do not use it for the purpose for which it was intrusted to us.

I can very easily believe that "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven." When I witness the misery of the poor, and know that while they lack the common necessaries of life hundreds of their brethren are revelling in luxury, I have strange thoughts on the subject of the salvation of the rich. It is very pleasant, no doubt, to sit in a box at the opera, or the theatre; very exciting to travel the floor of the ball-room, and feel a thrill of joyous pleasure while whirling through the giddy waltz. But does it ever occur to the minds of the frequenters of such places that while thus engaged a brother or a sister is dying for lack of proper nourishment, and who would live were a fractional part of that which is expended on the entertainment devoted to their relief? Of course it does not. The votaries of pleasure are too much interested in themselves and in those things most conducive to their happiness, to waste their time or mar their pleasure by giving a moment's thought to their fellow creatures; if they do feel a pang of conscience once in a while, it is easily soothed by the reflection that "There are homes enough now for the poor and the wretched,

Where they're well taken care of, are happy, content."

But—"sick and in prison, and ye visited me not," can nevertheless be said to them.

Says a prominent writer of the present day, "To me there is nothing so sacred as human sorrow, and I dare not stand with unloosed sandals on such holy ground." How few there are who will respond to such a noble sentiment. Alas! human sorrow is too often made the theme for human ridicule and amusement. JACKSON.

COMMON POLITENESS.

It is not polite for parents to leave their children alone when they will be likely to make a noise, and disturb their neighbors.

It is not polite to purchase an article of a clerk, when you know he is selling it for less than his employer can afford.

It is not polite to make use of public prayer to extol the virtues or to flatter the vanity of a distinguished personage who may be present.

It is not polite for a young minister to assume too much, and attempt to dictate those who were in the church before he was born.

It is not polite for a man who holds an office, and whose situation subjects him to thousands of annoying questions, to give a hasty, uncivil answer. Men in office are very apt to feel the importance of their stations, and answer hurriedly or tartly those who are obliged at times to make inquiries of them. Persons of quick tempers and uncivil natures should never take an important office.

It is not polite to send for insertion in a public print a notice of a false marriage or the death of a living person.

It is not polite for a minister to boast of his success in preaching, or to be more elated at his popularity and increased salary than at the conversion of sinners.

It is not polite, if you insist on wearing mourning on the death of a friend, to wear that mourning garb for too long a period.

It is not polite to crowd in or out of a public assembly.

It is not polite to step on the feet or the heels of another.

It is not polite to suffer a person to ask you several times to pay a debt justly due.

It is not polite for a tax-collector to be uncivil or unkind because he is invested with a little authority.

It is not polite to attend church for the purpose of seeing and being seen.

It is not polite to be all things to all men. Always let it be manifest where you stand, and what you are; and do not hesitate, when it is necessary, to express the honest sentiments of your heart.

It is not polite to confess your sins in the plural number, while you extol your virtues in the singular number.

It is not polite to quote the sentiments and opinions of others, and give them currency as your own. If you make a speech or write a paragraph, let it be your own, be it expressed ever so homely or bunglingly.

It is not polite to disfigure the house, shop, door, or fence of another, or daub them with paint, or place any marks upon them either through malice or a love of mischief.

MY SHEPHERD.

"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."—PSA. 23: 1.

God's watchful care for his trusting ones is fully set forth in the writings of the Psalmist, and many, in times of distress and want have laid hold on the promises there laid down, as well as in other portions of sacred writ. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." "And the cattle on a thousand hills are mine, saith the Lord," rested on the mind of the poor woman when herself and family were in extreme want, and her faith and trust was firm. And relief came when it seemed almost impossible for it to come so soon.

How often God opens a door when it would seem that every avenue was closed. Sometimes our faith and trust may be severely tried. Every door of earthly supplies may seemingly be closed, and no way may present itself for our relief; yet God's ear is open to hear our suphlications, and he will not let us wait long before supplies are sent; and in a time and way that we least expect. "In my distress I cried unto the Lord, and he heard me," can be truly said by many as well as by him who uttered these words.

You who are suffering to-day for the comforts of life, remember that the same God lives who lived in David's time. You who are shut in by circumstances from procuring the common necessities of life, and can see no way of escape, remember, the mercy of God endureth forever, and trust him; lay your wants before him; believe his promises; be patient in tribulation, and and in due time the Lord will manifest himself to you. "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto to you." The Lord knoweth all our needs, and if we trust and serve him, he will see that they are all supplied.

Then cheer up, lonely pilgrim, poor in this world's goods but rich in faith; soon you will share the inheritance that awaits the faithful christian. Praise the Lord for the christian's hope, which is like an anchor to the soul when in trouble and in distress. May God help us to keep our faith strong and trust firm, that when he comes we may be permitted to live with him forever in the presence of our Shepherd. N. B. MCMURPHY.

FELLOW TRAVELER.

Dear fellow traveler to the bar of God, many sermons, doubtless, have greeted your ears; many admonitions have been presented to you by those whose inmost soul has been stirred in regard to your future interest; yet you are judgment-bound, without God and hope in the world. Suppose, in your present condition, the opening heavens should reveal the Judge of all the earth, how would it be with you? Do you feel ready to meet him? If not, then repent of thy sins, and turn to the Lord before it is too late. The last day is approximating. In a little while, he who is now your interceder will cease pleading; then you will be numbered with those whose lamentations will be, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended," and I am "not saved."

Fellow traveler, while life is offered you, procrastinate no longer. Choose now the better part; make your peace with him, who so loved you as to give his "only begotten Son" to die for you, that you might "not perish, but have eternal life."

O, fellow traveler, when you was on the downward road to ruin, Jesus, who was rich with his Father in glory, left that exalted position, came down upon our benighted earth, and suffered and died that you might not sink into eternal ruin, but have a hope of everlasting felicity in the future. Which will you choose, everlasting happiness, or be forever banished from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power?

Dear fellow traveler, these questions I would solemnly impress upon you. "Turn ye, turn ye, . . . for why will you die?"

CALOMEL SWELLING.

I saw in the Crisis that some one wished to know what was good for calomel swelling, or one caused by it. The best thing I have ever used is sheet lead, such as come out of tea chests. Bind it on the swelling. It will draw out the poison. Treat a white swelling the same. MRS. RUTH H. HINES.

SUNSHINE.

We owe so much to the sun, that it is no wonder the ancient Syrians, and many other nations, worshiped this great luminary or day-king. As the sun seemed to dispense the greatest blessings they received, it was natural for them, knowing no other god, to sacrifice to him.

Sunshine gives life, health, color, and beauty. Without it these die. With it they come forth. An experiment was made a few years since, to ascertain some of the effects of the absence of the sun in the narrow and dark streets of London, and it was ascertained that there were nearly twice as many blind persons on the side of a street where the sun never shone, as there were where it looked in only occasionally. No man can live away from the sun and be healthy. Even flowers grow pale or die.

We have, within a year or two, been flooded with articles upon "Sunshine," "Sun-treatment," "Sun-baths," and the like, as though these were new things,—as new as though the sun had never shined before.—But the sun did shine on our fathers, and shone on them so much more than it has upon the present generation, that they were much more healthy, and lived many years longer. . .

Our old ancestor (we remember it well) used to sun himself by the hour for many years. He reached the great age of ninety-seven; and his father, who was equally a worshiper of the sun, and basked daily in his rays, lived one hundred years.

There is one excuse for re-hashing often these old ideas, and serving them up afresh, to wit: the forgetfulness of mankind, and the necessity of "line upon line" in all matters pertaining to health.

But, it may be added, the best way to take a sun-bath, for those in health, is a long, gentle walk in his rays; and, for a feeble person, to lie down, away from the wind, and where the full powers of the sun are to be felt. This is very simple, and open to all. Still, few are disposed to try it, especially the walk. This is what lazy, and consequently short-lived, people abhor.—"Good Health," Pub. in Boston, 21 Franklin St.

RANDOM THOUGHTS.

SACCHARINE PRINCIPLE VERSUS SUGAR.

As the sugar topic seems to keep up in interest, perhaps something may yet be said to enable those who believe that sugar is food, to see the matter in a different light. A few lines of clear, straight, logical reasoning, will settle the several questions involved.

It is claimed that the saccharine principle of fruits, and sugar, are the same, identical; that if the one is food, the other is also. Is such a claim correct? Decidedly not. The saccharine principle of fruits is the result of physiology. It is the result of a process of development. Sugar is the result of chemistry. It is the result of a process of destruction. Can a physiological result and a chemical result be the same? The thing is a farce on the face of it. To claim that by opposite laws, principles, and actions, viz., development and destruction, we can obtain the same result, shows lack of acquaintance with the principles and laws of physiology and chemistry.

All food is the result of physiology, and no product of chemistry is food. Sugar being a product of physiology, is food. If it be true that sugar is food then what is to prevent us from manufacturing other food chemically?

SLEEPING.

New converts to the cause of Hygeia are generally interested and inquiring as regards this subject. For such, and others who may be desirous to profit by a few remarks and suggestions, I pen these few lines. The first question that arises is: Is it best to sleep alone? Most certainly, it is more healthful in every respect. What! would you have a man and wife sleep in separate beds? By all means. If two persons sleep in the same bed, each inhales the exhalations of the other; the excrementitious matter from the lungs and skin. This they cannot avoid doing. But it is urged, do they not derive a benefit that is equal to the detriment, viz., the blending and interchanging of the magnetism? No doubt persons of opposite sexes, and especially husband and wife, derive benefit from magnetic interchange, but all this benefit can be had without the detriments, aforementioned, by sleeping in separate beds, in the same room. Magnetism being one of the most subtle forces does not require contact of body to commingle. It pervades matter and space to a large degree.

If a man and wife are together much of the time in the day, they had better sleep in separate rooms. If they are not together much of the time in the day, they had better sleep in the same room in separate beds, and the beds a respectable distance from one another. The German mode of sleeping (for husband and wife) in separate beds, side by side, is vastly superior to sleeping in the same bed, under the same clothes, etc., as they do not breathe the exhalations of each other's bodies.

Beds should be placed so that upon waking the light will not strike the eyes. Numbers have their eyes injured by a neglect of this.

The clothes that are worn during the day should not be hung up or kept in the sleeping room. Those who cannot afford the comforts of a dressing-room can place them on a chair or rack outside the bedroom. Sleeping-rooms should be sleeping-rooms, and not the place to hang up clothes, as they often are in the domicils of the poor. Better breathe an inferior atmosphere in the day-time than at night. Proper sleeping apartments are of more importance on the score of health, than the regimen.—Reformer.

ADULTERATED COFFEE.

Dr. Dalton's revelations in the Galaxy, concerning the adulteration of coffee in the New York market, are peculiarly interesting in these days of chemical investigations. He says:

If the buyer of ground coffee could feel assured that the article he purchased was only adulterated with chicory, he might perhaps continue to use, and in the course of time even become accustomed to it without having his appetite for the beverage disturbed; but while the coffee adulterator is chuckling at the cheat he practices on the consumer, he is in turn the victim of the chicory dealer, who, profiting by the example of his customer, adds to his chicory refuse carrots, parsnips, turnips, spoiled biscuit, corn, peas, beans, acorns, burnt sugar, sawdust, red earth, burnt rags, oakum, or rope yarn, exhausted tan, or oak bark, tar residue, and other similar appetizing substances. It is not, therefore, wise to take the advice given by some that we add chicory to the coffee we have ourselves roasted and ground; for, in the first place, it is of no use whatever, except to deepen the color, which may be done just as well by a little burnt sugar, and, secondly, we may be adding some of the very suggestive subtances mentioned above.

The samples of adulterated coffee that I have examined, have generally contained large quantities of bread, which is probably as harmless as anything that could be used for the purpose, and perhaps the cleanest, if we could only feel sure that it had not passed through the garbage pail on its journey to the coffee dealer.

Another very common adulteration is by roasted rye, which, if of good quality, would also be perfectly harmless; but it is evident that as it is the object of the sophisticator to swindle his customer, he will purchase the cheapest article he can find, and since good rye commands a good price, he will use an article that is either spoiled, or perhaps spurred or ergot rye, the properties of which are so well known that it is not necessary to mention them here, except to state that often they are not entirely destroyed by the heat to which the grain is, many times, subjected in roasting; and this may be the cause of those serious accidents or troubles that result in the breaking down of the health of married women.—Reformer.

DIGESTION OF FOOD.

Rice, boiled, pigs feet, boiled, and tripe, boiled, will digest in one hour.

Venison steak broiled, salmon broiled, whipped eggs raw, and sweet and mellow apples will digest in one and one half hours.

Beef liver broiled, dry codfish boiled, sour and mellow apples eaten raw, and cabbage with vinegar will digest in two hours.

Roast turkey, roasted pig, broiled lamb and boiled beans, roasted potatoes and boiled parsnips will digest in two and one half hours.

Roasted beef, boiled mutton, boiled apple dumplings and Indian corn cake will digest in three hours.

Roasted mutton, Indian corn bread and boiled carrots will digest in three and one fourth hours.

Stewed oysters, raw cheese, hard boiled and fried eggs, wheat bread, boiled potatoes and boiled turnips will digest in three and one-half hours.

Fried beef, broiled and roasted fowls, roast duck and boiled cabbage will digest in four hours, while roasted pork requires five and one-fourth hours.

SLEEPING WITH THE HEAD TO THE NORTH.—A physician writes to the Dublin Journal of Medicine in support of the old notion that people sleep much better with their heads to the north. He has tried the experiment in the case of sick persons with marked effect, and insists that there are known to exist great electrical currents, always crossing in one direction around the earth, and that our nervous systems are in some mysterious way connected with this electrical agent.

ANTIDOTE FOR SNAKE BITES.—Ammonia is used with great success in Australia as an antidote for snake bites. The papers chronicle numerous cases where the injection of this article into the veins has saved the lives of persons bitten by venomous snakes. The wound is also bathed with liquid ammonia, and stimulants are given to keep the patient from falling into a lethargic state.

FOR FELONS.—An exchange says that a poultice of onions, applied morning, noon, and night, for three or four days, will cure a felon. No matter how bad the case, lancing the finger will be unnecessary if this poultice is used. The remedy is a sure, safe, and speedy one.

HEALTH ITEMS.

Kerosene oil is said to be an efficacious remedy for rheumatism. It should be well rubbed in.

Bruised peach leaves are said to be a specific for nail wounds in man or beast.

THE OLDEST CHRISTIAN HYMN.

Shepherd of tender youth,
Guiding in love and truth,
Through devious ways;
Christ, our triumphant King,
We come thy name to sing,
And here our children bring,
To shout thy praise.

Thou art our holy Lord,
The all-subduing Word,
Healer of strife!
Thou didst thyself abase,
That from sin's deep disgrace
Thou mightest save our race,
And give us life.

Thou art wisdom's High Priest!
Thou hast prepared the feast
Of holy love!
And in our mortal pain
None calls on thee in vain;
Help thou dost not disdain,
Help from above.

Ever be thou our guide,
Our shepherd and our pride,
Our staff and song!
Jesus! thou Christ of God!
By the perennial word,
Lead us where thou hast trod,
Make our faith strong.

So now, and till we die,
Sound we thy praise on high,
And joyful sing.
Infants, and the glad throng,
Who to thy church belong,
Unite and swell the song
To Christ our King!

For the World's Crisis.

THE ALARM BELL.

(Concluded.)

ANOTHER GREAT MISTAKE.

There is a giant doctrinal evil and error of great antiquity, and popular in our day. It has a powerful hold on the minds of men, being believed and cherished and championed as truth. When a falsehood is sacredly enshrined in the mind; when it is attributed as truth to the Author of truth; when it is located by inference and imputation of faith in Scripture; when it is received from a christian ancestry as true; when it is preached in ten thousand pulpits; when it is attested and confirmed by almost universal public opinion; when it is a part, by implication at least, of almost every creed, inwoven in almost every religious system, built up in almost every ecclesiastical organization, and adduced and submitted and diffused as truth throughout almost universal literature, it must at first certainly appear hard to overcome. An assault upon it would, in the view of its very numerous votaries, seem something like audacity, or sacrilege even. But the only scales in which a doctrinal tenet, or any sort or species of religious belief can be justly weighed, is God's word. By this we are ready and anxious to try this wide-spread opinion of mankind.

To be brief and direct, the error we mean is the alleged immortality of the soul of man. We once supposed it true, and scripturally true. We are now thoroughly convinced that it is not; that it is an error, fruitful of varied and mighty mischiefs; and that it is imperatively important that it be detected, and early and altogether thrown out of all creeds, professions, confidences and teachings of men. That after a long, long harvest-time of bitter and evil fruit, it is yet further maturing to a baneful and disastrous crop of woes and maladies among men, we think can be plainly, easily, and startlingly shown.

Whence came this baseless and pernicious dogma? Its origin was certainly sinister. Its authorship was so deplorable and degraded, that its retention thus long is a mystery indeed. We impute, without one moment's hesitation, the claim of immortality for man in probation to that cunning and reckless falsifier, the devil. From such a wretched source emanated this notion, which has acquired such power and prevalence in the world as a kind of first truth, that its contradiction is stigmatized as infidelity. A first truth indeed! Say rather a first falsehood.

Let us notice a most pointed and terrible passage in our Savior's address to the critical and equivocating Jews. "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do; he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar and the father of it." This is a scathing characterization. Here is the divine photograph of man's great enemy. The discourse of man's best friend lays on this restless, evil agent—Satan, the true charge of original and unmitigated mendacity. Notice, "he was a murderer from the beginning." He brought a mind foul with bad intent, and a speech corrupt with a flattering and infernal lie, to the siege of that paradise where our first parents were placed. He was a murderer, for his strategy aimed at so weakening the force of the Creator's charge to Adam, by an insinuated contradiction, as to draw his victim into a snare, and put an end to allegiance and peace together in the hearts of the happy pair. He succeeded, and brought disaster and ruin into the world. Sin, with an endless train of evils, entered, and death by sin. The devil was a murderer. Aye, "he is a liar, and the father of it." God had said to Adam, in the event of disobedience, "Thou shalt surely die," or, "dying thou shalt die." The enemy with vile and subtle replication said, "Ye shall not surely die." Now what we maintain in this connection is, this this seductive and lying phrase, the pioneer of all deceptions and falsehoods on earth, is the germ of the universal sentiment, the substance and pith of the dogma, that man is immortal, or that his essential self is an entity surviving death, alive and indestructible forever. It is false. It were enough to know that as the expedient of an apostate spirit, employed to seduce and destroy a race, it must be false. How quickly pride in the human heart rises to defend the dignity which is fancied to inhere in inherent immortality in man. O silly pride! O silly credence of a lie whose parentage is thus traced to the fiend! Significant indeed is the notion so dominant, that the dead is not dead; that a deathless vitality survives; that death touches not a something internal, but frees it and helps it; and so the enemy continues by so much triumphant, and by the currency of the first falsehood finds a way to make havoc still, of which the latest development is seen in the utterly antichristian system of Spiritualism.

But the immortality of the soul is hastily and superficially inferred from the account of man's creation. This is an error so common and yet so flagrant, that it needs a brief exposure. In Gen. 2: 7 we read, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Now for a little simple and honest analysis. The Creator made man, and formed him out of a material that is expressly specified; to wit, "the dust of the ground." Man is not composite, but simple in the substance God takes for the structure and mechanism of the being described. Man is made of dust, as truly as a jug or jar is made of clay, or a table of mahogany. God formed man of dust,—not of that and something more, or something else. Neither did God put a pre-existing essence into a tenement of dust, nor any essence at all, constituting a consciousness, or individuality, into a receptacle of matter. Man is not an essence, or a soul, without dust, or out of dust; but man is made of dust. Humbling fact, but true. Why question or reject the Scripture account? Why complicate it with difficulties that do not belong to it? Think, now; is man compound from this account? It is the dust of earth that forms a man, not the house, or husk, accommodating or enclosing a man. Jehovah made man out of dust; therefore he is a material being. A false hypothesis alleges that he is immaterial. If he cannot die, if he is alive after he is dead, then the devil is right, and immaterial man can exist and live, in spite of the formation of man out of the dust. There is trouble here, as there is in every vain device that adds to God's words, or mystifies or perverts them. Into man so made God breathed something indeed, and it is expressed as "the breath of life." Is this breath the real man? Then a man was breathed into a man, for the man was made of dust. Is breath a being, or is it rather the means of life? The case is perfectly clear. No soul is breathed into man, and much less an immortal soul, but a breath of life. Notice the difference between a soul breathed into a frame prepared for it, and a breath of life breathed into a man. Which is true,—a man, and an immortal man, or essence of man, breathed into a receptacle of matter? or an etherial fluid, or breath of life, breathed into an organized man? What was the result of this infusion of breath into Adam's nostrils (for it was so infused)? Answer: "Man became a living soul." The inspiration of air started the wheels of the machinery, and the man lived. He was a soul before he received the breath of life, but not a living soul. And while it is perfectly true that the respiration commenced was essential to life, and the commencement of respiration was the commencement of life, it is not true by any means that respiration, nor air (the process, nor the agent in the process), is the man; nay, nor is the breath of life the consciousness, though it is an auxiliary to the consciousness.

The man is a material man, and a conscious, living, material man, through the imparted breath of life. This infusion is not an essential self, or an immortal individuality insinuated or inserted in a place appointed for it; but a wave of life-giving ether blown into the nostrils. The man is still material while living, and a material man sees, hears, feels, and thinks. God can give and does give to matter these properties. What if the ear and eye and brain are organs? They are a part of the man, nevertheless. Sails, and wheels, and ropes, and spars, are organs or means of a ship's propulsion and safety, and they belong to the ship and are a part of it. Without them a ship is imperfect, and exceedingly so. But suppose there is something within a man that is his essential self, apart from eye or ear, or arms and hands and feet. If so, it is the vital, material organism. It is the heart, and lungs, and arteries, and blood, and especially the brain. Remove the brain, and the man is inevitably and always dead. Practically he is defunct. This is all so simple, that so much detail and painstaking of explanation seems needless and even tedious; but it is made necessary on account of the utterly mis-instructed popular sentiment. How exceedingly few there are who know that the words living soul (not immortal soul) are in the Hebrew used repeatedly in the previous chapter, and applied to the animal creation. Many would scarcely believe it, and mentally at least immediately begin to evade the force of it, or willingly ignore it as of no account, since the translators have given no sign. Happy would it be if the prejudice were not equally as great.

LUCIEN BONAPARTE THE NEXT POPE.

A most startling and astounding development in the impending ecclesiastico-political future of Europe, is probably preparing and nearly ready to be accomplished and manifested to the world. That it involves directly consequences of the utmost interest and magnitude, can not for one moment be rationally denied. To the development itself, as an every way probable and imminent feature of events in the critical transition state of Europe, and to the issues incident to it, the most intelligent public journals already attest. We do not mean to say that the gravity of consequences is understood, or all the mighty sum of related and succeeding events appreciated. Certainly they are not. It is but a mere glimpse the journalists get, while from a prophetic stand-point we are enabled to take in the whole vast and tremendous series of results, compressed indeed into an exceedingly short space of time, and hurrying on with terrible impetus and rapidity. Well may we designate this article by the title of "The Alarm Bell," for the incredulity of christians is itself alarming, and the phase of hastening affairs we think can scarcely be exaggerated in the interests involved and the issues at stake.

If the Catholic world is brought, through its universal deference to the Pope and the papacy, to sustain a policy dictated by the Emperor of the French, in politics and religion alike, measure the consequences if you can. Who can not see what a transfer, what an acquisition of moral and material support, has come to the most ambitious man on earth, when cardinal Lucien Bonaparte, chosen at the dictation of Louis, has ascended to the papal chair? At the dictation of Louis, we say, because the latter unquestionably occupies a position which enables him to dictate. Who does not perceive the aim of this monarch, and the advantage which he has long realized, in reserving to himself and exercising the prerogative of guarding, defending and maintaining the Romish, popish charge? Was not his action significant in flying to the relief of Pius IX. at the recent insurrectionary invasion of Rome by Garibaldian dictation? Should this republican chieftain have the honor, or take the responsibility of giving Rome to Italy? Certainly not. If the gift were expedient, Napoleon third would make the donation; if not, it should be reserved to his disposal. Does not ecclesiastic Rome know her obligations to Napoleon? Surely the harlot dare not now defy the power that carries her.

That cardinal Lucien will soon accede to the papacy, we regard as almost beyond the possibility of doubt; or, at least, will be advanced to an eminence of something like an equivalent kind, in which there shall be the opportunity and occasion for an active and powerful ministry, in the interest of the imperial relative to whom his advancement is due.

There can be little doubt, we suspect, that the functions of this great Romish high priesthood will be modified, and that the change will be such as to turn a tide of homage to the older man at Paris, whose aim, at little less than an absolute dictation in the world's affairs, is to be immensely promoted by the new and gigantic convenience of a Bonaparte at his right hand; and that a powerful, willing and trained ecclesiastic. In fact, the unity of design and operations between these two men we understand will be perfect. Both will possess eminence and resources, while the senior and hitherto secular man will overtake the other, by an addition of certain official prerogatives (accruing partly through the younger), or a union of religious-imperial with a secular-imperial honor. The quality of this dignity will be manifestly intensely unchristian, selfish, and self-absorbed; while at the same time showing a considerate regard for the good-will and pleasure of the mighty popular masses, whose accession is the foundation of power. The prophetic sketch of the apostasy, and the relation of ungodly character, offices and powers, is found in Revelation, 13th chapter, if we mistake not.

The derisive skepticism or incredulity touching these near and stupendous evolutions, may just now be proof against all present admonitions or alarms. But it is this very incredulity and want of foresight which revelation is competent to give, that actually assures the result. Nobody (comparatively) believing it—nobody is striving to avert it. Those who love and believe God's sovereign prophetic purposes, would not try to avert it. The Romish or Catholic nations, soon to fall into line, and compact with allegiance to Napoleonism, are in no act or attitude of opposition. It is Protestant infidelity, and vain-glorious rationalism, and a formal, and careless, and misguided christianity, that is to be roused as by a trumpet peal with beating heart, and pallid face, and dilated eyes, to see its own folly of unbelief and repent, or else glide away, under the stress of the tremendous tide of apostasy, into an allegiance whose course is madness, whose act is sacrilege, and whose end is perdition.

Many may protest vigorously the inexpediency of being mentally occupied with coming trials or perils, but there is such a thing as a timely and wholesome alarm—an alarm leading to prayer, and activity in doing good, and to an intelligent expectation of a returning Jesus. Better an alarm in season, than an alarm too late. Better an alarm with an intelligent, pre-apprehension of the course of affairs, and their duration and significance, and end, than an alarm of such abruptness as to forestall calmness, and wise action, and plunge into misery and darkness. We are confident the time is near at hand when vast orders and associations of men will be drawn by a strong cord of evil attraction, by the various motives of admiration, self-interest, love of power and promotion, love of license, under the name of liberty, sectarianism, and not least of all the eager sympathy with modern progress (though it carries men to the very jaws of ruin,) as well as a wish to escape evils and dangers gathering around,—will be drawn, we say, to the homage and service of one man, whose genius, patience, patronage of liberty, inauguration of grand enterprises, military powers, and political power (together with the new religious eminence,) labors and achievments in literature, statesmanship and invention, have fascinated them. Here is the last great snare of the enemy. May a remnant escape.

SUSTAIN THE "CRISIS."

We certainly hope the paper which has become so endeared to many christians, may have a rapidly increasing subscription. Who can tell what a powerful instrumentality God may not please to make it, in this most critical hour of the world's history? Suppose it does not contain as much reading as could be obtained for the same money; it is not merely the quantity, but specially the quality of the reading that determines the value of the paper. It is an agency for promoting the interest of an inestimably precious cause. Set us sustain it. It may not be perfect, it may not please every reader in all things, but on the whole, is it not about what you want, and what the world needs, and what our Lord will approve? We understand that just before us is an hour of change, of perturbation, of awakening, of danger; and in such an hour should not every agency be ready for helping and leading every accessible or teachable friend of Jesus to the whole and pure truth? At any rate, the kingdom of the Just One being immediately at hand, should we not do good with our might, and do it now? Yes, certainly; and consider what a good would be accomplished in a large, a very large increase in the list of subscribers.

CURRENT EVENTS.

CONFLICT AND CRIME.—The crimes and conflicts, as recorded in the public journals, exceed all precedent, both as to number and violence. The adult and infant murders, the robberies and arsons, the cases of violence and bribery, the selfishness and excesses of legislation, are all of a startling character, and recall the worst days of Sodom, Gomorrah, Pompeii, Rome, Alexandria, etc., etc. It is noticeable of the crime of murder that the law is quite inadequate, and generally the worst murderers escape conviction, because, perhaps, the worst murderers are the most secret and the most deliberate. The proofs rest on circumstantial evidence, always difficult in management.

Legislation, which should be for the welfare of the people, has also become more destructive than beneficial. But it is not legislation alone which has become so corrupting. Look to our amusements. The worst of Paris is among the best at home, and patronized among us almost beyond precedent. Seeing what we see in these latter days of war upon States, persons, homes, domestic life and purity, we are painfully tempted to ask, "if these things continue will not Republican Government prove a failure?" When a nation's amusements become simply indecent,—when the most corrupting and corrupt measures find their way through Congress and State Legislatures—when crimes increase in an unheard of ratio, it is time for sober, christian, hopeful people to inquire the cause, and, if possible, to find the remedy.—N. Y. Express.

Rev. J. W. Rogers, the late Tennessee convert from Ritualism to Catholicism, has been lecturing in Chicago in defence of the Church of Rome. Arguing in reply to the argument which asserts that the most enlightened countries are Protestant rather than Catholic, he says that ours is not a Protestant country at all. "The Constitution does not call it such. Nearly nine men out of ten are skeptics. The Catholics outnumber the various Protestant denominations."

EXTRAORDINARY HEAT.—The Australian papers announce the occurrence of scorching weather in some parts of the colony. At Wagga at the close of December, flowers and shrubs were literally roasted, and fruit trees (in some instances) burnt up, plums approaching ripeness fermented under the powerful heat, and hung on the branches like small bags of native-grown vinegar. The heads of many trees presented the appearance of having been subjected to the action of a stream of flame. Yet in the Tumut district, three days before there was actually ice in the wash-hand basins of a morning. Wild horses were being destroyed in large numbers on the 'Levels country, near Wagga, where there the poor brutes were perishing from thirst. At Echuca, on the 25th Dec., bees were destroyed by the heat. Mr. Schackell found, on his return from Melbourne, that, the contents of two of his largest and best hives had been totally destroyed by the melting of the combs and honey into one mass, by which the whole of the bees were smothered.

In the Anti-Slavery Standard Wendell Phillips exclaims:

"Oh! for a Peter the Great, stern as death, and inexorable as fate. He reconstructed Russia, and made out of barbarism a civilized State. The like problem waits with us to be solved. When shall we see the iron hand that will hold these discordant elements till they crystalize into order and peace."

That is it! "The iron hand." The Jacobins of France were never content until they got their "iron hand" in a Bonaparte.

THE LORD'S COMING.—REVIVALS.

One of the principal causes of the depression and lament of the church at the present day is the want of revivals, or of the outpouring of God's Spirit upon the people, and the paucity of increase in numbers; and certainly this is to be deplored. The general apathy and cold indifference that seem to pervade the minds of the people, is one of the signs of the times. The departures from the faith, the rapid increase of infidelity, and the stand-still position of God's professed people generally, constitutes one of the wonderful phases of the times we live in. Society is largely composed of those who are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." Amusements, fashion, gossip, sight-seeing, pleasure-hunting, mammon-worship, Sabbath-breaking and intemperance, seem to be the prolific mode of frittering away the precious time of their probation. There are many good, honest people—both in and out of the church—who lament this state of things, but have not the power to mend it.

Adventists are sometimes blamed for holding desponding views concerning the religious aspect of things. They are blamed as fault-finding, discontented, cheerless christians—always indulging gloomy doubts, and having dark forebodings of the future, rather than the hopes of a good time coming. They do, however, believe in a good time coming, but in a different way from the manner of the world. Their joy and rejoicing is a spiritual joy and gladness; hence they look for a new world with no devil in it to mar God's fair heritage—"when the wilderness and solitary place shall be made glad, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose;" "the lame man shall leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing." They do rejoice in the blessed hope and glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who will change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorious body. In this world, or dispensation, we groan, being burdened, but in the next dispensation expect all pain and sickness, and sorrow and sighing shall be done away.—Advent Herald.

For the World's Crisis.

RETURN, O PRODIGAL, RETURN.

Return, oh prodigal, return,
And seek your Father's face;
O'er all your sins and follies mourn,
Your wandering steps retrace.

Return, oh, prodigal, return,
Before he shuts the door;
For can you not the signs discern?—
Your Father now adore.

See how the mighty earthquakes heave,
And mountains smoke and burn;
How trailing stars shoot forth and leave,
And will you not return?

The ocean's roaring waves then hear;
See nations in distress;
All signs in heaven and earth appear,—
Return to righteousness.

Return, oh prodigal, return,
And seek your Father's face;
Now o'er your sins and follies mourn,
Your wandering steps retrace.

PHILOSOPHY AND VAIN DECEIT. COL. 2: 8.—No. 2.

The Essenes also held the immortality of the soul, but seem to have taken more of the Pythagorean than the Platonic view of its nature. Their notion of every thing existing in "essence" would nearly correspond with the theory of "a prior existence," and yet there are indications that they were not altogether settled and clear in their own minds upon some points, for while they held that "souls descend from the highest air into the bodies that were animated by them," and "swiftly returned from whence they came at death," they also entertained almost the same sentiments as the heathen, "placing the souls of the good in the Elysian fields, and of the bad in Tartarus."

These three out of the four principal sects among the Jews, seem to have comprehended the three principal philosophies and corresponding notions among the Gentiles (that are held to this day) of Epicurism, Empiricism and Idealism, resulting in a heterogeneous compound Skepticism.

Prior to the captivity, the Jews were almost entirely free from these Gentile absurdities; and although they might have carried some of them out of Egypt, imbibed by their intercourse with the Egyptians when in bondage to them, yet their culture under Moses and their schooling in the wilderness, under the light of the "Shekinah," seems to have given them clearer perceptions of truth, and more correct ideas of man's nature, with a purer faith than any other people, and it was only because they did not "choose to retain God in their hearts that he gave them over to worship the hosts of heaven."

Their philosophy, in its purity, was that wisdom which was communicated from the Deity to them, and was a reality, and hence the philosophy of Realism, in our own day, and when stripped of the sophistry in which modern logicians have arrayed it, still corresponds with that of the patriarchs, and David and Solomon. With them, life did not signify "happiness," but a state of conscious being, and death did not mean "life in misery," but death with them was extinction of life: hence, "wisdom" became the predicate upon which "length of days," or prolongation of life was to be builded, and death was represented as the "land of darkness, as darkness itself." "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter" is the language of one of their own most poetic, yet divinely inspired prophets. Isa. 5: 20.

Dr. John Mason Good, M. D., in his Book of Nature, London Ed., p. 333, speaking of the book of Job, says: "In this sublime and magnificent poem, the doctrine upon the subject before us [future life] is a patriarchal or traditionary belief of a future state of retributive justice, not by the natural immortality of the soul, but by the resurrection of the body." On the same page he says, "The Hindoo philosophers [land of Paganism] totally and universally deny a resurrection of the body, and support the doctrine [of future existence] alone upon the natural immortality of the soul; and the Arabian philosophers [patriarchal] pass over the immortality of the soul, and rest alone upon the resurrection of the body." So of Solomon (p. 341) he says, "Solomon admitted the doctrine of the resurrection of the body and a state of retribution, while he disbelieved the doctrine of the separate immortality of the soul; and the distinction ought to be constantly kept in view while perusing his writings; since otherwise, they may appear in different places to contradict themselves. Thus, in order to confound the pomp and pageantry of the proud and the powerful, and to show them the vanity and nothingness of life, he [Solomon] adverts to the last of these doctrines [immortality], and confines himself to it. (Eccl. 3: 19, 20.) 'That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath (ruach, spirit, see verse 21), so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast, for all is vanity; all go unto one place: all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again.'

"But when addressing himself to the young and giddy pursuer of pleasure, in order to alarm him in the midst of his gay and licentious career, he as distinctly alludes and as carefully confines himself to the first of these doctrines (resurrection of the body.) His language then is ch. 11: 9, 'Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and tread as thou wilt the flowery paths of indulgence and pleasure; but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.' It has been said by some writers that the judgment here referred to relates to this world, and must be so interpreted to arrive at the self-contradiction just adverted to. But Solomon's wisdom stands in no need of the feeble and rush-light illumination of such commentators."

Here is one learned "Orthodox" at least, who is willing to admit that the philosophy taught in the schools of Dedan and Teman was that of the patriarchs, Job, David, and Solomon. Hence we need not be surprised to hear from them such doctrines as that the "dead know not any thing," "in the day they die their thoughts perish," and the spirit of the wicked man, like a candle, "shall be put out."

But what a mighty change has been wrought in twenty-eight hundred years. Then, Solomon could meet and combat these orientalists successfully, with a denial of the soul's immortality, and an affirmation of the animality of all terrestrial beings, and a common destiny, and destination too, of both the bodies and the spirits of both man and beasts, predicating his arguments in favor of a future state purely, exclusively, and entirely, upon a resurrection of the flesh; and now, professedly Christian teachers stand up in their place, and would fain make their hearers believe that king Solomon himself taught this oriental and Egyptian doctrine of heathenism, claiming that he teaches in Eccl. 3: 21 that the spirits of men go up from the earth (to heaven), and that the spirits of beasts go down to the earth; whereas he only asks them how they know that such is fact.

Old "Father Haynes" (a colored preacher), used to say, "Common sense isn't a common fool," and I say king Solomon was not either; he never undertook to ride two horses at once, each going in opposite directions. He knew better. Nor did he lay down his own positive affirmative propositions in verses 18, 19 and 20, of Eccl. 3, also 12: 7, and then stultify himself by turning right square about, denying his own declaration with the next breath in the very next sentence (v. 21), and admit that the false theory of his opponents, which he had just been combatting, was the truth, and advocate that too.

Perhaps some one will say, "That is rather strong; that is pretty plain talk." Well, I know it is. I tried to make it so; the nature of the case demands it; nothing but blisters will touch it. G. W. STETSON.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT.

MORAL PRECEPTS.

24. Robbery commanded.—"When ye go, ye shall not go empty; but every woman shall borrow of her neighbor, and of her that sojourneth in her house, jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment: and ye shall put them upon your sons, and upon your daughters: and ye shall spoil the Egyptians."—Ex. 3: 21, 22. "And they borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment...... And they spoiled the Egyptians."—Ex. 12: 35, 36.

Robbery forbidden.—"Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbor, nor rob him."—Lev. 19: 13. "Thou shalt not steal."—Ex. 20: 15.

Infidels in every age of the world have taken advantage of the fact that God commanded the Israelites to carry with them, when they left the land, a part of the wealth which nominally belonged to the Egyptians. Cannot even a skeptic see the justice of this? Has he never read of the long years during which Israel toiled without recompense? Has he never heard of the wealth which they amassed for their Egyptian masters? Or why does he accuse the God of heaven of injustice, when he commands Israel to take a small portion of their own earnings. Truly "thou shalt not defraud thy neighbor;" but Israel had been defrauded for ages, and because Israel's God takes from the Egyptians a portion of their ill-gotten spoils, and returns it to those who earned it,—those weak, puny men who dare to sit in judgment upon the acts of Jehovah, have set up the cry of "robbery!" Oh humanity, where is thy shame?

25. Lying approved and sanctioned.—"And the woman [Rahab] took the two men and hid them and said thus: There came men unto me, but I wist not whence they were: and it came to pass about the time of shutting of the gate, when it was dark, that the men went out; whither the men went I wot not; pursue after them quickly, for ye shall overtake them. But she had brought them up to the roof of the house and hid them with the stalks of flax."—Josh. 2: 4–6. "Was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way?"—James 2: 25. "And the king of Egypt called for the midwives and said unto them, Why have ye done this thing, and have saved the men-children alive? And the midwives said unto Pharaoh, Because the Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women; for they are lively, and are delivered ere the midwives come in unto them. Therefore God dealt well with the midwives." Ex. 1: 18, 20. "And there came forth a spirit, and stood before the Lord, and said, I will persuade him. ... I will go forth and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, Thou shalt persuade him and prevail also; go forth and do so."—1 Kings 22: 21, 22.

Lying forbidden.—"Thou shalt not bear false witness."—Ex. 20: 16. "Lying lips are an abomination unto the Lord."—Prov. 12: 22. "All liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." Rev. 21: 8.

In proposition 25 the great Author of all truth is accused of approving and sanctioning lying. The case of Rahab is cited, and James 2: 25 is quoted to prove that she was justified for lying. Truly this conclusion is "far-fetched" when the text says she was justified by works, because "she had received the messengers and sent them out another way." She was justified for what she did, and not for what she said. The next case is that of the midwives, whom the king of Egypt commanded to destroy all the male children of the Hebrews. "But the midwives feared God and did not as the king of Egypt commanded, but saved the male children alive... .. Therefore, [because they feared God rather than man,] God dealt well with the midwives." Their defence before the king when reproved for their course is another matter. God did not "dealwell" with them as a reward for what they told the king, but for their good works in saving the children alive.

But how does the infidel know that what they told the king was false? It still remains to be proven that they were guilty of falsehood at all. Indeed, it is more than likely in the light of history and physiology that the midwives told the truth in respect to the hard-working daughters of Israel. For a reply to 1 Kings 22: 21–22, see the harmony of Prop. 20.

26. Hatred to the Edomite sanctioned.—"He [Amaziah] slew of Edom, in the valley of Salt, ten thousand....... And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord." 2 Kings 14: 7, 3.

Hatred to the Edomite forbidden.—"Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite for he is thy brother."—Deut. 22: 7.

Prop. 26 is certainly the most bare-faced and dishonest misrepresentation that we have ever seen. In this instance the infidel is obliged to quote the Bible backwards, skipping four verses at a time, in order to prove his position.

It is evident that he has a very difficult case on hand this time. He quotes 2 Kings 14: 7, "He slew of Edom, in the valley of Salt, ten thousand," and then skips backward four verses, where the account of the king's reign begins, and quotes what was said of that monarch while he was innocent of any man's blood; viz., that "He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord." Thus every principle of truth and honer, every sentiment of candor and fairness is sacrificed to prove that a God of justice has sanctioned crime. We can use no language sufficiently strong, in condemning such palpable dishonesty.

"The Bible Triumphant," by Mrs. H. V. Reed.

"THIS GENERATION."

"Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled."—Matt. 24: 34.

I wish to say a few words on this very important and interesting passage of Scriptue. The common method of interpretation given it by our people generally, has seemed to me a labored and far-fetched explanation, from the fact that the word "all" in the text seems to include the whole list of signs or events mentioned from ver. 5 to 31, and no one generation could possibly see all of those signs strewn as they have been along the track of time from before the destruction of Jerusalem down to the present day.

Within the last few days I have had an opportunity of examining this passage (and also Mark 13: 30, and Luke 21: 32) in the Emphatic Diaglott and Parkhurst's Greek Lexicon. I find that the word "fulfilled" in Matt. 24: 34, and Luke 21: 32, and the words "be done" in Mark 13: 30, come from the Greek word genetai, which according to Parkhurst signifies a beginning, a commencement; the act of filling up, etc.; while the word "fulfilled" found in Luke 21: 22, 24, and other places, comes from the Greek words plesthenai and plerothasi, which Parkhurst says mean completeness; fully finished, etc. I find that Matt. 24: 24, Mark 13: 30, and Luke 21: 32 are the only places in the New Testament where the word "fulfilled" is translated from genetai, so that a correct rendering or idea of our Savior's language on this occasion would be something like this: "Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till all these things begin to be." This makes harmony in the passage, as history proves. That generation did not pass till some of the events or signs prophesied by our Savior did take place, which would prove to them the truth of his prophecy, and as each succeeding generation from that time down to the present has seen some of those signs, there has been evidence to each of the truth of the predictions, and thus enabled the truth-loving and sign-observing people of every age to act in accordance with the injunction of our Savior, recorded in Luke 21: 28; "And when these things begin to come to pass, THEN look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."

I hope those who understand the Greek, and who have an interest in these things, will give this subject a thorough investigation, and see if the above interpretation is the correct one; and will let the result of their researches be known through the Voice and Crisis.

Yours in search of light and truth,
E. K. SMITH, in Voice.

A SINGLE PRAYER.—John Howe once observed two men in a violent passion. Their mutual cursing shocked his religious sensibilities. He looked at them, raised his hat, and said in a solemn voice:

"I pray God to bless you both!"

This prayer so impressed the quarrelsome men that they ceased their strife, and thanked Mr. Howe for his supplication.

SATAN'S COUNTERFEITS.

Satan has been making efforts through the entire history of man to introduce his false doctrines. He makes his counterfeits as near like the genuine as possible; and the careless observer may not see the difference. He has two noted counterfeit systems of religion, Paganism and Papacy; and has now introduced his third, which is Spiritualism. The first embraced the great mass of mankind before the first coming of Christ. He then modified and remodeled Paganism over into Papacy, and made that the leading religion for centuries; but for the last three hundred years the Papal system has been waning, until its power has dwindled to very small proportions. The thunders of the Vatican produce no more alarm in the world now than the roaring of a distant cannon. Satan, seeing this state of things, has rallied his forces again in a new form, in the system of Spiritualism; which is only a modified phase of Paganism and Catholicism. It is more properly a revival of the doctrines taught and believed by the heathen nations; and the chief foundation stone of the three systems is a belief in the immortality of the soul.

There are many modifications of these three great systems; such as Mohammedanism, Shakerism, Swedenborgianism, Mormonism, etc., etc., all of which help to lead men away from the narrow path. They are among Satan's counterfeits. In Spiritualism, we have them all combined; for the spirits teach that they are all right. With them, every thing is right that helps destroy pure christianity and the doctrine of the Bible. If they could only find positive proof in the Scriptures that man is immortal, they would not be so willing to throw them away; but when shown that they are wholly opposed to the doctrine that man is naturally immortal, they are ready to say the Bible is only the expression of "the opinion of a few ignorant Jews," and is unworthy of the confidence of the people in this enlightened age. In our discussions with Spiritualists, they boldly assume such positions, and ridicule the Bible, its writers and great Author.

It may be truly said that all the devil's counterfeit doctrines have been manufactured out of his great lie to Adam and Eve; and it is time the whole thing was fully exposed. The coming conflict between truth and error, Christ and Belial, will be something more than mere amusement. It will be no boy's play.

MATERIALISM.

Professor T. H. Huxley, Prof. of Natural History at Oxford University, has written an able article "On the Physical Basis of Life," in which he says:—"Matter and life are inseparably connected." This statement we believe to be strictly true; and there are no known exceptions. Where there is no matter, no organism, there can be no life. To suppose a living being without a material form, is to suppose what cannot be proved. The idea of having life without a personal organism is to us an absurdity. We have no faith in such wild, shadowy theories; and think the time has come when they should be exposed and rejected as vagaries unworthy of confidence and support.

The Professor goes on to say: "No very abstruse argumentation is needed . . . to prove that the powers, or faculties, of all kinds of living matter, diverse as they may be in degree, are substantially similar in kind." We are glad to learn that able men are beginning to see that man is just what the Bible says he is: a being made "of the dust of the ground," and that he ceases to be a living person when his physical organism is destroyed. It is of no use to try to support popular theology in its assumption that man is immortal and cannot die. The theory is of Pagan origin, and unsustained by a single passage of Scripture, or physiological fact. The whole system, that teaches the natural immortality of man, is but a system of fabulous assumptions, and should be rejected by all the true followers of Jesus; and then they are prepared in the strength of the Lord, to stand boldly against the devil's religion—Spiritualism.

Let those men who see the light, put it on a candlestick, that it may shine out before the people. It is time to speak boldly, yet with meekness. The truth is needed on this subject more than ever. We may be charged with advocating "gross and brutal materialism," as says Professor Huxley; but suppose we are. Shall we hide the truth to save a good name? Shall we seek the applause of the supporters of popular error? Will it please the Lord to have us pursue such a course? Shall we who are looking for the coming of Jesus be guilty of such cowardice? The truths, for the belief of which we are called "Materialists," "infidels," etc., are of superior importance, and should be scattered everywhere. Let none be ashamed of Jesus or his words. Speak, and speak boldly.

Near the close of Professor Huxley's able lecture "On the Physical Basis of Life," after showing that life and consciousness are but the result of material organization, he says:—"The consciousness of this great truth weighs like a nightmare, I believe, upon many of the best minds of these days. They watch what they conceive to be the progress of materialism, in such fear and powerless anger as a savage feels, when, during an eclipse, the great shadow creeps over the face of the sun. . . . They are alarmed lest man's moral nature be debased by the increase of his wisdom."

Of course, this is to be expected. It has ever been thus, when any truth, long buried beneath fabulous rubbish, has been again brought to light, and defended. It has ever been the policy of Satan to make error popular, especially that which he taught Adam and Eve—"Ye shall not surely die"; and to make the opposing truth unpopular, and thus keep men from its embrace and defense. Let us be willing to bear all the reproach, scorn and contempt, that can be heaped upon us, without a murmur; and even glory in the cross. Be willing to be anything, for the sake of pleasing Jesus, and being sanctified through the truth.

PRESS THE BATTLE.

In view of our nearness to the great day of the Lord, those who are looking for his coming should be a model people in all things; and yet we fear that some are quite behind others who do not see as much light. We are glad to see that reforms in many things are being made by the followers of Jesus. The following, which we clipped from the Buffalo Express, May 24th, is an item of interest to all who know the evils arising from the use of tobacco:

"The African Methodist Episcopal Zion Conference, comprising about forty clergymen, has been in session at Newburg for seven days, and will adjourn to-day. Among other business, the following has been adopted: 'That no person be admitted into this Conference, either on trial or into full connection, who habitually uses tobacco in any form.'"

We know many do not yet see the bad influence arising from a ministerial use of tobacco. When we have been showing the evil effects of tobacco upon the system, the filthiness of the habit, and that temperance and christianity require the followers of Jesus to quit its use as certainly as they do gin and whiskey; it is mortifying and discouraging to be met when one comes down from the sacred desk, by the remark from a tobacco user,—"The minister who preached here last Sabbath used it." If such ministers realized the influence they were exerting, we feel sure they would never use it again. Where we ask sinners to break off from their sins, and leave all their bad habits, ought not the preacher to set an example?

WORLDLY DISPLAY.

The most active spirit manifested in the majority of the churches at the present day seems to be an earnest desire to make a display of fine houses, organs, carpets, and other adornments, so as to excel their neighbors. The avowed object is to draw in the people. This may be accomplished to a certain extent; but only convinces them more and more that such christianity is no better than worldliness. It is calculated to destroy all confidence in the religion of Jesus, if they suppose what they see in fashionable places of religious worship is a fair sample of it. All such display, as is now so common, is opposed to the Spirit of Christ, and a pure christianity. It is well calculated to neutralize its power, and bring it into reproach. This is Satan's plan. He deceives professors of religion by persuading them that they will have more influence over unconverted men, if they will make a worldly display, and thus attract them to their meetings. This is just what destroys their confidence, and tends to make them infidels, instead of christians. One church does it because another does, fearing it will lose its influence if it does not keep up with the spirit of the times. This is a fatal snare of the enemy. There is nothing that makes the christian religion so attractive and lovely as to see it lived out in all its purity.

The following from a corrrespondent of the American Baptist, gives a true view of the case.

"The great rush of churches of all denominations, with perhaps some few exceptions, is to make a great worldly display; something that shall attract the attention of the pleasure-loving, and pleasure seeking, the giddy, thoughtless, prayerless people of the world. I have been over fifty years a watchman on the walls of Zion, and I have never before seen anything like the present rush for splendid houses of worship."

AFFAIRS IN SPAIN.

The revolution in Spain has resulted in crushing the Catholic interest, and in opening the door for any system the people may choose to adopt. The following from the Boston Daily Advertiser, May 8th, shows the aspect of things in Spain:—

"It was a pregnant saying of Hobbes, that 'the Papacy is but the ghost of the dead Roman Empire, sitting crowned upon the grave thereof.' The extraordinary revolt of the Spanish mind against leading papal ideas sadly troubles the peace of the occupant of the Vatican. The great speech of Signor Castelar in the Cortes is being circulated through the length and breadth of the Peninsular, and is greedily read by the people. Alluding to persecution,—

'He said that the assertion that the church did not kill the heretics, but the civil power did, was equivalent to the assassin saying he did not kill his victim, but his dagger did. The Inquisition had been the dagger of the church. Senor Manterola says I have never been in Rome. Yes, I have. I have visited its ruins; I have contemplated its three hundred domes; I have been present at the ceremonies of the Holy Week; I have admired the gigantic Sibyls of Michael Angelo which seem to launch eternal maledictions. I have seen the sun penetrate into the basilica of St. Peter's. I have sought in those ashes an atom of religious faith,—I have only encountered deceit and doubt. Yes, I have been in Rome, and I have seen in the 'Sala Regia,' painted by Bassari, a fresco of the emissaries of the King of France who sent to the Pope the head of Coligny. I have seen the apotheosis of the great ecclesiastical glories of the executioners,—the assassins of the night of St. Bartholomew.'

The above speech, when delivered, electrified the House to such an extent that when Signor Castelar resumed his seat, almost the whole of the deputies on both sides crowded round him, embracing him, patting him, and even kissing him. The excitement spread all over the country, and awoke an echo from all quarters. Congratulations and felicitations were sent to him from every part of the kingdom by telegraph. Had Mr. Buckle lived to see this, he would have reconsidered his estimate of the Spanish people."

WHO WILL BE SAVED?

BRO. GRANT:—Do you believe all christians will be saved, regardless of denominations?" A CONVERT.

We answer yes, without a doubt. All christians belong to the Lord, wherever they are found. By christian we mean something more than merely a professor of religion, who may be a member of the church, yet destitute of the Spirit of Christ. He is one who truly loves Jesus and his word. Such may be found in the various evangelical denominations, and will be saved without regard to the denomination to which they belonged. A person will not be saved because he was Baptist, Methodist, Congregationalists, or Adventist, but because he was a christian.

WHY NOT SPEAK?

It is said that the spirit can talk when out of the body. If so, why does not the spirit talk when a man is knocked down? Why does it not tell the people who gather about the prostrate man, the cause of his condition, and tell who the robber was that knocked him down? Why does that spirit remain so silent when the man so much needs its help? Why is it so ignorant of all that took place after he received the blow? Who can tell?

For the World's Crisis.

IN MEMORY.

Died in Concord, N. H., May 9th, 1869, of organic heart disease, my dear wife, ALMEDA G., aged fifty-six years.

God in great mercy gave me, as the companion of my life, to enjoy my prosperity and endure my adversity, a noble-hearted, christian woman, the greatest earthly blessing that mortal man can enjoy. She was the choice of my youth, and none other could I choose; for she was the dearest object to me that my eye ever beheld, and her voice the sweetest that ever whispered love and friendship in my ear. Our hearts were firmly bound together by the golden chain of divinely appointed love, which never broke or loosened for a moment amid the dashing, surging waves of mortal confusion and strife, during a period of thirty-four years. But when the last fearful tempest of life came, it brought a wave surpassing all others, which rolled its dark waters of death around us, and swept her from my arms, quickly carrying her where my eye can no longer see her, or my ear hear her voice; but the golden chord, still unbroken by the strange work of the tragical scene, dragged my bleeding heart down with her, where it still lingers; and as solitude throws its silent drapery around me, it throbs heavily, but with mighty throes of expectant joy, as sweet hope whispers, "Thy dear Almeda shall live again."

We gave our hearts to God in a covenant of peace at the same time, in the same meeting, when we were about sixteen years of age. We have been perfectly united in believing and advocating the great truths of Christ's speedy coming, and the glorious resurrection of the dead, for about thirty years. When our children were in our arms, domestic circumstances trying, our friends few and scattered and our foes strong and defiant, scoffing at our hope, and ridiculing our position, she never retreated from the battle. But when the Macedonian cry was heard, "Come over and help us," she would always say, "Go, preach the gospel, and I will do the best I can at home."

In her last illness I inquired whether she still had a desire to live, to which she replied, "The one object for which I still wish to live is to assist you in doing the great work God has given you to perform in these last days." But her work is done, and I am left alone, as a dove without its mate, to labor still for Christ, and save if possible some of the perishing for whom he died.

The discourse of Bro. Ross on the funeral occasion, was comforting and instructive. Bro. Grant came seventy miles to speak to us words of consolation in the trying hour of deep affliction. God bless them.

In my bereavement I have received many letters of condolence and christian sympathy from brethren far and near, for which I am very grateful. J. COUCH.

CHURCH FAIRS.

Fairs are a hindrance to revivals of religion. A revival includes the quickening of saints, the reclaiming of the backslidden, and the salvation of sinners. All christians believe in these spiritual refreshings, and pray for them in private and in public, and warn and exhort the people to this end.

But how long will one of these spiritual visitations continue when a fair is in preparation?

Experience and observation dictate that the latter is about sure to eat out the former. The truth is, there is no affinity between a church fair and a revival of religion. If the one obtains, the other must give place. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." If minor interests absorb all our time and drink up the fountain of religious thought, the altar fires must go out. If we convert our places of worship into gambling-houses, and our altars into places of traffic, and thus inaugurate a state of things which is in direct opposition to the spirit and genius of christianity, how can we expect prosperity? O for a pentecostal fire to consume this "wood, hay, and stubble!" Ye who long to see the churches of this land brought back to a higher and holier life, I pray you that ye besiege the mercy-seat, and labor, too, for a soul-humbling, church-purifying revival religion, ere the spiritual temple of God shall tumble into a shattered and disgraceful wreck.

Answer, ye who are disposed to be true to your own sense of duty, if, after having attended a fair, you have not felt more or less misgivings and doubts with regard to the propriety of such gatherings? And when you have urged the plea that these occasions are intended to aid the financial interests of the church, and that they are regarded with favor by the generality of professed christians, and even by ministers of the gospel, has not conscience rung her bell of warning and admonition? When you have gone with "the multitude that do evil," has not conscience urged the question, "Are you doing right?" When you have gone to the Lord's table, remembered your covenant obligations, tried to pray and exhort sinners to repentance, have you not felt condemned? Are you sure that you are doing as a christian should do? Would you be willing to go from the fair-room to the Judgment?

These are solemn questions. As you must appear before God in the day of final reckoning to account for the "deeds done in the body," answer now if conscience does not condemn you when you let yourself down from your high and holy profession to join the giddy throng in the amusements and follies of the world?—Zion's Herald.

PIUS IX. AND HIS PLENARY INDULGENCE.

It is well known no Roman Pontiff since St. Peter has reigned for twenty-five years, and either from this circumstance or from some traditional prophecy, superstitious forebodings have long been attached to the idea of this limitation being passed. Pius IX. is now in the 23d year of his Pontificate, and as his health is good and he is not yet an extremely old man, there is reason to believe that he will live to put this superstition to the test. His extreme popularity among the faithful few of the church has done much to dissipate the fear with which his rapid approach to the ominous limitation might otherwise be regarded; and it was observed that the general tone of the addresses and congratulations offered to his Holiness on the late occasion of his sacerdotal jubilee upon the 50th anniversary of his induction into the priesthood, was that of earnest wish on every side for the prolongation for many years of his life and reign. The Correspondence de Rome, in speaking of this manifestation of feeling, employs the following curious language:

"Pius IX. has grandeurs and fortunes, mingled with tribulations and adversities, such as history never presents as having been accumulated on any other royal head. From all parts, cries and supplications are raised toward heaven to retain him in life. The souvenir of a purely personal anniversary like that of his first mass, becomes a universal event, and excites unheard of manifestations. This is a holy violence which the world does to God! The world wants Pius IX. It wants that royal figure which becomes the salvation of royalties, and which alone, among all, struggles without yielding against the unchained passions of evil. God, we hope, will let fall on his glorious vicar these words—'videbis annas Petri.'"

Although no Pope has yet lived to the years of Peter in the Episcopate, yet thirteen Popes, like Pius IX, have lived to celebrate the 50th anniversary of their first mass.—These were Gregory XII, who died in 1409, aged 92; John XXII, who died in 1415, aged 81; Paul III, who died in 1549, aged 82; Paul IV, 1555, aged 79; Innocent X, 1655, aged 82; Clement X, 1676, aged 86; Innocent XII, 1700, aged 86; Benedict XIII, 1789, aged 86; Clement XII, 1740, aged 78; Benedict XIV, 1758, aged 83; Pius VI, Pius VII, and Gregory XVI. Pius IX. on the 11th of last month, issued an apostolic letter, which will soon be read in all the Roman Catholic churches of this country. It announces that a plenary indulgence shall be "granted to all Christians" on the occasion of the approaching General Council at Rome. The Pope, in this letter, requires the devout prayers of all the faithful to be united to his own in order to obtain from heaven divine illuminations, "with which we may, in this council, establish all those things which especially regard the common salvation of all Christian people, and the utility, greater glory, happiness and peace of the church." For this purpose he announces "to the whole Catholic world" the indulgence in form of Jubilee. "Through the mercy of God Almighty," says he, "and supported by the authority of his blessed apostles Peter and Paul, by that power of binding and loosing which the Lord has granted to us, although unworthy, we mercifully grant most ample indulgence and remission of their sins, as granted in the Jubilee years," to those who shall first have performed certain devotional exercises, fasted for three days, confessed their sins, received the sacrament of the Eucharist and given alms to the poor. Provision is made for the modes in which the indulgence is to be obtained by travelers by land or sea, by regulars of both sexes, by those living in convents, and by all prisoners, slaves, or infirm folk, to whom the performance of the required works would be impossible. To avoid misapprehension, it may be well to add that the "Indulgence" of the Roman Church is simply a remission of the temporal penalties and penances for sin; and that no one can obtain it until he has first made what is called "a good confession," obtained the absolution of his confessor and received the sacrament of the Eucharist; neither of which latter things can be done unless the confessor be satisfied with the genuine and hearty repentance of the penitent, and until the latter has done what the confessor enjoins upon him as works of reparation for evil done to others and of penance for sins done against God.—Journal.

SECRET MOVEMENT AGAINST TURKEY.—Everything seems to indicate the speedy culmination of important events in the east. The following significant paragraph is from the Boston Journal:

A New York journal sasy, it is a fact, though the particulars are not yet all ripe for the public eye, that a secret organization, composed of Greeks, Russians, Germans, Frenchmen, and others, including Hebrews, has recently been formed in that city, whose avowed object is to unite with any power that may make war against Turky to drive her back to her Mohammedan home. "The Grand Army of Palestine," as the organization is pleased to call itself, will insist upon clearing Asia Minor as well as Southern Europe of the hated Turk.—Ex.

LETTER FROM FLORIDA.

BRO. GRANT:—We had a glorious meeting yesterday at our new church in the neighborhood known as Suwannee Shoals, ten miles north of Lake City. Bro. P. A. Smith gave us an excellent sermon on baptism and its object in the forenoon, which I am sure carried the conviction to every heart of those who heard, that it is absolutely necessary to secure eternal life to be buried with Christ in baptism.

In the afternoon we held a covenant-meeting, and transacted much important business; and as soon as the covenant-meeting closed, Eld. Smith administered the Lord's Supper, the manifestations of which were truly encouraging to all true believers. Elder Smith preaches to-morrow and next day near Blount's Ferry, on the Suwannee river, about thirty miles north of Lake City; which will close his services in Florida, until he visits his family in Rochester, N. Y.

I did not mention above that six members were added to the church yesterday, a number of whom have been prominent members of the Methodist church, to whom we cordially ascribe the most honest motives in thus accepting the unmistakable plan of salvation, and immortality brought to light through the preaching of the gospel of the Son of man. The result of a discussion held about three weeks ago by Eld. Smith and a minister of the primitive or "hard-shell Baptist" faith, five miles north of Lake City, has given an impetus to our faith in this section of country.

Our opponent gave notice that he would give his opinion on our faith on the fourth Sunday in April, and Elder Smith got Elder Green to fill an appointment, so he could be present. Opponent commenced a quarter to eleven o'clock, and stood until one P. M. Eld. S. commenced at 3 P. M., and was not permitted to discuss long on account of a rain-cloud that came up. They discussed out of doors, the church being too small to seat the people.

Opponent first labored hard to get up sympathy on his part, and then appealed to the worst passions of men to get up prejudice against Eld. S., discussing or commenting on the late war and oppressive laws passed since; then declared that we founded our faith on "Millerism" and Universalism, and asserted many other things not founded in facts; all of which went like chaff before the wind when Eld. S. took the stand. It was unmistakably shown by Eld. S. that to assert a thing without proof amounted to just nothing at all.

Eld. Smith is slowly recovering from a severe attack of cold, but is zealous and energetic in the cause; and is emphatically the right man in the right place. Your Bro. in hope of eternal life, W. A. SHEFFIELD.

WHO IS RIGHT?

Every man who gives attention to the writings and sayings of men on subjects pertaining to the life which is yet to come, finds this question comes up: Who is right? It is admitted that all wish to be right. But because there is so much difference in the explanation of Scripture, it is a difficult thing while looking at their various opinions to avoid the question.

There is one question lying at the bottom which, if rightly answered, opens a clear door for the answer of almost every other question touching the great question, What shall be the life to come? That question is, What is man now? Now if we suppose because he became a living soul the element that was breathed into his nostrils was purely spiritual, and what constituted the man in fact, then from that stand-point it would be very proper and I suppose logical to argue the nature of the soul from the great capabilities of the mind (or soul, as they say), which is the common course of those who maintain it to be immortal. But if we first see the definition according to Paul in 1 Cor. 15: 45, 46, then the argument must be framed according to it. Now who is right? Gen. 2: 7, "And man became a living soul." 1 Cor. 15: 45, "And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul. Howbeit that which was first was not spiritual, but natural." Who is right?

Natural, living soul.—Paul.

Immortal soul; cannot die.—Socrates, Plato, Pope, Matteson, and nearly all Protestants at the present day. Who is right?

I answer: Moses, Abraham, Job, David, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and all the prophets; Paul, and all the apostles; all agreeing with the exhibition of the forerunner, who is the life-giver. D. B. ROGERS.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The following items gleaned from the columns of our exchanges speak in no uncertain tone, and assure us that we live in "the last days" of the prophetic word:

"We have edited nearly one-fourth of a century, and we are impressed with the fact that the present period is one of more unrest and disquiet religiously—a period in which the religious mind of all denominations is more unsettled and inquiring, more anxious and solicitous—than ever before within our knowledge."—Baptist.

"Evidently the preached word has not the the power over sinners now it was intended to have. And there is fault somewhere. The praying pew will give us more strength in the pulpit. A working laity will make a working ministry. Let both be together and they will react each upon the other, and the two upon the world, until the complaint is heard again, "They have turned it upside down!" Once it was manifest that wherever the preacher went power went with him. Alas! it is too often true that weakness abides with him now."—Freeman.—Ex.

THE BEST PEOPLE.

Of all classes of people in the world, christians looking for Christ's personal return from heaven to consummate their hope should be the very best. God's demands, their own ultimate salvation, and the interests of a sin-ruined world, positively require this.

1. They should be the most devoted.

All their God-given powers, whether of body or mind, ought to be absorbed in their high and holy calling; "for they are the pillar and ground of the truth"; and truth supported by the "royal law"—love to God and man, is the only element that sanctifies and redeems a world morally contaminated.

2. They should be the most godly.

Their daily deportment ought to be God-like. As God can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, neither should any member of his body suffer sin to reign over or dwell within them. "The pure in heart shall see God." As God is truly lovely in all his divine attributes, when properly understood, so should all his adopted members exemplify by their words and deeds this admirable catholic principle.

3. They should be the most patient.

"Be patient toward all men," is a most important obligation from Him who first of all has set the example; "whose long-suffering," notwithstanding the multiplied provocations of a rebellious world, has been distinctly visible through all ages and dispensations. The present perilous and deplorable condition of the churches, nations, and society generally, and the unnumbered evils, errors and delusions arising from this condition, which try men's souls, call loudly upon all God's royal family for a faithful exhibition of this divine grace. "The trial of your faith worketh patience." "Let patience have her perfect work," although it may be tried with fire. God designs by these to mould and adorn a people for his own special glory and pleasure.

4. They should be the most earnest.

Earnestness should always be a distinguishing characteristic of every child of grace. God has most wisely displayed his earnestness in the salvation of a lost race, by an exhibition of his own infinite wisdom, and the employment of the best and most powerful agencies possible. The "Prince of peace," the "Holy Spirit," "holy angels," "holy men of old," inspired prophets and apostles, are his agents and co-laborers, and their work and influence so earnestly put forth have accomplished wonders among men. The world is rapidly degenerating in these last flickering moments of time; consequently every child of hope should be an earnest Christian. "Be diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," is God's revealed arrangement.

5. They should be the most watchful.

The church of God's choice has fallen upon strange times, and the enemy of all good is more than earnest and watchful in his deeds of darkness, to overwhelm the world in ruin. Knowing his time is short, he, together with his vast corps of distinguished agents, is whirling every thing into order as regards his fraternity, and every thing into disorder as regards the unity of the church of Christ, truth, righteousness, virtue, and the christian's hope, which yields such unspeakable consolation. Emphatically now is the time for zealous watchfulness on the part of every lover of God, of humanity, and of Christ's appearing. "What I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." "If thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief." We need to watch all the words of our mouths, all the desires of our hearts, and all the deeds of our bodies. We especially need to watch constantly against the multiform influences that beset every step of the christian's onward progress to the kingdom of God; influences hurled at the Lord's children by the devotees of pride, worldly pleasures, honors, friendship, etc. The hour of temptation seems to have come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the face of the whole earth. Who will stand the trying ordeal, and come through refined as gold is refined? God help us!

6. They should be the most prayerful.

God has imposed the obligation of prayer upon all his children, consequently it is duty to pray in faith and in the Holy Spirit. Prayer, when the children of God are fully resigned to his will, becomes a real satisfaction and pleasure. Those who pray the most, sincerely and truthfully, enjoy the most of God's presence and loving favor, and are the best prepared for the stern realities and duties of life. Those who pray the least enjoy the least of the genuine power of christianity, and are more subject to the manifold deceptions that are constantly preying upon the soul's eternal welfare. "Pray always,"—"pray without ceasing," is God's plan.

7. They should be the most intelligent.

The wisdom of this world is one thing, while the wisdom of God is quite another. "The wisdom of this world," Paul declares, "is foolishness," when compared with God's wisdom. The wisdom of this world has ever opposed the onward progress of the gospel of Christ; but God designs to overthrow it; he has raised a standard against it; and that standard is Christ, and the wisdom of God as revealed in him. Christ has not only become our Savior, but our "wisdom" and "power"; and, as the humble child of God has Christ formed within the hope of glory, he has a wisdom and power by which he can confound the wisdom of the wise as regards this world. So we exhort all, as did Paul, to "put on the whole armor of God, whereby we may be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." The Holy Scriptures are a fountain of intelligence from the throne of the Eternal, and when thoroughly studied, thoroughly furnish us with weapons that put to flight all the armies of the aliens, and qualify us for every good word and work.

Why should we be the best people in the world?

1. Because we are embraced in the "royal priesthood," the "holy nation," the "peculiar people," which "have been called out of darkness into his marvelous light."

2. Because we fondly cherish down deep in our hearts the all-absorbing and sanctifying hope of immortality and eternal life through Christ alone.

3. Because we look for the utter destruction of all the enemies of God, and a cleansed universe, where there will be no more curse.

4. Because we with ardent desires expect very soon to realize the completion of our faith, and the perfection of all our joys.

5. Because God has entrusted to our hand the last most solemn, important and glorious message known to man. God help us to be good, better, yea, the best.

"BRINGING IN SHEAVES."

This excellent work, from the pen of Bro. A. B. Earle, though only a few months since its first issue, has already its twelfth edition in press. The fact that its author has traveled very extensively as an evangelist throughout the Union and the Western Territories, thus gaining a wide-spread influence, explains somewhat the secret of its great success. This book presents some of the most stirring and valuable lessons, and gleanings from the author's experience in his work as a revivalist, and the sketches and incidents illustrative of varied experience are graphic and instructive, while here and there a characteristic sermon is given. The one on faith, from the text, "HAVE FAITH IN GOD," is very lucid in its teachings and incidental illustrations.

The opening chapter, "How can I best promote a Revival?" abounds with valuable suggestions. Having been for several years laboring in this specific work, aiding pastors and churches, as remarked, all over the States, and also at San Francisco, Oregon and California, he is eminently qualified to impart instruction on this topic. He begins right, when he points, as an example, to that memorable gathering in an upper chamber at Jerusalem, which precedes the pentecostal baptism, and prepared the hearts of those united, importunate supplicants to enter upon the work of soul-saving. A few paragraphs we will cite, illustrative of the author's style:

"Whoever would promote a revival of religion should begin with his own heart, and pray, confess, and believe, until his heart is subdued and melted by the Holy Spirit—his love to Christ glowing, fervid, burning—until he finds himself groaning over the lost condition of men, and like Jesus, being in an agony, prays more earnestly. Then, when his heart is in this state, let him get a few, if he cannot many, to join him in special prayer for the outpouring of the Spirit. Let that little company hold on in united, persistent prayer, 'nothing wavering,' until the windows of heaven are opened. The disciples at Jerusalem continued in prayer about ten days before they received the promised power from on high. It does not appear that the meeting, with so many ministers in attendance, attracted much attention until the disciples were fully anointed, and filled with the Spirit.

They could have accomplished but little had they preached and labored without this preparation; but as soon as it was received, the multitude were drawn to the place in great numbers, and were confounded when they saw the power that rested on those Galileans. A new power attended their preaching. This work commenced with these believers, and spread with great rapidity over the country. So it must be with all who would labor successfully in leading souls to Christ; they must tarry at Jesus' feet until they have power with God: then they will have power with men. The gift there received will be with them wherever they go, diffusing its sweet and holy influence, and God's work will be revived, and sinners converted. I have observed for nearly forty years past, that the secret of success in promoting revivals of religion is in having our own hearts filled with the Holy Spirit. It is not enough for those of us who preach, that our sermons be able, sound, and well-delivered or that we preach what are sometimes called revival sermons, and that we also visit and converse with men about their souls' interest. It is not enough that the church be aroused and go to work actively for a revival: all this can be done, and but few souls be saved. Nothing can be a substitute for real 'power from on high.' No amount of study or talent; no effort, however untiring, can take the place of the fullness of Christ's love. 'Not by might, nor by power (human), but by my Spirit, saith the Lord.' I have known ministers to preach, and their church to unite with them, day after day, for weeks together, for a revival, and yet very little to be accomplished. The failure was not because the Spirit was unwilling to work with them and bless their efforts; nor because a continued meeting is not of divine appointment, but because they had not the needed power with God. I am often invited to assist pastors and churches in a series of meetings, with a view of gathering in the multitudes who are unreached 'by the ordinary means of grace.' Important as it is to reach this class, I have never found any way of doing so, or of reaching the unconverted in the regular congregations, until Christians were filled with the Spirit, and humbled in the dust in agonizing prayer.

Let me say, then, to pastors and to the churches: If you believe the glory of God demands a revival in your midst, and you desire to be instrumental in advancing the work and bringing sinners to the Savior; first see that your own hearts are thoroughly melted and subdued under a deep sense of the condition of lost men, and that you are filled with the Spirit and constrained by the love of Christ then get a few, if you cannot more, to meet with you, and pray with and for one another, until, like those who prayed with Peter and John, you are all filled with the Holy Spirit, and of faith; and as a result, 'much people was added unto the Lord.' Do not seek to produce an undue excitement in the community, neither be afraid of as much interest as was manifest among the people on the day of Pentecost. In your prayer-meetings, have a definite object in view. If you desire an immediate outpouring of the Spirit, ask God for that; if the fulness of his love in your hearts, let that be the burden of your prayer: if the conversion of a friend, agonize for that; whatever you desire, look for it at once. If you would have a great blessing, ask for it at once in Jesus' name. Jesus is the pledge of all that infinite love can bestow, or that we can receive. 'How shall he not with him also freely give us all things.'

Let me, then, again say to all Christians who desire and labor for the salvation of souls: first be right yourself; spend days and nights, if necessary, in humiliation, fasting and prayer, until the Spirit comes down upon you, and you feel that you have power with God: then you will have power with men in leading them to Christ."

We did not design to quote so largely, but these remarks are so truthful, and so weighty, we deemed them worthy of impressing on the attention of the thousands who read this paper. The secret of Mr. Earle's success has been this power with God; and others who, like him, have seen multitudes led through their labors to Christ, have also first learned this secret. A portrait of this earnest, christian evangelist embellishes the volume, which is got up in a very nice and attractive style by the publisher, James H. Earle, 96 Washington St., Boston. pp. 383. Price low at $1.50.

☞ It is very well to say, remarks the N. Y. Citizen, that these open expressions of views in favor of imperialism in this country are mere ephemeral exhalations of so much vapor. But when a journal like the Round Table gravely declares that "we are drifting to imperialism," and when a representative Republican paper like the Cincinnati Commercial talks about the coming centralization which is to absorb and govern the whole continent, and make this city "what London is to Great Britain, and St. Petersburgh to an empire only less extensive than ours," we may well wake up to what seems near at hand.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. GEORGE MARSH writes from Meriden, Ct.:—"Bro. Grant—I esteem your paper very highly. . . The preachers in this place preach what they conceive to be 'the truth'; but some how or other some of it sadly conflicts with God's word, and a serious cutting and trimming operation has to be gone through with, in order to make it suit the theory. How precious in the sight of God must be that child-like faith which believes, because the great I AM says so. A religion which has for its author an infinite and eternal being like 'our God,' must necessarily contain that which a finite mind cannot grasp, and so must be received with the faith indicated above.

In 1 Cor. 15: 47, 48, the apostle has under consideration 'the resurrection of the dead.' Thus he explains: 'The first man [Adam] is of the earth, earthy; the second man [Jesus Christ] is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy [in the resurrection of the dead], such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly [in the resurrection of the dead], such are they also that are heavenly.' Is it not then declared that those who are earthly, sensual, devilish, when Christ comes will be raised with bodies just like Adam's? If so, why not believe it?"

BRO. J. S. KNIGHT writes, from Mount Morris, Ill.:—"I beg once more to thank you for the christian courtesy and generosity which has continued to me the reading of the Crisis. May it and you be guided in all the ways of truth and holiness; and no evil be permitted to harm the deserved influence you would exert for Jesus. My own labors in the dear Master's vineyard call me into many parts of the land. Last year I had joyful work in Georgia; more lately in Canada; and now, on our way to Kansas, we find an open door for the gospel, and many willing ears. Calling no man master on earth, and going forth from day to day to tell of God's love in Jesus, and 'taking nothing of the Gentiles,' we can up to this moment say, we have not wanted for 'any good thing.' Our food and raiment are made as secure as if we took up collections in every place (which we never do), or preached sermons on hire, at so many dollars apiece, promised or implied. May the truth, power and presence of the Spirit continue to be with you; and in these may we all work and wait."

SR. S. M. Vandamark writes:—"I rejoice in the goodness of God to me and my family, and my mind is often led to look forward to the glorious resurrection of the dead, when those I have loved so dearly here shall come again from the land of the enemy, never more to part. I praise the Lord that I have been brought to understand the word of God in its true light; and by his grace I mean to have my lamp trimmed and burning, with oil in my vessel, with my lamp. I want an abundant entrance into that glorious kingdom. Pray for me, that I may be faithful to the end, and have the wedding garment on, and go through the pearly gates into that beautiful city, and eat of the tree of life, never more to sin."

SR. A. WHEELOCK writes:—"My dear sisters—Almost a year has passed away since we met on the camp-ground at Springfield, and I have not seen but one letter addressed to our 'Band'; but I trust you are all trying to gain a home in the kingdom. Let us gird on our armor anew, and fight for our King. In three months more, if the Lord will, we hope to meet the dear ones again on the old camp-ground; and let us get ready now to go into camp. Let us begin to pray for the success of our meeting, that it may be the best we ever had. Let us come up there to work for the Lord."

CUMMINGS. Died in Surry, N. H., May 25th, Hannah Loretta, wife of Nelson T. Cummings, aged thirty-five years, nine months.

Her sufferings were intense for the last five months. Discourse by the writer at the funeral from Eccl. 9: 10, by request of the bereaved husband. May he find great comfort and peace in the hope of life and immortality at the resurrection of the just. JEHIEL CLAFLIN.

FRENCH. Died in Hopkinton, N. H., March 23d, of consumption, Mrs. Sarah E. French, aged thirty-one years.

She appeared to be entirely resigned to the divine will, and though tenderly loving her husband and child, cheerfully left them in the hand of God. Her humility, self-abasement, and love to God and souls were striking, and her joy in the Lord surpassing. The promises of the word of God were as food to her soul, and her faithfulness to the impenitent seemed to be in proportion to her own high spiritual enjoyment. Her end was peace.

Cable News.

LONDON, May 25. The Times of this morning, in an editorial on the French election, says the chief cities repudiate the idea of an empire, and a revival of activity will result from the verdict which condemns personal government. The restoration of a Parliamentary Government may conciliate the existing feeling. By such means can the Emperor expect to mitigate an opposition which has not yet become anti-dynastic.

It is definitely ascertained that the rumor of an alliance of France, England and Spain against the United States is without any foundation.

May 27. The Alabama claims still form the great theme of conversation and newspaper comment.

CORK, May 25. Parties have been discovered here secretly drilling with arms at night, and three men have been arrested.

FLORENCE May 26. Fourteen arrests have been made at Leghorn in connection with the attempted assassination of Col. Grenville. It has been ascertained that political animosity, growing out of the conduct of Col. Grenville at the siege of Rome in 1849, was the cause of the assault.

MADRID, May 26. The Cortes is now debating the clauses in the Constitution which refer to Colonies. Senor Castellar, alluding to Cuba, said if Spain had followed the example of England in her treatment of Canada, by granting liberties which the Colonies now claim for themselves, the outbreak in Cuba would have been prevented.

Marshal Serrano replied that Captain General Dulce granted the required liberties when he entered upon the government of Cuba, but party spirit blinded some of the inhabitants to the intentions of the home government. By the demonstration of physical force, the rebellion had been suppressed; but moral disorder was disappearing very slowly. When the normal state of the Island is restored, the home government, acting in conjunction with Deputies of Cuba, will suppress slavery and punish all persons engaged in the slave trade.

PARIS May 27. Hon. E. B. Washburne, U. S. Minister, was received by the Emperor to-day, and made a brief address, in which he assured the Emperor of the friendship entertained by the people and Government of the United States toward himself and the French nation.

Napoleon, in reply, expressed the utmost satisfaction at Mr. Washburne's assurances, and hoped that the present friendly relations between the two countries would long be maintained.

Mr. Washburne called on Prince Napoleon today, and met with a hearty welcome.

PARIS, May 28. Official papers say that the elections extinguish the old parties, and leave the liberal empire opposed only by a few revolutionary candidates.

MADRID, May 28. Serious disturbances have occurred to-day at Malaga and Seville, directed against the Provisional Government.

LISBON, May 29. Count D'Eu the General of the Allied forces, had arrived at Ascension, and was making preparations to attack the Paraguayans. The advance guard was within nine miles of Lopez's army.

PARIS, May 29. The official journal of the Empire denies that there is any foundation for the rumors that the French troops are to evacuate Rome.

Passing Events.

☞ Before August next, there will be about two hundred thousand Americans in Europe.

☞ Prince Louis de Bourbon, the disowned descendant of a line of throneless kings, has declared his allegiance to the United States.

☞ In his speech at Memphis the other day, O'Neill, the Fenian President, urged his hearers "to watch, wait, and keep their powder dry."

☞ It is stated that there are about thirty thousand persons at Copenhagen now waiting for transportation to the United States.

☞ According to accounts from St. Petersburg, the continued indisposition of the Emperor Alexander is beginning to cause uneasiness to his medical men.
